Bird Guy hums, before he thankfully turns his focus back to Aizawa, bracing his chin on his hand with some excitement in his grin and in his eyes. “Aw, how did you two meet? I can’t imagine you were really looking, since you have a ward assigned to you and everything. What was her name—Erumi? Era—”

“Eri,” Hitoshi corrects, and if ‘Shohei’ wouldn’t be this insulted, then ‘Shohei’ can go fuck himself.

“That’s a personal situation,” Aizawa brushes off gruffly, which seems to be his usual defense for a question he hasn’t thought out well enough to answer. It honestly works better than when he tries, even if it’s obvious. ‘Shohei.’

Aizawa fucking Shohei, like Hitoshi would want Aizawa’s name over Yamada’s.

“And your ward? Little Eri? I hope she’s not running around out here like a little snow bunny, dangerous enough for lost kittens,” Bird Guy says, winking at him and practically begging for a knife to the face, and if Hitoshi had that knife, he’d also have peace.

“She’s at UA, this trip would be ill-suited for her,” Aizawa lies stiffly, but it might be convincing. Hitoshi can’t tell, because he knows it’s lies. For some reason, it irritates him, even if he knows Aizawa needs to lie to keep Creepy Bird Guy from harassing Eri.

If Bird Guy picked Eri up and tried to fly away with her, Hitoshi would pluck and roast him. “Eh, that’s a little cold-hearted. You shouldn’t treat the kids differently just because one is temporary and the other is a real commitment, with the adoption and all.”

Hitoshi only feels a flash of anger coursing through him, before he’s standing and he barely has a reason for it. This Bird Guy is just fucking annoying, and how dare he think that Eri is the temporary one? “H-Shohei—”

“I’m going to piss into a hole, if you don’t mind,” Hitoshi grates out, the first reason for an escape that comes to mind, and he kicks his feet into his shoes because this is the first place he’s ever been that doesn’t even have a bathroom. Even Bug gave him a toilet inside his room, but here, there’s just an outhouse.

And even if it’s disgusting, it’s better than sitting down with Fuckbird and playing along with Aizawa’s stupid fucking lies.

*

Aizawa folds his hands, tries not to show that he nearly let everything fall to pieces in an emotionally charged moment that shouldn’t have felt anything like one, and sighs to act the part of a father dealing with a teenager who isn't a fan of a trip into the woods.

It's far easier than it should be, with Hitoshi making it far too easy. "So, you know he's got a tracker on him, right?"

Aizawa looks up, watching Hawks stare at him from the corner of his narrowed eyes, that grin dropping to a smirk. Like a predator that knows full well it's only been playing with its food until this point.

"It's in his ankle, right behind his achilles tendon. Something rattled the signal, which is why I'm out here. And if anyone asks, this is like the seventh time I've swatted your very naughty hands for taking him out without approval," Hawks drawls, leaning back with a put-upon sigh. "For future warning, Endeavor's gonna see you the next time, so I wouldn't have a next time. Seems like you two have some kinda beef."

Aizawa would love to throttle the number two hero in Japan right now, for leading him on like this, clearly for kicks, but the way this information was freely given gives him enough reason not to. Barely. "An interesting place for a tracker. I don't suppose it's wired to explode. That would definitely put an end to any escape attempt."

Hawks' smile is frozen, as though he didn't hear that at all. Perhaps he shouldn't have, but with neither a twitch of amusement nor argument to the contrary, that places Hawks' allegiances squarely where Aizawa would want them. It's probably true that The Commission has a way to cut off any attempt to run, by making sure that Hitoshi can't physically do that, and despite apparently working closely with them, Hawks doesn't approve of that drastic and cruel measure.

And it would be nice to trust that Aizawa knows anything about Hawks or his allegiances at this point, but Aizawa won't jump to conclusions and risk being fooled again. "I don't suppose it's news to my grandfather who you really are, if you're telling me something like this."

"Kid's a hero," his grandfather says gruffly around a chicken skewer, as though that's all that needs to be said on the subject. When Aizawa looks at him and tries to impress upon him that it's not, he huffs and drops his hands to the table. "Kid's been coming up to this mountain for years, since he was a snot nosed thing. Always staring too much--"

"It's a nice place to roost and unwind a bit, with great company!" Hawks argues, laughing afterwards. "Yeah, I've been poking around here for a few years, before I became a hero. Guess that makes me part of the family!"

Aizawa. Doesn't want to consider that. Even remotely possible. "And you haven't reported him for squatting in all these years."

"Of course not," Hawks says with a frown, waving his hand at the accusation. "Everyone should be free to pick their own life, and no one comes up here except for me. It doesn't hurt anyone, so why bother? Which makes me wonder... what brings you up to the mountains? With a lost little kitten, and a collar you didn't know about?"

It's a question, for a question in turn, prying for prying. It's a question Aizawa doesn't want to answer, and especially to Hawks.

"Probably something to do with that kerfuffle at UA, a couple nights ago. It wasn't reported, which, not surprising, knowing you," Hawks drawls, and Aizawa doesn't like that implication that Hawks knows him, even if evidence would supposedly suggest that he doesn't care. "A traitor at UA, bringing down the security Friday night. It's good that they were caught, arrested and all.

Shame about what happened after that.”

Aizawa doesn't know what happened after that, and he's aware that Hawks may be baiting him by being so vague, because he is probably aware Aizawa doesn't know. But the tension that snaps inside him draws out again, and Aizawa finds himself speaking before he can consider all of the outcomes. “We left Friday night, for Shinsou's safety. Since we couldn't determine the cause of the attack, it could have left our phones compromised. We've been in the dark since then.”

Hawks hums, folding his arms as his expression turns solemn, his wings fidgeting before they pull inward. His wings might be more honest than his face, but Aizawa doesn't know him well enough to trust either. “Damn, that's a shame. They were arrested, but attacked in transit. Critical condition, so they're not sure if sh- they're gonna make it. Might have been The League, silencing loose ends since they sang a pretty song according to all the new intel.”

‘She.’ Aizawa doesn't know anything at this point. Nezu didn't give him a name, but there were still students on that list of suspects. His own students. “Who was it?”

“Confidential, but I'm sure you'll know,” Hawks answers, in non-answers. At first. “Not exactly like they can hide it on the attendance sheet come tomorrow morning.”

One of his students.

One of his students, and while ‘she’ narrows it down, he won't bring himself to consider a single one of them, to recall a single name. Critical condition, one of his students is injured and near-death, and while he knows this was brought about because they were the traitor who leaked the location of the training camp, possibly USJ, definitely had a hand in compromising campus security that night-

He knows Shiori is involved too. He knows that he doesn't know Shiori at all because of that, and he knows Shiori could have forced their compliance in any manner of ways. Shiori is a powerful asset, one that he's probably never truly had.

He knows one of his students is in a hospital, near death after an attack he wasn't anywhere near to stop, and that they were probably forced into all of this. One of his students is a victim and one of his students needed him to see that for too long, and he didn't suspect a single one of them, even when Principal Nezu did.

“I need the name,” Aizawa growls, demands with both a mind to use his quirk to clip Hawks' wings and his capture scarf to make him stay. To answer him.

“Like I said, confidential,” Hawks answers, his own tone offering warning when he tilts his head, eyes narrowed in warning. Aizawa knows he can't underestimate Hawks due to his youth, his hero ranking speaks for itself, and Aizawa knows enough about Hawks to know it's warranted. And he's playing with fire enough so far, which Hawks reminds him of. “You've got bigger issues right now, like that kitten that's out in the snow.”

That's true, to a point. Aizawa has a greater responsibility to Hitoshi on paper than he does for his students, but choosing between them now isn't that simple. “He's probably avoiding you, given the impression so far.”

Hawks laughs, too fully, and it's almost disturbing how quickly he'll turn to that wide-grinned face. “Aw, he's just embarrassed, I'm sure. I'd hate to ditch out without making it up to him though. Think he'd appreciate a first class flight down the mountain to catch up with little Eri?”

Aizawa knew it was possible that all his cards had already been marked for Hawks before this point, before he ever opened his mouth to address him. But those still narrowed eyes carve him down to the core, and it's all the more chilling because he doesn't know where Hawks' cards even are. Aizawa is an underground hero, he purposefully operates under the radar, and he's sure more is known about him as fact than about Hawks.

"I'm sure you already know, but I'd tread carefully from now on, Eraserhead. Endeavor will be paying a visit next time, and he doesn't seem to appreciate the loose and easy way," Hawks says, in a way that implies there are no secrets between them. That seems to be only halfway true.

Hawks lifts his arms above his head, groaning as he stretches, his wingspan stretching out as much as it can as well, but his left wing is still too long as it's still folded when it brushes the wall. His gloved hand meets the table afterwards with finality, another grunt when he stands.

"Welp, sorry I can't stay so long to chat, Gramps! I'll stop by next week, but might be busy after that. I'll make sure to stock you up though, and let me know what you want for Christmas," Hawks says, beaming at Aizawa's grandfather too loosely, too casually, and the way the old man allows it is just unnerving to the core.

"Don't bother with that nonsense, never keep up with the days up here," Shoga grouses, waving a hand at Hawks, and when the pro hero taps his shoulder as a far too casual way of parting, Aizawa has far too many questions about the past nine years. Specifically, how this could have happened.

But given there's a 'lost kitten' Hawks is far too interested in, Aizawa follows him out the door wordlessly. And they don't have to look far, when Hitoshi is laying down in the snow, just staring at the sky, a bit awkward in his steadfast decision to avoid Hawks by not coming back to the shack.

Which doesn't go very well, as Hawks sprints the short distance to him to turn, landing backwards in the snow right above his ward with their heads nearly meeting, flashing a smile and a peace sign to the phone already held in his hand.

Hitoshi springs up as soon as he notices it, which may have been too late for the selfie, and it was a bit too quick for his ankle sprain as he loses his footing before he gains it and instead kneels in the snow. Hawks laughs as he shakes out his wings. "Hey, that turned out pretty nice! Add me on one of those social medias, and I'll have my team send it over to ya, as a memento and all."

Hitoshi glares at the outstretched hand offered to help him, and the cell phone turned to show him the picture. Aizawa doesn't know if Hawks somehow already knows how to push every single one of Hitoshi's buttons, given that the kid seems to hate having his picture taken even by Hizashi, but he doesn't appreciate it. "He doesn't have social media, given that he's under protection."

Hawks pulls his yellow tinted sunglasses out of one of his chest pockets, smiling at Aizawa while he puts them on. "Well, good thing for that."

Aizawa doesn't know if Hawks knows how to push every single one of Aizawa's buttons, with that slight, so small that he almost thinks he's making it up insinuation that Aizawa has failed to protect Hitoshi in every single other way than keeping him off of social media. But the sooner the number two hero takes off, the better.

Hitoshi seems to agree with that, as a hand he had been holding behind himself draws out and Aizawa only has a split second to worry about a knife.

Before he sees a snowball that Hawks merely tilted his head to dodge, and Aizawa barely does. "Haha! See ya around, kiddo!"

There's a single red feather left in the snow after Hawks takes off, gliding over the treeline but trying to gain altitude with each push of his wings. Aizawa watches as long as he's visible, sure that there's only terrible reasons why he seems to be heading towards the training camp at the base of the mountain, where Eri is.

Perhaps, it might be better to risk Hitoshi being uncomfortable around Mirio for a few hours longer than Aizawa intended, or vice versa, with that in mind.

Hitoshi growls under his breath when he pulls himself to stand, shaking his jacket and hoodie free from snow before he spots the feather, and intentionally steps on it. He looks up, as though Aizawa had remarked about that, which he purposefully wasn't going to. "Knew a guy who could hear things through his feathers, something about the vibrations from sounds. Not taking any chances with that creepy fuck."

"That's only a little paranoid," Aizawa remarks, because in this case the paranoia isn't at all undeserved. He's not sure if Hawks could do that, but if he could, Aizawa is sure that he would. "As fun as 'kitsunes' were, Hawks makes for a horrible tengu. The Loch Ness monster would have made this trip more fun for you, I'm sure."

Hitoshi stares at him, eyes narrowed in insult even if his lifted eyebrow seems to indicate that he's confused by whatever he's deemed to be insulted by. And Aizawa wonders if Hitoshi completely forgot about mentioning that interest in seeing the Loch Ness monster.

But Aizawa will take it as a teachable moment, instead of bringing any of that up. "Tengu are winged birdmen who live in the mountains, and train wanderers in secret forms of martial arts, when they're not spiriting women or children away. They're sacred teachers."

"They're assholes," Hitoshi decides, and Aizawa is once again reminded that Hitoshi's mood was doomed to be this sullen from the start, from how poorly this trip has gone, and what caused it. And his grandfather allowing him to drink last night has probably insured that the teenager is going to suffer the effects of that all day.

Which means that Aizawa might need to trust that Ms. Joke and the gathered hero students can take care of Eri, if Hawks decides to stop by like he nearly threatened to. "We should go inside and pack. We're leaving in a few hours."

Aizawa only takes a few steps before he hears that he's not followed, looking over his shoulder to see that Hitoshi was still sullenly standing there, his foot still on Hawks' feather, and his hands tucked into the front pocket of his hoodie. Which Aizawa noticed was crusted brown at the bottom edge, thankfully with what looked to be old blood.

"Hitoshi?"

"Shohei," Hitoshi spits instead, and Aizawa would truly prefer if absolutely everything about that could be forgotten, which is why he's sure his ward won't forget it at all. "I'm Aizawa Shohei, so I don't know who you're talking about. I have no idea who 'Hitoshi' or 'Shinsou' or-"

"Listen to your father, Shohei. It's cold out here," Aizawa answers with a wave of his hand, turning back to enter the shack with a bait that's quickly followed. Hitoshi seemed to be incensed about that name for some reason, but given that it would be boring to snip and argue with no one to hear or answer him out in the snow, of course he was going to follow Aizawa inside.

And though he seemed to pause for a moment when he opened his backpack and found Mocha, his stuffed cat inside, it seemed more likely that he was struggling to find a scathing response to it.

Eventually, he seems to recognize he can't fashion one, huffing as he continued to pack, setting the stuffed animal gently aside so it wouldn't be crushed under his laundry.

Aizawa makes it a point to remind him that they'll be leaving soon along with how much time remains, so Hitoshi won't have the excuse of being surprised by that.

He knows that he misses Hizashi and Eri too, and this miserable trip's end can't come sooner.

*

Absolutely. Every single part of this. Was stupid.

"It's a three hour hike, and you won't be able to make it with that ankle," Aizawa says, but he won't even give Hitoshi the dignity of looking at him when he says that, crouching down to put his shoes on and facing the wall the shoes are lined up against. After acting like the most redundant fucking clock for the past several hours, just telling Hitoshi what time it was like he had any idea without a phone or watch, Aizawa never fucking told him this.

"Give me the sleeping bag, and I'll beat you there," Hitoshi says, because it would be an absolutely blissful break from Aizawa if he could just hide inside the sleeping bag and throw himself down the mountain. Even better if he breaks his neck, but Hitoshi knows he's not that lucky.

"Not going to happen. You'll either kill yourself, or ruin my sleeping bag. Or both," Aizawa answers, in a way that makes it clear where his priorities are. With that stupid yellow abomination he probably only bought because it reminds him of his husband, because he's just that embarrassing. When he stands up, he seems to think he's made his final decision, only glancing at Hitoshi when he looks at his grandfather, huddled next to the fire like he seems intent to spend his day. The old man should at least have a book to read, if nothing else. "Thanks for having us."

"Get the hell off my mountain," the old man answers, because he doesn't seem to like goodbyes. At least, not from Aizawa, which means he has good taste, because he turns to look at Hitoshi. "Don't give him any more grief, you've done that enough while you're here."

"I've been on my best behavior here," Hitoshi says, and intends to make that true. If Aizawa thinks he can drag him off this mountain, back to all those people and UA and the investigation and the undeniable reality that he's a Nomu, then he's in for a surprise. He likes it up here, and he's not going to give that up so easily. "See you soon."

"I'll see you," Aizawa says, something that makes the old man jolt and stare at him too long. Aizawa opens the door anyway, like he doesn't want to answer to that reaction, and just leave the poor old man alone with whatever secret insult or threat he means.

"I'll be here," the old man answers, too quietly. It seems like a code, and Hitoshi will have to ask him about it when he comes back.

Because he's coming back quickly, soon. He almost wants to make it now when he follows Aizawa out the door, and Aizawa crouches down in front of him.

"I'm not—"

"The sooner you do, the sooner we can see Eri," Aizawa interrupts, because he's fucking rude. "Take as long as you want, I'll wait," he adds, because Aizawa is undeniably, irrevocably, completely an asshole too.

Hitoshi walks forward, reminding himself how easy it would be to put Aizawa in a sleeper hold or snap his neck, and awkwardly steps each leg under Aizawa's arms, his hands moving under Hitoshi's knees. Hitoshi wanted that to be enough, but when Aizawa stands up, he nearly falls backwards, and has to brace himself by clinging to his shoulders.

Fucking asshole. "I know this-"

"Just get on with it," Hitoshi snaps, because yes, he doesn't like being carried around, he especially hates that Aizawa keeps insisting on it, and it's Aizawa's own damn fault that his ankle hurts too much to walk on now.

If Aizawa wasn't just such an irritating, infuriating dick, Hitoshi would have never gone out with his grandfather to check the traps in the first place.

Hitoshi has to carry both backpacks awkwardly, Aizawa's being heavier because Aizawa packed too much useless stuff. As Aizawa walks away from the shack, into the trees and changing his route in ways that seem pointless at first, before Hitoshi realizes he must know the traps better than the local deer do. Hitoshi tries to ignore how large and stiff and menacing Aizawa's hands are as they grip his knees. He tries to ignore how awkward this is, and fails, and instead forces himself closer by wrapping his arms around Aizawa's neck, tilting his head back to avoid a face full of hair.

When he carries Eri like this, that's how Eri holds onto him, with her arms wrapped around his neck from the back. Hitoshi isn't Eri, so he knows these thoughts are his own as he can't stop thinking about how he only needs one arm around Aizawa's throat, his other with the elbow braced behind Aizawa's shoulder, how he could use that to slowly pull and squeeze until he drops.

"It's about 12:30 now, should be at the training camp by-"

"You're not a clock," Hitoshi reminds, because Aizawa apparently needs a reminder. He would be so much less annoying if he didn't start talking out of nowhere, nearly making Hitoshi fall backwards out of surprise.

He wonders if he used to scare other people too, when they didn't expect him to talk either. "The position of the sun. It's easier out here with the trees. That stick is standing straight up, and it barely has a shadow."

Aizawa steps out of his way to avoid that stick, like Hitoshi really cares to notice that. Maybe it's a neat way to tell time, but phones are neater.

27 is going to miss having one, but it's better for everyone involved.

When Hitoshi moves his arms a bit closer, to his limit unless he wants to risk getting his head lost in Aizawa's absurdly scruffy hair, his gloved thumb nearly gets snagged in something he forgot about. Aizawa's capture scarf.

He pulls that hand away immediately, pulling at his black knit hat pointlessly as a distraction, before he bites down on the tip of his middle finger to pull the glove off. He's not sure if it will work with one hand, when the capture scarf might still respond only to Aizawa, and it's probably pressed against the back of Aizawa's bare neck. It seems to need skin contact though.

27 puts his hand on top where the white scarf is looped around Aizawa's shoulders, and barely opens his mouth to drop the glove or say a word to make it move, when it starts moving. It flares out immediately, Aizawa notices just as soon and stops in his tracks, and 27 is shoved off of Aizawa's back by those surprisingly sturdy cords but he clings to it with both hands and pulls.

27 lands on the snow and sees enough of Aizawa falling too, his own hands reaching for the capture scarf pulled around his throat, before 27 drops the scarf, turns, and starts running. His ankle cries out immediately, because all the old man would part with were the bandages and Aizawa said that was fine, but 27 just needs to get those things back.

He just needs to hide from Aizawa for a while, wait him out. Aizawa wants to get back to Eri, and eventually he'll realize that it's easier to leave 27 behind. That he should, he should just go back to Eri, back to Yamada, back to UA, and realize that 27 will be safe here and he should be left behind.

27 keeps an eye on the tracks Aizawa left in the snow, to make sure it's harder for him, and finally takes a breath for the first time in what feels like minutes when he doesn't hear Aizawa following.

Stupid walking clock finally ran out of patience, but Hitoshi feels like he'll never stop shaking after what he just did.

*

Aizawa was going to pass it off as an accident, but with two loops of the scarf pulling in while the rest were flaring out, he realized that wasn't what happened. And when he took two steps in pursuit, crouched too low, his gloved hand curling around the capture scarf that had settled and pulled reflexively, it was the lack of response through the glove that reminded him what he was.

He's a hero, but he's not in pursuit of a criminal.

He forced his blood to cool as he forced himself to wait, forced himself to ask why in hell Hitoshi pulled that stunt. Why the kid was jumping around traps like that, regardless of which leg he landed on.

Desperation, was the answer. Something Aizawa wrote off or didn't see, something he didn't explain well enough, or some fear that Hitoshi didn't share with him.

He walks stiffly, as Hitoshi runs, and even when he passes out of sight, Aizawa knows he'll catch up to him. It seems likely that it won't be in a trap, as he notices there aren't truly new tracks on the ground. Hitoshi is jumping like that to land on his own footprints, sometimes overlapping the edge, but if Hitoshi continues on like that, he'll either follow those tracks to the shack or find a new trail leading somewhere else.

Hitoshi needs this time to calm down, as much as Aizawa does, so they can have a conversation about how attempted strangulation isn't an adequate way of expressing discomfort.

Aizawa sees the trail split as the shack comes into view, and almost doubts for a moment that this isn't an old path written in the snow. Hitoshi is going back to Aizawa's childhood basecamp, where he had run into Hawks just hours ago, and Aizawa only spares a thought to whether Hitoshi had hidden something there and left it before he dismisses it.

Hitoshi wouldn't put down roots in this place, when he knew from the beginning it was temporary.

But, Aizawa finds himself surprised. Mostly, by how the hell Hitoshi managed to get into that tree.

It must have taken a while, as Aizawa had been stalking him out of sight for a while, and it looks like Hitoshi has just barely managed the feat, his purple haired head falling back against the tree trunk with his injured leg dangling off of it. It's not the sturdiest branch on that tree, but Aizawa used to brace his treehouse with a board there, as the load-bearing branch was next to and above it.

And Aizawa takes off his glove to throw his capture scarf around that load-bearing branch, pulling himself onto it too quickly to consider Hitoshi jolting out of the tree, only thinking pettily that this is a far less dangerous surprise than the one Aizawa was treated to.

Aizawa notices that Hitoshi stares, that he hasn't fallen out, but he looks like he's considering the option with his hands braced on the branch and trunk, ready to shove himself into another run. Aizawa tries to reassure him by settling himself on his own branch, capture scarf winding around his shoulders, pressing his back to the trunk with a sigh. "Whenever you're ready to talk about that, I'll be waiting."

Hitoshi scoffs and folds his arms, pouting almost when he throws his back against the tree trunk again. It's encouraging enough that he isn't bolting, it seems to mean he will talk about it eventually, of his own volition. No doubt with angry barbed words at first, but Aizawa supposes he'll have to get better at piecing out what Hitoshi means beneath those. "This is a safe house, and I'm supposed to stay safe. I don't get why you're trying to make me leave."

Aizawa nods, because Hitoshi needs some little reward for the attempt to be forthcoming, even if it's barely that. "Because this was always a temporary measure, and I thought I was clear about that-"

"I don't have to leave," Hitoshi interrupts, and he's oddly incensed about this. It's enough that Aizawa begins to consider the horrifying possibility that Hitoshi and his grandfather bonded so well over the past three days, that Hitoshi doesn't want to leave him.

Aizawa would really rather that Hitoshi has simply found a fondness for easy access to alcohol. "You do. You're Hizashi's ward, and he has legal guardianship of you, as do I for extreme circumstances, and my grandfather doesn't. Hizashi and Eri are both eager to see you again, and I don't think you would be happy never seeing them again if you stayed up here."

"I could talk to them through the radio," Hitoshi says, a bit less venom in his tone, which seems to imply that he's actually thought this out. "Can't use my quirk like that. And they won't miss me, and they'll be safe."

Three things that Aizawa overlooked, apparently. Hitoshi is still uncomfortable with his quirk, and unfortunately very aware that he will need to test it on Hizashi. Hitoshi seems to think that Hizashi and Eri would ever be reassured by his voice over a radio instead of verifying his safety with their own eyes, and given how injury-prone his ward is, that's completely an understandable worry.

And Hitoshi still thinks of himself as a danger to others, because he can't trust that anyone can protect him.

"It's actually a good thing that you can't use your quirk through the radio. It guarantees that your wardship can't be removed," Aizawa says, because his husband's total hearing loss isn't the only factor at play now. "Hizashi's hearing aids work like the radio, it processes sounds that we can hear and plays it like a speaker inside his ear. If it didn't work at all with Eri, then it won't work at all with Hizashi."

Aizawa glances out of the corner of his eye, to see Hitoshi tucking his bare hand a bit deeper under his arm. But his head tips down a bit, maybe a bit of guilt sinking in.

"Hizashi and Eri will miss you, if you stay out here. I'm sure you've wondered how they are, if they're worried, and just hearing their voices isn't enough to know they're safe. And you'll miss Eri's birthday party."

"I don't know what to get her anyway," Hitoshi says, a weak defense. Even when he says it, he sounds too upset at the notion, like he should be. He deserves to see that important milestone for her.

“And I will keep you safe,” Aizawa says, as he’s said, multiple times. But this time, Hitoshi might remember now that he’s sober. “I’m not going to die in the attempt, because I’ve faced thousands of villains, and I’m quite capable of taking them down when I’m there to do something about it. And I will be around, because you will be escorted by either Hizashi or myself at all times, and if there is anyone you think could stand a chance against us, there’s another hero on staff that would be able to take them down. If there is someone like that, I need you to tell me about them. That’s why I need you to talk about the people who are trying to hurt you, so I can defend you.”

Hitoshi curls his uninjured leg a bit closer to himself, along with his arms tightening. “I didn’t. Tell you anything out here. That’s what you wanted me to do.”

If that’s a poorly thought out defense, a last-ditch effort to convince Aizawa to leave Hitoshi out here, or another ‘trade’ that Hitoshi wants to insist upon himself, it doesn’t matter. “I want to know enough to keep you safe. Whatever else you know, you don’t have to tell me.”

8 hours... 12 hours... B-Bug’s maggots. Those words still ring in Aizawa’s head, a name he wants to put to a face to put under his fists, because Aizawa has always known that Hitoshi’s past is painful. Not like that.

And Aizawa doesn’t want to make it more painful than it has to be. “I already know you’re adept at evaluating quirks, and the abilities of others. I trust your judgement on who we’ll need to be wary of. Beyond that, I need your help finding where they’re located, and if you’re comfortable trying to identify them, that would be helpful as well. But it’s not necessary.”

“I don’t know who’s dead or alive. It’s been three years,” Hitoshi says, a concern Aizawa has always been aware of. “Everything might have changed. I probably don’t know anything.”

“Then, you’ll have to put up with it for longer, until we find them,” Aizawa says, and if that’s music to Hitoshi’s ears, to know he won’t be parted from Eri that easily, Aizawa will take it. “If it takes long enough, you’ll probably be moved to protected custody once you become an adult. You could change your assignment to one of my students after they graduate and become fully fledged. Even Bakugo.”

Hitoshi huffs, a bit closer to a laugh than usual, even if it sounds bitter. “He’d get me killed in a week, or kill me himself. I’d probably make him do it.”

There’s a sharp edge to those words, that reminds Aizawa how fragile his ward’s desire to live seems to be. “It might seem easier to stay here, and avoid all of that. Despite how frightening it is, there are a lot of things you’ll miss out on. Things you don’t even know about yet, that you have no idea exist.”

Hitoshi doesn’t answer to that, and might not fully realize what Aizawa means right now. Even if Aizawa is sure he encountered nothing but surprise and terror after the raid on the 8 Precepts, when he was thrown into a world he couldn’t understand and had no hope of doing so, when he was completely unprepared for any of it, there is so much more written in Hitoshi’s future that he can’t see.

The silence drags out, the shadows only drawing further out when Aizawa looks, and he has to break the silence instead. “Like the Loch Ness monster-”

“You’re so fucking obsessed with that,” Hitoshi snaps, his head turned to face Aizawa with an irritation that Aizawa is surprised he can find so amusing. He might be embarrassed, but that's a light consequence to assault with a deadly weapon. "You know that's fake, it doesn't even exist, ri-"

Hitoshi's teeth snap audibly when he cuts himself off, turning away with something that Aizawa finds far less amusing. "I still mean what I said, that it's possible to use one quirk and not the other. It's entirely up to you, if you ever want my help with that."

Hitoshi turns just enough to stare at his own knee, again too comfortable with silence. Again, Aizawa finds himself growing a bit impatient.

"And whenever you want my help getting out of this tree-"

Hitoshi sighs, dropping his head forward. "Fine. You win. Do whatever you want."

The teenager punctuates that by dropping his arms to his sides, his head raising just enough to rest against the tree trunk, going completely limp. Aizawa could argue the point that he would like Hitoshi's cooperation to make things go a bit more smoothly, but this seems to be the end of Hitoshi's patience as well.

Aizawa lets himself fall to the ground, and decides some more complicated capturing measures could serve him better here. He winds the capture scarf around Hitoshi's waist and both knees, keeping the tension there to guide Hitoshi's descent onto his back.

And after replacing his gloves, he puts his hands under Hitoshi's knees to steady him. But he's not removing the capture scarf from his ward.

"You're really going to carry me down the mountain like this," Hitoshi observes, his flattened tone making a rather pointless question into a rather pointless observation.

"You're really going to ask that after you tried to choke me," Aizawa returns in kind, his own flat tone stripped enough from accusation that Hitoshi's hands falling off his shoulders is surprising. "There are better ways to say you're uncomfortable with something, and I'd prefer you use them."

"I'd prefer to walk," Hitoshi argues, but his arms wind back over Aizawa's chest for balance. Aizawa tries not to react to it like it's more dangerous than his ward trying to balance himself.

"I'm relieved you no longer want to roll down the mountain in my sleeping bag," Aizawa says, and means it.

He really shouldn't be relieved by something like that, but that's what's unique about Hitoshi. It's always something new to be concerned about.

And yet, there's always something to be surprised about, in a different way.

"A fox," Hitoshi observes. Aizawa turns his head to catch a flash of that red fur between the trees, and sees the animal is either in pursuit of prey, or pursuit of a den to shelter itself from the cold from how quickly it runs.

"Omnivores. They mostly eat smaller prey, but they'll eat plants and insects too," Aizawa says, recalling a fond memory from his youth with a smirk he can't quite fight. "Supposedly fish, but not preserved sardines. I wanted one as a pet, and it wouldn't take the bait."

"Should've offered it something better," Hitoshi remarks, which might be true. But it's honestly better that the fox was wise enough to turn away from those oily, congealed fish from a boiled

MRE.

There's no way that Aizawa could have taken care of it.

*

Aizawa stops suddenly, when he hears a weird noise. Hitoshi hears it too, something close to that injured deer, but quieter. His hands curl a bit tighter in front of Aizawa's chest, hoping that it isn't another deer, or the same one he saw with its mangled leg, only closer to death now.

Aizawa turns and walks towards it, but it isn't long before they see what looks like a body strung up by another leg snare, someone bundled up in heavy snow jackets with their arms dangling limply below their head, almost touching the scarf on the ground. The woman with her brown hair in a loose and frazzled bun looks somewhat familiar, but Hitoshi can't quite place her.

Apparently, Aizawa does remember her, not fondly, as he tries to turn and walk away, but somehow she must have realized he was there as her eyes spring open. "You! Kidnapping a ward in our-ah!"

The woman must have tried to kick out of the leg trap, now she's clinging to her leg and making weird sobbing noises, even if she's not crying. But that's not enough to stop her from glaring up at Aizawa, and though Hitoshi can't see his face, he imagines that Aizawa regrets investigating.

"I had to come out here, I had to leave Tokyo on a weekend, to come out here, to get maimed by these-whatever this is, that's highly illegal on top of how illegal it is for you to take our witness into this godforsaken mountain- you're not getting away with this, Eraserhead! This is the last straw, there's no way I can hide this, and that kid's going to talk when Endeavor signs the papers-"

"Did you hear something?" Aizawa asks, brushing his hair behind his ear, and nearly smacking Hitoshi in the face with it. "It would be very unfortunate if a government official was stranded out here with these freezing temperatures. The old man doesn't check his traps very often, especially the ones out here. And if he did find a government official.... I don't know if he would hear anything either."

That's a bit cold, even for Hitoshi's tastes. Aizawa is really going to let this lady die, just because she's annoying, and she wants-Endeavor.

This is that bitch from all the interrogations. It's hard to recognize her without the suit, without her whining, but this is the lady who wouldn't let him take his knife to see Chisaki, who tricked him into drinking that poisoned coffee with that Jun lady. And she does want to take him away from Yamada, to force him to talk and force him to stay with that Endeavor guy instead.

The woman is still glaring at Aizawa, like she doesn't believe his words, or that threat. Aizawa shouldn't be willing to let her die, he's still a hero. He should at least have a cover story so that it's Hitoshi's fault, that he brainwashed Aizawa and forced him to leave this woman out here to her fate.

"You don't want to play this game, Eraserhead," the woman says, and clearly she's trying to threaten Aizawa. It's not working well, because it's pretty basic. "We know where he's been, we've tracked every violation so far, we've been lenient so far, but that's over. You'll be lucky to keep your hero license, or that arrangement with the little girl-"

"The Hero Commission has more jurisdiction with Eri's circumstances than you do," Aizawa says, giving up the act that he 'hasn't heard anything.' "You'll have to do better than that if you want to get out of that leg snare."

Aizawa isn't worried, even with Eri getting a little more control over her quirk. Hitoshi trusts that, but he knows this woman doesn't seem to be working alone. If they know where Hitoshi is, that he's been away from UA and apparently he shouldn't have been, which Aizawa didn't mention before he started talking about this 'safe house,' and that's apparently a 'violation.' Hitoshi has apparently had several of those, and Aizawa didn't mention that either.

Aizawa is supposed to keep him safe.

"Oh trust me, leaving me here would be a big mistake for you! After all these months, the kid hasn't talked, you've just been wasting our resources this whole time, treating him to these little outings like protective custody is just a vacation-"

"The Miasma is in a warehouse," Hitoshi says, looking away because he doesn't want to know what Aizawa or the woman look like when he finally says it, his gloved fingers fidgeting with Aizawa's capture scarf. "It looks normal from the outside, but there are a lot of hidden floors underneath it. I don't know where, but it's close to the sea. The water tastes salty."

The silence drags on too long, Aizawa's stiffened shoulders impossible not to feel under Hitoshi's arms. He looks, still unable to see Aizawa's face while he's sitting on his back, but the lady is biting her lips together and pointing at her eyes, then at him. Is she trying to threaten him? To say she'll gouge out his eyes for some reason?

Oh. She wants Aizawa to use his quirk on him, before she talks. "I can't brainwash you without asking you a question-"

"Why is he talking?!" the woman squeals, seeming to echo through the small silence of the woods afterwards. "How long has he been talking?! If you've been hiding- he's talking-"

"Only since we left UA," Aizawa says, which is kind of a lie. He's only started talking to Aizawa after he was attacked by 127, before they left, unless she's talking about 'talking about The Miasma,' which she knows he's had to do before this point.

"Aizawa broke my leg up here. Now, I have no choice but to tell him everything he wants to know," Hitoshi adds, because Aizawa isn't making a case for him, so he has to do that himself. "If I have to deal with Endeavor, I'll just kill myself. He sounds like a pain to deal with."

The woman growls, staring at the trees in front of her rather than trying to look up at them. She's being offered a deal, and she should probably take it. "Oh. He is. Endeavor is indeed, a pain to deal with."

Her voice is not quite softer, but she seems less irritated now. There's still a sharp edge to her tone, like she's still considering the situation. Luckily, it seems like she's made a decision with that sigh.

"Alright, you want to do this your way? Get me down, I'll work something out, like you actually requested safe leave but it got to the wrong department, and as long as I have that address in a week-"

"Two months," Aizawa interrupts. "Isolating it to the coastline is still-"

"A month-"

"Isolating it to the coastline is still-"

“What will happen after you find them?” Nemoto asks, through 27’s voice. Hitoshi curls his hands tighter in Aizawa’s scarf, watching the woman’s mouth close from where it was opened to argue, her face falling slack.

“The raid, of course. Shut them down, I’ll finally get that promotion to supervisor. You’ll be someone else’s problem, I probably won’t even have to deal with finding an institution to stick you in,” the woman answers, before her eyes glaze white, her body dropping fully limp.

Hitoshi actually feels the string this time, not as fully as he should. He can feel how it’s fraying, because the woman is injured, and the rope digging into her trapped leg will probably break his control eventually. So he doesn’t have much time. “You’re not in a good position to negotiate. It’s fine. I know it’s temporary.”

He knows. He knows what it is, that two years until he turns 18 is a dream, that Yamada can promise he’ll stay as much as he wants, but there are people that Yamada and Aizawa answer to that don’t even know him. That don’t care, at all. “It’s not going to end like that. Or that soon.”

Aizawa can lie to him. Hitoshi could probably use his quirk to force him to admit it. He doesn’t.

“They live near the sea, not the mountains,” Aizawa says, like he’s repeating something. He tips his head when Hitoshi doesn’t answer, but still can’t face him without breaking his neck. “You were talking in your sleep, about Miasma. Not the Loch Ness-”

“Can you ever just-” Hitoshi cuts himself off, leaning back enough to consider trying to throw himself off Aizawa’s back. This bastard will never let that go, will he?

“You’re not going to an institution,” Aizawa says, and he can say it all he wants. That doesn’t make it happen. “Let me handle her.”

Hitoshi rolls his eyes, before he closes them. The fraying string is at least easier to see, and he tries dropping it. He tries imagining it falling away, out of his control, letting her go- “He- he used his quirk-”

“Two months, to do my job, because you have no idea how long it takes to narrow down such a broad search. Hitoshi remains in my care for a month following the capture of every Miasma operative and dangerous affiliate that will have the intent to harm him, and a quirk specialist, which is required at this point,” Aizawa says, speaking his demands quick enough to silence every expression she makes to argue while still drawing out emphasis on every word that makes his voice nearly growl. “With the quirk specialist that was requested, by name, and was vetted, before all of this.”

The woman huffs, before her eyes close, and her mouth carves into a too-sharp, too-smug smirk. “Oh, we did hear that named and vetted quirk specialist had a very odd appointment lined up this week-”

“Which you’re going to overlook,” Aizawa interrupts, oddly falling into this role of blackmailing this lady pretty easily.

She huffs and glares, before she remembers her current condition. “Which, I’m going to have to cover up, which is difficult to do because you’re not good at this. I’ll have to sweep it off his appointment ledger and tell him not to put it on, and you can tell the rat not to talk to him over the phone. I’ll get it done once I get back to Tokyo. And civilization, get me out!”

Aizawa just tilts his head, waiting for her to say it. She has to agree, to drop the bluster and accept at least the appearance of defeat. It seems like she's not good at that.

"Two months, I'll extend the usual grace period another week, and like I said, quirk specialist at your leisure with some discretion please. Happy? Do you want tickets to Disneyworld too?!" the woman asks, and Aizawa isn't happy, and asking him to be is a bit too much to demand, like asking for tickets to that weird place everyone seems to be obsessed about.

But Aizawa pulls out a knife from the side of his backpack that Hitoshi is still wearing, and cuts her down so that she lands in the snow. She yelps, a bit dramatically, before she starts pulling up her pants to reveal the rope burn. The rope caught her in the middle of her leg, instead of the ankle, so it's probably not-

"It's broken!" she yells, and she wouldn't be squeezing that hard if it was. "How am I supposed to get down the- how am I supposed to drive?! You-"

"Pity," Aizawa says, before he turns and starts walking away. Hitoshi looks back, to see her climbing to her feet too fast. To see her hardly limping at all.

"You are the worst excuse for a hero I've ever heard of! If you think that you're making any friends, if you think you're doing anything but making a big mistake right now, oh buddy, I have news for-"

"It could be quieter," Hitoshi mentions, and he feels Aizawa shrug. Seems enough like permission. "Are you normally this annoying?"

"I'm under a lot of stress-" Hitoshi doesn't even realize it until he pulls the string. That he felt it. Completely.

And Nemoto didn't ask that question.

"Much better," Aizawa sighs, continuing to walk, almost like he didn't notice it. "You're improving, it seems. With your quirk."

"Follow us," Hitoshi commands, glancing back just to make sure she's doing it. That he's doing it, that he really, actually did that. Without Aizawa's help. He couldn't have. "Did you... There's another way. For your quirk to affect me."

"No," Aizawa says, and turns his head, before he remembers he can't see him. He can't look at Hitoshi, not with his eyes, can't see him. "You did that on your own. Controlling the question, then. That's... promising."

Promising, because Hitoshi hasn't tried it much, except with Aizawa. Aizawa said he could help, that he could strip parts of Confession away from his quirk, so his quirk could still be his quirk. Even if the woman was probably forced to answer, that's not exactly something that Hitoshi can deny would be useful. Powerful, even.

His quirk, but more powerful, as long as he can control it. And with that in mind, how he's a Nomu because of his quirk mixed with Nemoto's, Aizawa definitely wants him to see that quirk specialist.

And maybe, now Hitoshi does too.

Bonus points to whoever knows what 'Clicksters' is a reference to. ;) We stan horrible American movies in this house.

Also, 'Shohei' means 'to soar/glide,' evidence that Aizawa was being a little bit of a shit when he came up with that name.

The Mountain Man's Beard

Chapter Summary

Aizawa, Shinsou, and Eri return to UA to be reunited with Yamada and everyone else they had to be away from during the three day weekend. Both wards have grown in their time away from campus, and Aizawa needs to investigate the change to his class roster. To know who the traitor really is.

Chapter Notes

Trigger Warnings: Purposefully re-triggering self,

Previously on Wards of UA: When Aizawa visited Eri at the Ketsubutsu training camp, he asked her to pack a lunch for Mocha. When 127 attacked Shinsou at UA, Mirio was there and tried to defend Shinsou before Shinsou used his quirk to make him leave, the consequences of that making both of them feel unsettled about each other. Ms. Saito's older brother, Hideo, had gone 'missing' prior to the Jun interview making Ms. Saito worry that he had been kidnapped by The Miasma, but Aizawa found him at a BDSM ball in an extreme master-slave relationship. When Shinsou accidentally used ConfessionWash for the first time, he asked Mirio "What do you think you can possibly do without your quirk?" After the Jun interview, Shinsou tried to run away from UA and Brainwashed Midoriya, threatening to make him use Full Cowl at 100% which may have resulted in Midoriya exploding. Aizawa assumed that Ms. Saito didn't want her brother's BDSM relationship to be public knowledge because he was also in a gay relationship, and she might be homophobic. On the night that 127 attacked, Ashido was planning to throw Shinsou a '6 year old's birthday,' and Sato baked a coffee flavored cake for the occasion. Shinsou tried to run away from the hero students who tried to get him away from 127, which Shinsou did in order to kill 127 to make sure that he wouldn't be attacked again nor would anyone get hurt by The Miasma. Before Shinsou got sick, he could only talk to people that he Brainwashed. Aizawa referred to his students as 'eggs' exactly once to Shinsou, and Shinsou has referred to 1-A as 'eggs' several times since. Iida got hurt when he ran towards 127, who was invisible at the time, as a distraction, and Midoriya threw himself into the air to get enough distance to see where 127 was, even though 127 had a katana at the time.

Aizawa has wanted to see the end of this trip before it began. Before he started to hike up the mountain, before he even entered Byte Sound's car, before he had to contact his grandfather to make the arrangement, he's been waiting for this moment when he sees Fat Gum's van and knows he's ready to go home.

There's just a bit of hesitation, when he makes the next step forward. It's something that Hitoshi takes for what it's not, and ends the control he has over Ms. Saito so that she can bluster and squeal about it, which he hopes that Hitoshi ignores as much as Aizawa does. For all the horrible things that happened on this trip, and all the horrible events that caused it, it was surprisingly nice.

He feels like Hitoshi is less of a stranger to him, and though he knows the situation is tender, new, and mercurial at best, he feels closer to him. He doesn't exactly want that to be what he leaves behind in the mountains.

But Aizawa has to go back, to Eri and Hizashi, to UA, to know who the traitor truly is and if it is one of his students like Hawks implied. To begin working with Hitoshi to find the warehouse where Miasma operated from three years ago, to see if they're still there, and if not, if there's any trace of them. To find some way to enforce that agreement Ms. Saito made, where Hitoshi wouldn't be removed from Hizashi's care until Miasma and their affiliates had been dealt with, which would include the League of Villains too.

As much as Endeavor will want to smother them quickly, Aizawa knows that's not easy, and that's easy time to buy to keep Hitoshi safe. Ms. Saito made her intentions known that she wants Hitoshi to be put in an institution after the wardship has ended, to make sure that he'll never know an ounce of freedom in his entire life. From the day Shinsou Ui sold him, Hitoshi has been controlled and kept isolated and in place, never cared for, never treated warmly or well or like a person until he came to UA, and the last thing he deserves after all he's done to escape those situations is to be locked up in another one.

Shigaraki being hard to track down, and hard to bring down, is not something Aizawa ever thought he would hope for before today. But if it keeps Hitoshi safe, and at UA, he might start hoping.

Fat Gum must have arrived only a bit ago, as the Big Three are still packing their luggage. Mirio looks better, far better than how Aizawa saw him yesterday, and while Aizawa isn't surprised that Eri's horn hasn't shrunk, he's at least glad that it hasn't grown. It will be better when they're all back at UA, and it won't be nearly as concerning for him. "ZAWA! TWENNY!"

Eri screams so loud before she barrels out of the van at a sprint, that Aizawa worries she might have hurt herself. Her announcement brings every eye to them, even if they're barely off the mountain slope and barely on the grounds, but half of himself wants to scold his own students at least for not noticing.

There's someone he does notice noticing, that he'd really, truly prefer didn't. While he didn't have a plan to hide Hitoshi's injury in the first place, and he did want to ask if Ms. Joke had a real splint in her first aid kit, he didn't expect to actually feel fear when her smile froze like that.

Ms. Joke cares deeply for a lot of kids as a homeroom teacher, and she'd adopted the same attitude towards his wards, which he doesn't mind in the slightest.

But right now, he might mind it, if only for the sake of his self-preservation.

Which he's thoroughly distracted from when Eri barrels right into his knees, hugging him tightly before she starts tugging at what Aizawa hopes is Hitoshi's uninjured foot. "Twenny, Twenny, Twenny, did you get Mocha? Did you sleep good last night? Did you eat the lunch I packed? Did you miss me?"

"I got Mocha, and I slept good thanks to that." Thanks to the alcohol, he thankfully doesn't say. "And I ate the lunch-"

"It was for Mocha," Eri says, almost scolding Hitoshi for it. Hitoshi flinches like it was worse. "But that's okay! Did you miss me?"

"Of course I missed you," Hitoshi says, putting what little full weight he has on Aizawa's shoulders as he starts pulling his legs out of the folds of the capture scarf that's worked as a harness so far.

Aizawa crouches and unwinds the capture scarf to help him, offering an arm out if Hitoshi needs it for balance, but Hitoshi just rests his hand on Aizawa's shoulder instead.

Despite how long Hitoshi's hands or arms have been resting loosely around Aizawa's shoulders during the hike, this hand feels heavier. A bit more like a casual, deep, and impossible to fake measure of trust that Aizawa hopes that he's earned at this point.

Hitoshi only manages to half-crouch down, to nearly fall after Eri launches herself into his waiting arms. He stands up afterwards, even if he should avoid the added weight, but Aizawa knows it's impossible to argue the point. Eri likely will remain clinging to Hitoshi like that for the next few days, if not a week, to make up for lost time. And with that sigh of contentment, Hitoshi will need that reassurance too. "I really missed you."

"Ah, yes, professional and upstanding heroes!" Ms. Saito calls out, the limp returning now that she's free from Hitoshi's control. It's for the wrong leg, but Aizawa doesn't deem it worthy to point that out. "I need medical attention, if you would be so kind to help a civilian!"

Eri turns her head, staring with wide and curious eyes, and Aizawa can think of little else that could be worse than Eri trying to talk to Ms. Saito. Aizawa can think of few things more dangerous for The Commission rep than talking to Eri. And Aizawa can think of extremely few things that look as dangerous as Ms. Joke does as she approaches with that still frozen, too tense smile. "Oh, yeah, we do have a first aid kit around somewhere. Those hikes can be awful on the ankle. Is that what happened with my sweet little cat son?"

"Aizawa broke my leg," Hitoshi answers. With what's not a funny joke, that Aizawa didn't appreciate the first time.

It's far, far less funny now, with Ms. Joke's eyes narrowed like that. "My grandfather, Aizawa Shoga, was involved in how Shinsou sprained his ankle. It was an accident. And that's not a good joke to make."

"Good," Eri chimes in, and Aizawa honestly doesn't want to know what she thought about him before he clarified the situation. He knows that if he did hurt Hitoshi intentionally like the teenager implied, she would never forgive him, and shouldn't. She might be giving Hitoshi all the missing affection first because she might blame him for Hitoshi being attacked at UA, and yesterday he was simply the most convenient shelter from her storm.

Aizawa knows if Eri doesn't forgive him for that, he'll never be able to accept it himself. As much as it hurts to know he wasn't there, the weight of failing both wards makes it far heavier. To fail in Eri's eyes as well.

And he counts himself lucky that Ms. Joke only knows the barest details of that, when she finally laughs, and looks slightly less murderous for it. "Aw, come on! It's funny! Because if you did get my little cat son hurt, or hurt him, or allow him to get hurt on your watch..." Aizawa knows what murderous intent feels like, and he can recognize it now. "It would be a barrel of laughs."

Aizawa could be insulted that Ms. Joke is using a classic teaching tactic against him. To lay out the consequences that a student has already earned, in a way that seems to imply the teacher doesn't know about how they've earned it. To let the student sweat with that for a while, before they realize that they've certainly been caught.

Aizawa isn't insulted, because it's working too well. "I don't want a staring contest."

Ms. Joke claps him on the arm with a smile, with what might be a promise that she won't use her quirk on him punitively. Aizawa knows well enough that she's used that tactic as an ambush, and he'll have to remain on his guard. "Let me grab that splint real quick- oh, YO! TOSS ME THE SPLINT!"

Yo Shindo seemed to be treating Ms. Saito's 'injury' under the porch of the nearest cabin, seemed to be smiling in the tensest way possible while he bandaged her leg, as Ms. Saito carried on loudly but far enough away not to be heard. From what Aizawa recalls of that student's quirk, he could probably test whether she was actually as injured as she claimed with a subtle vibration that she wouldn't scream in agony from. And the tense smile might be evidence that he had.

Yo doesn't toss the splint from the first aid kit, but the long haired Itejiro did. Ms. Joke caught it, and then seemed to recognize that Hitoshi wasn't going to move to sit down, or set Eri down either.

Aizawa provided the support for Hitoshi to brace himself on as he stood on one leg, and Ms. Joke removed his shoe and the bandages that provided the barest support. Aizawa only glanced, but saw that his foot and ankle were very red and swollen. Probably from the sprint that he pulled only hours ago. "Oh, you're gonna want some painkillers for that too. We'll get ya fixed up for the ride home, then you're on bedrest for a few days. Doctor's orders! And Doctor Joke says you can order this big lug around to wait on you hand and foot! We'll get him dressed up in a little butler coat, trim that wild beard into a mustache-"

"It's not-" Aizawa starts, before he pulls a hand to his cheek and feels that yes, it is that bad. Hizashi will have a fit about it.

"Lemme see!" Eri demands, and though Hitoshi has to move his hand to balance on Aizawa's other shoulder to get close enough, Eri is able to reach out with her little warm hand to check how his beard has grown in. "Zawa, it's so soft! It's like Santa!"

Aizawa laughs under his breath, just imagining the conniption Hizashi would have, if he dared. Even if he enlisted Eri's support to help him with that. "Hizashi doesn't like it when it's this long. He's probably going to make me shave, like it was on your first day at UA."

Hizashi had made all the preparations already, had visited Eri several times in the hospital before that point, with the intention to soothe all the worries that were boiling under the surface. While Hizashi was outwardly enthusiastic about bringing Eri to live with them, the boil spilled over on the day of her discharge, and after making Aizawa change clothes several times to be more 'presentable,' he insisted on a shave and styling his hair before he finally allowed Aizawa to leave.

Hizashi also didn't appreciate the comfortable Ganriki Neko outfit Aizawa picked, but the point still stands that Eri did. And that Hitoshi does as well, and thus Hizashi's opinion on the matter is utterly null and void.

"Right, let's get you a crutch, don't worry about returning it because we've got a couple of 'em," Ms. Joke says, because she's luckily prepared for these training camps, and as Ketsubutsu doesn't have a healing quirk hero like Recovery Girl on staff, even training exercises on campus have to be treated in such a way before a hospital trip can be arranged. "Just hold tight!"

Ms. Joke might not have meant that literally, but Hitoshi's hand on his shoulder does tighten a bit. It might be due to lowering his splinted foot to the ground.

It might be due to Ms. Saito making a beeline towards them. "My car is a rental, but I can't drive like this, so I hope you-"

"I don't have a license," Aizawa says, and he's never felt more smug to pull that card than he does now, at this moment. Especially when Ms. Saito's face falls like that, or when she devolves into blatant whining.

"This is your fault that I'm out here, that I'm like this!" Ms. Saito says, sweeping her hands out at a bandaged and splinted leg as though it's been completely amputated. Hizashi has driven with far worse. "If you didn't steal your ward away without permission, we wouldn't have wasted valuable resources and valuable time to--"

"I can drive!" Mirio offers, raising a hand and offering something Aizawa truly doesn't want him to be subjected to. "If you're going our way and all, I do kind of have school tomorrow."

Aizawa watches as Mirio's initially bright mood falters a bit, and knows it might be the tension in the air, in the distance between Hitoshi and the older teen. Hitoshi is pointedly looking at his splint, and Aizawa feels his fingers curl and dig against his shoulder. That needs to be a conversation, but the distance should probably be maintained until each kid finds some peace in familiar circumstances.

"Tokyo, I'll send you back with a taxi and some payment for your trouble," Ms. Saito says stiffly, brushing a hand over the sleeve of her ridiculous snow jacket. Aizawa is both alarmed and reassured that she seems to be attempting some form of gratitude towards his student.

"Let Hizashi know if you have any trouble. I won't have my phone until we get back to campus," Aizawa says, knowing that if there is any trouble, Hizashi will meet it in person. That might delay his plans a bit if he needs to be there for the wards, but he knows Mirio will only ask for help if he needs it.

And possibly, not even then. "Will do! I'll see you guys back at school!"

"Bye Mirio! Kiss Tama goodbye first!" Eri yells, probably too loudly with her hands cupped around her mouth. Ms. Joke returns with the crutch just to double over sputtering a laugh, and Mirio's face turns quite red. And Aizawa can see Amajiki throw himself into the back of the van, possibly aiming for the storage in the back.

Aizawa purposefully looks at Hitoshi as he learns to steady himself with the crutch, before they walk to the van that will take them back to UA. Just in case there is a kiss goodbye that needs to be given.

The 8 hour drive will be awkward enough without Aizawa knowing about it.

*

So, this is a little awkward.

Mirio has kind of put it together that this lady is from the Commission of Wardship Affairs, and she seems like she's in charge of Shinsou's investigation like that. And Mirio doesn't know a lot about that, other than how Shinsou had to meet with Chisaki because of them, and possibly because of this lady herself. Shinsou also got pretty mixed up after that other interview, even if he doesn't know what happened, but he knows that something worse than Chisaki must have if Shinsou tried to run away from UA after that.

Aizawa knows more about that, and it's clear to see that Aizawa doesn't like this lady. And this lady doesn't like Aizawa. And on top of how messed up it is that Shinsou still has to go through all that junk after he's rescued, it's more messed up that it's coming from people who work under the Hero Commission, and he's supposed to do that too when he graduates. He definitely doesn't want to work alongside anyone who thinks that Shinsou should have to keep suffering after he's been rescued.

And he also doesn't know this lady's name, at all.

"So, you're a student at UA. A hero student," the lady says, putting her phone in her bag after she's been texting on it this entire time, sometimes growling under her breath. "Do you have plans after graduating?"

Mirio kind of laughs, because it's just really weirdly normal to be asked that. He's mostly been on self-imposed lockdown at UA, and hasn't really visited his extended family to get asked those kinds of questions, but he imagines he'll get that a lot if he goes to Christmas. "Uh, just hero-ing, eventually. The agency I interned with would offer me a job, but I might want to open an agency with my friends. Eventually."

There's a really big issue standing in the way of that, but he really doesn't want to tell her about it. She just hums, like he's supposed to take over the conversation.

"Oh! I didn't mention it before--"

"The road!" She shouts, throwing her hand towards the front of the car, and Mirio pulls his hand back to the steering wheel at 10 and 2, looking straight ahead.

There hasn't been any other cars for a while, but they are getting closer to Tokyo. He's a pretty decent driver though, and it just seemed friendly to look at her when he was talking. It is a rental though.

She just sighs, dropping her hand to her lap. "Sorry. I'm just... God, my life has been a wreck since I got this cursed case. I've handled cases before, but this one? And Hideo, I can't- don't let me start on him, he thinks he can just do whatever he wants, chase down Mr. Gray like we don't all want that, but what's he going to do when he's broke again and he quit his job at the Commission? He's going back to my couch, because he can't get his act together...."

Mirio just raises his eyebrows, flaring his fingers out on the steering wheel for a second. She didn't want to get into it, but she's kind of getting into it. "So, you're... having trouble with Shinsou's case?"

She groans again, throwing herself back in her seat. "So! Yeah. I'm 'having trouble' with the biggest case we've ever been handed, basically. It's not just a little mafia or 'Little Tobi needs a safe place to stay,' no, this is crazy important that the kid talks and the kid is mute. Mute! Every single day I have to file a report that just says 'In progress, here's all the things I can't do to resolve this! Here's the absolute nothing I have to report!'"

So, that sounds frustrating. And Mirio could maybe feel a little sorry for her if she wasn't trying to take it out on a kid. And take it out on Shinsou.

"Finally, things are looking up," she says with a sigh, pulling out her phone again. "With any luck, I'll be done with this by New Year's. Just wash my hands of it, take the promotion. Be done."

"Oh, you have a lead?" Mirio asks, not sure if he should. He's pretty sure he shouldn't, but if this lady means that Shinsou will be gone by New Year's, he has to ask. He has to know.

"Thanks to Eraserhead breaking his leg, I guess. Broke his silence too," she answers, with a weird giggle at the end. Like she really thinks that's funny.

Mirio just tightens his hands on the wheel, and when she turns back to texting, he doesn't bring up any more friendly conversation.

Like that actually helps or anything. He can't even bring himself to tell this lady off, because he can't be sure that she means it like that. It's hard to think that this lady, someone who works with heroes to save kids and keep them safe, would actually think it's funny that Shinsou got hurt, or that he's been too scared to talk to anyone for months.

Mirio just follows the directions to the Hero Public Safety Commission headquarters in Tokyo, relieved that even though it's late, he didn't have to deal with rush hour traffic. He's aware that he's a young driver, and even though he knows he's a good driver, it's just nerve wracking, especially in a rental.

He checks when he pulls into the parking lot, but she waves a hand and tells him that anywhere close to the front is fine. The Commission of Wardship Affairs must be in the same building as the Hero Commission, and she must have gotten the rental car arranged for by her job.

"Here, and I'll call that taxi," she mutters almost to herself, pulling her purse onto her lap as Mirio waves his hand to stop her.

"Really, it's fine! Just doing what a hero does, helping out and all," Mirio says, because he won't let his ethics slide just because she's a bad person. A really, really awful person. It would still be wrong to make her drive with her injured leg, or only help her to get the money. And since he offered to drive, he can call his own taxi to take him back to UA.

"Well... If you insist, but..." Mirio watches her looking out the window with her hand resting on the door handle, looking around at every angle in a way that a hero wouldn't, but with the same intention as a hero would have. Looking for danger.

Instead of seeing an awful woman, who he knows is either careless or sadistic towards Shinsou, he just sees a young woman scared to be alone at night, in a big city like Tokyo. "I can wait with you until you see your ride, you know? It's pretty late--"

"Well, aren't you an upstanding hero!" she says, smiling at him. It's weird, the way she looks so happy and grateful, like a lot of people he's met on patrol on the street, that he just helped carry groceries or gave out directions. It's a little weirder not being in costume. "I live a few blocks away, if that's alright. There's just been a few muggings in my area, but the taxis can be just as dangerous."

Mirio smiles and nods before he gets out, to offer an arm for her to pull herself out of the car, even if her limp falls away too quickly after he locks the car and gives her back the keys. He was pretty sure she was faking it, or just exaggerating. Or just convinced that it was worse, because the pain was fresh.

She sighs, this time actually relieved instead of those exaggerated, frustrated sighs from before, as she brushes some of her brown hair behind her ear. "I do feel safer walking with someone. Honestly, that was the only good part about working with Hideo, he'd always walk home with me. Paralysis quirk, even if he never wanted to be a hero, too much physical work. It's just safer, especially in Tokyo...."

Mirio nods, wondering how many blocks he can walk at this snail pace, with this lady holding onto his elbow like this. She's pretty thin, but he imagines the offer to carry her might come off the wrong way.

“Especially being quirkless,” she says, with a quick, defeated kind of shrug.

Mirio doesn’t exactly mean to do it, but he laughs a little under his breath at that. “Well, you know, quirks aren’t everything. In terms of safety and stuff, there’s always self defense classes, and walking in a group like you do-”

“Yep,” she interrupts sharply, something bristling in her tone. “Of course, there’s always those little ‘self defense’ classes that still don’t put someone on the level of defending yourself against a guy who can puke acid. Or breathe fire, or-or anything. I know you don’t get it, being a hero and all, but when it comes down to that? Facing a villain in real life? You really wish you had something better than ‘throw your wallet and run.’”

“That’s... happened to you?” Mirio asks, guessing. Maybe she’s a little high strung because of that, because she was attacked and that attack went poorly. There weren’t heroes around, she was unfortunately a gap between patrols. An incident.

“Few times. Tokyo, you know? You’re not really a resident until a villain decides to make you into a statement,” she answers, like that’s some kind of joke between locals.

For Mirio, it was ‘you’re not really a local until you get sick from the takoyaki stand just once!’ The old man who ran that stand for every festival seemed to have really bad luck with octopus. “That sounds really rough. Maybe, it’ll get better once the heroes get back on their feet. All Might retiring was... a pretty big thing. He was pretty local around here.”

She just hums, and probably doesn’t want to think about that. It is kind of scary, not having the Symbol of Peace on active duty, being retired. It’s easy to forget about that at UA, but in a few months, Mirio won’t be at UA. He’ll be out in the real world, worrying about the same things she does.

Being quirkless, in a world full of heroes and villains. He still knows how to fight, how to be a hero. And it’s still a little scary. “So, I know this is kind of awkward, but-”

“Hands up, lovebirds!” A guy with a black hoodie drawn up over his head is standing next to a parked car, where he might have been hiding in wait close to the rear tire of it. Where Mirio didn’t see it, walked right past him. “Yeah, give me all the money for your date night, and you’ll live. You don’t want to see my quirk, but I’ll give you a demonstration if you give me a reason.”

The lady is already digging into her purse, but Mirio puts his hand over hers to stop her. He tries to get a good look at the guy, and he sees that he dressed for the occasion. Loose, dark, baggy clothes that make him nondescript except for being a little suspicious for that.

But ‘you don’t want to see my quirk’ is suspicious too. “Are you the mugger that’s been attacking people lately? Making people scared to walk home at night-”

“Kid,” the lady almost whimpers when she pulls on his arm, trying to tug him back from facing this guy. Mirio just puts a hand on her shoulder, refusing to break his stare with the guy whose face he can’t see, but he sees that nervous way he rubs a hand against his jeans.

His quirk isn’t offensive. He’s just scaring people because people are scared, and he probably wouldn’t have the nerve to do it if All Might hadn’t retired and left everyone shaken. “Don’t be the tough guy for your broad! I’m warning you!”

Mirio just grins at him, bending slightly into a stance, and the mugger almost seems like he’s caught on an ice patch with the way his feet shuffle back and forth before he charges at him.

Maybe he was thinking about turning and running, before pride won out, and Mirio knows he was going to stop short as another scare tactic.

But Mirio dives and grabs his arm, twisting it behind his back to push his shoulder into the sidewalk, and makes quick work of grabbing the other wrist to keep him restrained.

To her credit, the lady starts calling the police before Mirio tells her to, right before the guy starts begging to be let go. “Dude, come on! Come on, let me go! That’s not fair, that’s entrapment! You’re some kind of cop, aren’tcha?!”

It’s been a few months since Mirio has seen those police cars arrive with sirens blazing, but Mirio pulls the suspect to his feet with a smile that feels more like Lemillion than it has in what feels like years. “He hasn’t used his quirk, but he was telling us to drop our wallets before he had to use it. I think I accidentally caught a mugger for you.”

The first police officer takes a good look at the guy after pulling off his hoodie, and there must have been other victims who got a better look at the guy. “Yeah, I’m hoping you did us a favor, kid. He didn’t threaten you at all?”

Mirio moves away so the second officer can take over the handcuffs, keeping his attention divided for the transfer. “Just with-”

“He ran at us,” the lady says, still clutching her purse. And still probably unaware that she didn’t have any issue standing on her ‘broken’ leg. “He threatened to use his quirk before that, then he started running at us, and who knows what kind of speed quirk he could have had, he could have just ran through us like mince meat!”

“I don’t have a speed quirk!” the mugger complains, turning his head uncomfortably far to look at the lady. Who was standing behind him. “It’s just my neck, that’s not threatening at all-”

“Threatening to use a dangerous quirk is still a threat,” the second officer says, before he starts leading the mugger to the car. “Kaito-”

“Do you have a hero license? Off duty?” the first officer asks, staring at Mirio. Cocking his head to the side as he looks like he wants to scold him, but he pulls off a pretty weak comparison to Aizawa.

“Provisional, but it’s temporarily suspended right now,” Mirio has to admit, still pulling out his wallet to show the officer. “I didn’t use my quirk to subdue him, sir, and I definitely wasn’t looking for trouble. Just wanted to make sure she got home safe, since she’s a little worried about the area.”

The officer just glances at his provisional license, writing down the name. “‘Mustafu.’ UA huh? Never heard about anyone getting ‘temporarily suspended,’ but I’ll take your word for it that you weren’t looking for trouble. Just don’t let me catch you playing hero without that license intact, alright?”

“Yes sir,” Mirio agrees, and decides to give him the report of the incident, since the lady seems just a little too shaken to do that. It’s understandable, civilians aren’t trained for this, and they should be shaken. They shouldn’t be used to it.

Mirio just feels like he can’t pull the smile off his face when the officers leave and they continue walking. Like it’s a lot more of a Lemillion smile.

“So, I guess that’s one less thing to worry about,” Mirio offers, even if he knows that’s just one mugger. Who didn't even have a dangerous quirk, it seemed to just let him turn his head around like an owl.

The lady has been holding onto his elbow too tight for a few paces, just staring at the ground, before she huffs. "'Temporarily suspended?' Did you... do something, or-"

"Oh, no," Mirio answers, laughing nervously at that. He's never heard of a suspension like that before, and that does sound suspicious. "It's kind of a funny story, but I kind of lost my quirk. In the 8 Precepts of Death raid. They had a quirk erasing bullet, and I kind of got shot with it, but there's a way to fix it and get it back. So, 'temporary.'"

The woman turns to look at him with a hard stare, her lips drawn tight like she's halfway angry about something. "The little girl, right? Eri. So you know about the other one."

Mirio just nods, not willing to talk about Shinsou with her. There's a lot of people in this world who don't deserve to get mugged or walk home afraid at night, and she's one of them. But he still doesn't want to hear her talk about Shinsou.

"He could probably use his quirk on her, and restore yours," the lady says, oddly avoiding Shinsou's name. Maybe it's just to keep him safe, to not say his name out loud on this street where they might not be alone. But he appreciates it for any reason.

"He could! But, that's not what I want. I don't want to use Eri like that, and I can afford to wait," Mirio says, and it's hardly a reminder to himself. Practically everyone tells him that he can wait, he'll still be an amazing hero even if he has to wait years, because he's still young. But that's not the reason he's waiting. "I don't want either of them to think that they have to do anything for me. I decided I wanted to help them, and what happened after that was on me."

He has monthly testing with Recovery Girl, waiting to see if there's a sign that his quirk factor wasn't Rewinded completely out of existence, but maybe just back to before it developed. Then, in four years, he'll have his quirk back anyway. At 22, he'll still be in great shape to be a hero if he keeps up with it. And if not, he imagines that he'll already be used to walking Eri to school in the morning and back.

At least, he hopes so. He can't really imagine that any other way. "I guess I... don't really get why it has to be harder for them, you know? They've been through a lot, and I think they've been through enough. Without anyone making them feel like they have to give up more, to deserve to be safe."

The lady looks at him, slow fear rising over her eyes, and Mirio throws both hands up in a panic.

"I didn't mean- I didn't really want to mention it, you know? I didn't say I'd walk you home and everything to try to...threaten you or anything, it's just..." Mirio runs a hand over the back of his neck, looking at the building to his left instead of at the woman who's on his right. The lady he can't really figure out. "It... kind of hurt, when he had to see Overhaul, you know? You probably don't know anything about the raid, but, I kind of blew it there. And I thought I could make it up to him, but the hits just... kept coming. And there's really nothing I can do."

What do you think you can possibly do without your quirk?

"I guess, what I didn't really want to say was... If you're doing stuff to make it harder for him, I'd rather you didn't. He's a really good kid, and he didn't deserve what he went through. And he doesn't deserve it from anyone else," Mirio says, forcing himself to look straight ahead, and ignore how his elbow almost feels like it's burning from where she's still clinging to him. He doesn't know if it helps, if she could possibly not know that Shinsou doesn't deserve to have to look at the guy who tortured him and Eri for years. That maybe the heroes shouldn't make Shinsou so afraid of the home he's barely gotten to know that he'd threaten to kill Midoriya to escape.

"He's a 'good kid,'" the lady says, softly at first, before she snorts. "Buddy, you're a nice guy, a really nice guy. But this 'good kid' has been doing violent, awful things for years. He brutalized police officers for weeks just for standing next to him, and even on the off-chance Eraserhead isn't hiding something like that happening at UA..."

Mirio knows he's not.

Well, other than the escape attempt, probably. And Mirio has heard that Shinsou has gotten into a few fights, but he didn't really hurt anyone. And Mirio knows from experience that Shinsou just kind of likes fighting, that he's only ever seen him so close to peaceful after they sparred together before he had to meet Chisaki. "There's nothing I can do. I work under the umbrella of Public Safety, that means I do my part to keep people safe. That means that whatever this kid knows, I need to know, and you can't tell me that the kid doesn't know that."

Mirio knows. And he knows very well why Shinsou is afraid to talk about it. "He's part of the public that needs to be safe."

"Not more than anyone else," she argues, and he feels her eyes on him, but chooses not to look at her, instead watching for the pedestrian crossing sign. "At least hundreds of lives are at stake, hundreds weighed next to one. What would a hero like you do in my shoes?"

Mirio just smiles, because he already knows. "Save the one. The one person I can see, who's right in front of me. Who needs my help, and I can help them. I've made that mistake before."

He could have grabbed Eri when they first met. Eri was clinging to Midoriya then, whimpering for help, clearly needed it. Mirio talked Midoriya down that time, because they didn't have enough intel, they didn't even know Chisaki like they did afterwards, and definitely didn't know at that meeting before the raid what that meant for Eri. The nightmares, the fear that almost smothered that little girl.

And she was still drowning in that fear when she reached out, and Mirio decided against action because he didn't have enough information to weigh his choice. Even knowing now that there were two, that Shinsou would have been left behind if they acted, he knows that Eri would have told them that, and helped them find him. "I know that's a hard decision, though. And I don't really blame you. But I think if you really knew Shinsou, he wouldn't be just a number to you."

Mirio smiles after they cross the crosswalk, just because it might be a little awkward if he doesn't. She's frowning to herself, and he can practically hear how loudly she's thinking that she didn't ask for the advice of someone younger than her, who doesn't even have a job and doesn't know her job. How naive and idealistic it must be to try to save people one by one, to save everyone that way.

That's what he used to think too. And maybe it's a little jaded of him to think that she's naive because of it.

She pulls him to stop in front of a building, which he realizes is an apartment complex when he looks up to see the name. "You should come inside to wait for your ride. It's just that, I'm not inviting you in for anything-"

"I have a boyfriend," Mirio says, laughing. Laughing and trying not to blush too much or feel weird about saying it for the first time. It just feels right as much as it feels new, it feels a little scary almost. He's felt this way about Tamaki for a while, but saying it and acting on it is just still new.

She narrows her eyes a little at him, before she opens the door, holding it out for him then heads to the elevator. "You probably shouldn't... You should probably watch who you say that around. I work closely with people on the Hero Commission. I know how some people are, in this day and age."

"I'm just guessing that you're not one of those people," Mirio says, with a shrug while he watches the elevator doors close in front of them, and she pushes the button for her floor. Mostly, he just doesn't think it matters what she thinks, or what anyone thinks, really. He knows he's a good hero, and that shouldn't matter to anyone.

He thinks she's just scared, of a lot of things. And in a funny way, as much as Shinsou has to fear, he's braver than she is.

Her apartment is at the end of the hall, and it's pretty nice for a one bedroom in Tokyo. It probably costs a lot of money because of that, because it's right in the middle of the business district, but Mirio feels a little envious of the spacious living room, since none of the apartments he looked at had half of the space. At least, the ones in his budget.

Yamada wanted him to go a bit out of his budget and insisted that he would help, but Mirio had to almost argue with him that he didn't need a lot of space. He still hasn't found one that he feels like he can see himself living in. Especially since almost all of them have strict pet restrictions.

After Mirio toes off his shoes, listening to the lady talk to a taxi dispatch, he sees a ball of fuzz come out of the kitchen to start yowling at him, and he almost laughs.

This lady has a cat.

She definitely hasn't spent any time around Shinsou if she hasn't found a kindred soul. Even though Mirio prefers dogs, he likes cats, and he could tell just by looking at Shinsou that he liked cats too.

Since Mirio likes cats, and figures that with the eight hour drive and possibly more before that, this fluffy guy is probably hungry, he starts poking around the cabinets to see if he can find their dinner. The lady catches him doing it, and after explaining that he figured the cat was hungry, she just sighs.

And pulls out the refrigerated cat food. She not only likes cats, but makes sure to feed her cat the good stuff. "It'll be here in about 15 minutes, and the driver will call me when he's here. They're the most reputable taxi service in town, but... I'm sure you can handle yourself if there's any trouble."

Mirio just laughs again, remembering the mugger. Remembering how it felt to remember that he was a hero, that he could take care of himself.

What he can do without his quirk.

"Yeah, I definitely prefer a nice, simple ride, but I can take care of it if it's not," Mirio says, watching her dish out the food and run a hand over her cat's fluffy coat. "What's their name?"

"Cheerio," she says, like there's a story behind it, and there usually is with pet names. But when she stands up, she looks like she's going to explain it, before her eyes go wide at him. "Wow, I never got your name! What on earth am I- I'm sorry, this week has been a mess--"

“It’s okay!” Mirio says, trying not to laugh too hard at the conundrum he’s been trying to fix for hours. “It’s Togata Mirio, nice to meet you.”

“Saito Hikaru,” Saito answers, before she crosses her arms, staring at him. “What’s your other one? Your hero name.”

Mirio just smiles, and feels it this time. “Lemillion.”

*

Yamada has been eying the time for the last eight hours, and now with half an hour to spare before his family comes back home, he’s on his way back to welcome them.

He has an armful with the tank that Fishio and Fishie call home, though the two goldfish have seen some new sights this weekend from the common room of the 1-A dorm where they definitely couldn’t be neglected, with Eri’s little beansprout Beanie precariously stacked on top. With the freezing weather, Yamada makes a quick step to the dorm, and thinks that at least Fishio and Fishie will appreciate the warmth of the kotatsu from the familiar top of it.

With Beanie back on its rightful place on the windowsill, Yamada finds himself waiting for the same kind of feeling. Like everything is back in place, like everyone is home where they belong, and every inch of that attack on campus can start fading away over time.

Yamada lets himself check everything over one more time, looking at empty bedrooms that he hopes will look more lived in and less empty in just a matter of time. He’d probably have gone crazy waiting in such a quiet and empty place, and thankfully, the 1-A dorm has been anything but.

Except for a few hours after the traitor was escorted away. After the kerfuffle of that, things were quiet for a while, a bigger blow to a group of kids who were already silently dealing with the stress of Friday night’s events.

And one of their own will probably draw Shouta away soon enough.

Even if that student was the traitor, he knows his husband won’t see it that simply. The traitor was his student, and it will take a while for that hurt to surface, for Shouta to even let himself see it. It hurts worse, knowing his informant was involved, and especially with how ‘Shiori’ is doing these days.

When the door finally opens, Yamada sprints towards the door, in time to hear the name he had no idea he could miss so much. “YAMA!”

“Eri!” Yamada calls back, spreading his arms and taking advantage of the doorway gathering everyone together to sweep his family into a desperately needed hug. Hitoshi had Eri cuddled up in his arms, and Shouta was probably trying to retreat, but he should know better. Yamada squeezes them all together and feels like he can’t quite squeeze hard enough to shake off the days they’ve been gone, especially when Shouta’s arm winds around his back and Hitoshi’s does too.

Hitoshi is not really a hugger, but that’s just a sign that he was missing him pretty hard too. And the Eri necklace dangling around Yamada’s neck is a pretty good sign that as fun as a trip to the mountains was, everyone is glad to be home.

But when Yamada pulls back, Eri necklace still holding on, he opens his mouth to get everyone in before the Eri Report starts off, but looks down to see that Hitoshi has a splint and a crutch and wants that report first. “What happened?”

Yamada's voice is flat enough that Shouta knows there's a threat behind it, and Hitoshi tries to tuck his crutch under his elbow to explain before Shouta catches that. "My grandfather took him to the traps, and Hitoshi was injured in a leg snare. It's just a sprain."

There's a weird little look between his husband and ward, almost a glare trading back and forth, but both of them have that kind of 'soft glare' going on like it's mostly for show. And Yamada realizes what happened.

They bonded.

Hitoshi is just so very much like that teenage Shouta that Yamada witnessed for himself, in so many different ways, and he's known this day would happen. Shouta would finally stick around the kid long enough to see it, and probably hate it, but with three days trapped in a cabin with a crazy third party they'd both probably grow to hate, Shouta might have already gotten over that and just accepted who Hitoshi is, Shouta-parts and all.

And Yamada needs to hear about all of that. "Hitoshi has a crutch, a sprain, and you have a beard."

It looks horrific.

This is not just the five o'clock shadow growing into scruff, or the scruff that's a day too long, this is a beard. It's thick enough to cover his jaw, there is a nearly solid covering of black hair all over the bottom of Shouta's face. He needs a razor, stat, and Yamada fully intends to give him that barber session before he gets a kiss that he's needed the past three days.

"Yama," Eri says, before she takes a deep, audible breath. "We drove for a really long time with Gummy and Gummy is different now, he's really big and squishy, and Emi and Neji and Tami and me had sleepovers every night, and Mirio and Tama are gonna get married!"

Yamada was definitely there for the Fat Gum reveal, even if he was criminally unaware of how Eri found out how 'squishy' he is, and it's not too hard to guess that a girl's only sleepover might have happened. But Mirio and Amajiki getting together, in some fashion that an almost-6 year old little girl would take as 'getting married.'

It's not surprising, but a little sudden, and a little concerning that 'something' happened while those two adult students were barely supervised off-campus. Yamada looks at his husband, and sees a blank look in answer that he can read as 'I don't know either, but I'm less concerned.'

'Eri flower girl,' Hitoshi adds, which is a detail that makes sense except for every way it doesn't. Maybe Eri still thought that just exchanging 'I love you's meant that two people were getting married, even if that is something that must have happened quickly. Still, even that's not terribly surprising.

"Well, I'm very happy for Mirio and Amajiki," Yamada says, wondering how exactly he can ask about that in a text message to Mirio. "And I'm very happy that everyone is back home where they belong. We've got a nice dinner to talk about our adventures over, and some nice hot showers for everyone who didn't have that luxury."

Hitoshi nearly sags with relief at that, even if Shouta can't bring himself to show he cares. Even if he doesn't, he should. Yamada doesn't know if the 'no indoor plumbing' meant no baths or just cold ones, Yamada is decently sure he didn't pack any soap, and quite sure that Shouta's grandfather doesn't have any on hand.

And with Eri kicking to get down and follow Hitoshi to the bathroom, probably to camp out in front of the door to babble to him or at least maintain the meter distance that she can tolerate after missing him for days, Yamada tugs his husband to their bathroom to make sure he's nice and clean.

Even if he has to put up with a nasty beard kiss as soon as they're alone in there. "Ugh, why didn't I pack your electric razor? It's soft and prickly."

Shouta just hums as he strips, and Yamada leans on the counter finding himself doing a too-common analysis of his husband's body, not just admiring but seeing if there's any bangs or bruises he might be trying to ignore. "I wouldn't have had time to use it. Your ward demanded a lot of my attention."

Despite that blow, that little jab that Yamada wants to answer to with a reminder that Hitoshi definitely deserved some attention after having to fight for his life and having that mask locked on his face on UA's campus, he finds himself fighting a tight smile. Because 'your ward' sounds a whole lot like 'your son,' and no matter what Hitoshi might have done to instigate that, Yamada won't be able to be unhappy about it.

Shouta almost groans when he steps under the hot spray, drawing the curtain around just to keep the water from dripping onto the floor, definitely not because he's hiding anything Yamada hasn't seen. Very recently. "Even with a sprained ankle, he can climb a tree to avoid me. Despite being terrified that he's going to get attacked again, he's also very intent on not being in a place where he can be guarded. He's also been spending too much time with Bakugo, and got drunk last night with my grandfath-"

"What?!" Yamada says, throwing back the curtain because he's sure Shouta is going to be wearing that shit-eating grin just to pull his leg, but he's not. And maybe Yamada missed the sight of his husband not wearing anything but that exhausted look and a few soap suds in his hair.

"My grandfather was under the impression that sake was an anxiety reducer," Shouta says, and the 'grandfathers' are weird enough, especially how he says them. Especially how he still hasn't gotten into how painful this weekend was for him, to be forced in close proximity with the old man. "He also listens to your radio show. And approves, now."

"What." Again, that's really all Yamada can say about it. The guy who chased them halfway down a mountain with a crossbow after going into 'How dare you's and 'Get the hell off of my mountain' and 'You show your face again, I'll cut and dress you,' which certainly didn't leave any room for being a fan of the show, now approves.

"He thought I would only get married in a shotgun wedding at the time. He doesn't like change, or being wrong," Shouta says, with a shrug while he continues to lather his hair. While Yamada still feels the urge to take over there, even if that means he'll either be soaking wet or quite distracted from making a meal for everyone. "But, he approves. And Hawks has apparently been making regular trips to see him. They're friends."

Yamada should probably be concerned that the homophobic hermit not being homophobic is rocking his world a bit more than the number two hero in Japan stopping by to 'befriend' an elderly squatter. "Why."

Shouta pauses his rinsing to open an eye at him, a look that doesn't bode well. "I have no idea. And The Commission also has a tracker implanted in Hitoshi's ankle. Hawks tracked him down, and knows that we've taken him off campus before. There won't be any fall-out from that, but next time, Endeavor is supposedly going to have a talk with us."

Yamada will have plenty to say if Endeavor wants to tell them how to take care of a child.

“Hitoshi told me what he knows about Miasma’s location. And The Commission will be aware of that break in the case soon,” Shouta says, even if he doesn’t say how or specifics, he’s definitely not happy about sharing that detail with The Commission. Before he could even get started on working with that. “Who was it?”

Shouta leans down to cut his barely-more-than-military-style shower off, probably because he’s eager to know. He deserves to know. Yamada knows he’s been agonizing over that question all weekend after going dark, having to leave behind his phone.

And Yamada has been dreading the fact that he has to tell him. “Hawks said they were hospitalized. I need to know-”

“Whoa, that’s.” Not untrue, but definitely diabolically misleading, and absolutely horrible for his husband’s scorched nerves. “Inpatient at a hospital for a nervous breakdown, last I heard. It happened yesterday, so they’re still trying to sort things out. The family just went AWOL, left her at the police station, even when they got the call that... it wasn’t what it seemed like.”

It’s almost worse than what Yamada imagined, seeing Shouta’s face right now. His eyes pleading to know, even if the pain everywhere else makes Yamada want to stop. To just tell him to leave it, she was his student but she made her choice, and apparently it was made before she became his student. She enrolled under the League’s instructions.

“Beard. Come on,” Yamada says, because getting Shouta to wrap a towel around himself and sit on the toilet seat will be a good enough way to make him sit down for this. Working on that beard will give Yamada something to do with his hands, and plenty of reason not to see his husband’s heart shattering to pieces. “She was working with Shiori for a while before all of this. Took the entrance exam because the League wanted to hire someone to ‘get information about All Might.’ She told them where she was at USJ, summer camp. Helped Shiori get into the security system to bring it down. Find where Hitoshi was that night.”

Yamada gets half of the beard back to normal length with the electric razor, all the prickly trimmings falling on the floor so he can sweep it up later. He still feels like this deserves a shave.

If this is going to be the last time that Shouta sees his student. “Shiori turned herself in right after the arrest. Turned over everything she had on Miasma, the League of Villains, which wasn’t much. At least on the League. They, uh. Attacked in transit, when they were taking Shiori to a high security prison. Shiori’s....”

Yamada swallows, pausing to look around for the shaving cream, the razor, which are just sitting on the counter exactly where he put them. He doesn’t like to think about how long Shouta has worked with Shiori, how that absolutely dysfunctional working relationship is still going to hurt when it has to end like this.

“Not going to recover. Sansa’s hoping you know anyone who might want to... be there,” Yamada says, a hand on Shouta’s shoulder when he starts to stand up, when he knows his husband doesn’t even want to speak the words that he has to be there, if no one else will.

No one deserves to die alone. Even the real traitor of UA.

“Let me do this,” Yamada whispers, squeezing a bit harder than he wants because he doesn’t want Shouta to run off again. Even if he’s known since everything that had already crashed down started setting itself on fire, he’s still not prepared to let go again.

Maybe it's selfish, that he wants to keep his husband home because he missed him so bad in the span of three days, when his husband needs to see to a student that is exiting his class in the absolute worst way and a crazy, criminal mastermind of an informant is dying slowly as they speak, with not a single soul to be there through it.

But if Shouta is going to say farewell in two painful ways, he'll look his best for it. Even if Yamada has to wrangle him into it.

*

"My horn's still not shrinking," Eri says, still on the other side of the shower curtain where Hitoshi finally allowed her to be, when she kept opening the door to talk. Hitoshi just hums, trying to cling to what she's saying about her horn, lowering himself another inch but still too far from the bathwater to rinse his hair.

It's just a bath. He could take a shower, if he's a coward. If he wants to keep being afraid of different forms of water. If he wants to keep smelling bleach where it isn't, hearing Hari's voice or feeling his presence behind the shower curtain where he's not.

Maybe he does want that. A familiar terror. Something to make him uneasy when it's too easy to fall into comfort and warmth with Yamada, seeing him again. Feeling like there's nothing that can hurt him now.

Hitoshi knows too well that's not true. He can't risk getting comfortable so easily in this place.

It's better for his ankle anyway. "Twenny, what's your quirk feel like when you use it?"

Hitoshi leans far enough back to scrub the shampoo out of the back of his hair, what will be the worst part. His ears are still out of the water, and he feels the strain in his neck and hears it in his voice when he answers. "A string. Sometimes. I can pull it, and make someone go under my quirk. Why."

"Are you okay-" Eri's small hand makes a shadow on the curtain, and Hitoshi pulls a hand to the edge to keep it closed.

"I'm fine, Eri. I'm old enough that you can't see me bathing, remember?" Hitoshi reminds, an honestly exhausting argument he didn't want to have when Eri was weirdly insistent that it would be fair, since he bathed her when she was younger. He doesn't remember being curious about other people's bodies, since he saw the basics of different anatomy in 10's textbooks. The child development books said it was normal to be curious, but didn't really say how to stop that.

Eri seems to sit back down with an irritated huff, but the silence doesn't last for long. "Yo-yo said that quirks feel different to people. Like his quirk is a wave, and imagining stuff helps you use your quirk. And I wanna use it."

Hitoshi hums again, lowering himself into the warm water so he can wash his hair quickly. He doesn't want to risk not hearing whatever else Eri has to say, and the soap is starting to itch on his scalp.

He barely notices that his hair feels softer under the water before he realizes he hasn't breathed in too long, his chest aching with it. He knows how to swim underwater, and a bath doesn't need that.

He still doesn't breathe until he's sitting up, chasing every droplet off of his face and out of his hair with shaking hands. "You just. Have to use it. So you know what it feels like. Aizawa can help with that."

“How did you do it?” Eri asks, as Hitoshi starts to wash his arms and chest, quicker than he probably should. He just wants to get out of here, and can’t fight the urgency.

He can’t really answer Eri’s question either. “I just... knew how. My quirk is easier to use. Just trained with it, and I learned how.”

He remembers how much his jaw would shake when Bug first started opening the mask for that, how he’d stuttered differently, how it would even hurt sometimes if he had to talk for too long. How he felt relieved when the mask closed again. “I wish my quirk was easy to use like yours. I could train and fix Mirio’s quirk faster.”

Hitoshi splashes water on himself quickly, pulling the plug out of the drain as he stands, almost forgetting his ankle before the pain reminds him to steady himself with a hand on the wall. “It’s better if it’s not easy.”

He still can’t bring himself to talk to Yamada.

He knows he’ll have to. He knows that even if Aizawa said that his quirk won’t work, that if it didn’t work on Eri through the radio then it won’t work on Yamada when he’s wearing hearing aids, it’s just so much more than that. He doesn’t want to talk to Yamada, even if he can’t use his quirk on him, it’s close enough to doing it. Talking is his quirk, and he knows it doesn’t matter if he doesn’t want to. He’ll still be forced to. Soon.

He doesn’t know if he can, when it comes to that. He doesn’t know what will happen when Aizawa tells Yamada he can talk, and he still doesn’t talk to Yamada. But he can’t bring himself to just avoid that outcome and talk to Yamada.

It’s just terrifying. Thinking about it makes him feel like cold lightning is setting his nerves on fire from the pit of his stomach, it feels like the worst hesitation in a fight. It feels like it won’t end, even if he manages to talk to Yamada, and it makes him feel like he never can. That the mask will trap his breath and smother him if he tries.

Hitoshi reaches out to grab the towel behind the curtain as the water drains around his feet, finally feeling relief as he rubs his face dry then his hair, spending too much time trying to wring his hair out before he gives up on that and moves on.

He’s not as thin as he used to be. It’s almost weird to see how much his arms have give when he presses down on his skin. He doesn’t have muscle built up the same, almost obscene way that the hero students or most Numbers do, but he can feel it beneath his fingers when he presses down. When he looks at the broken black band tattooed on his arm.

He remembers what his number used to look like. When he traces the edge of the ‘2’ hiding under all that black, he can almost see it clearly.

When he looks down at his chest, he stops to pick at what he sees, what he thought was just somehow some shorter hairs from the back of his neck that had gotten stuck on his chest. But among the scars are purple hairs sticking out, scattered and starting to curl. Not the weirdly thick amount of hair that Aizawa has on his chest, and definitely not as long. They don’t seem to grow from the scar tissue.

He’d look weird if he grows as much chest hair as Aizawa has, with all the empty patches to break up the purple. Maybe he should shave his chest, if it ever starts to look like that. “I’m getting-Eri!”

He pulls the towel around himself, even if he just saw her starting to peek, she probably hadn’t seen him. She better not have. “It’s not fair! You always help me take a bath, and you didn’t let me help at all!”

“I’m done with my bath, and I’m getting out, so I need you to leave,” Hitoshi says, rubbing a hand down his face as he tried to convince himself that she hadn’t seen him naked. But he still doesn’t hear her leaving. “Eri. It’ll only take a minute.”

He hears Eri huff, before the door opens and closes. And he waits.

Before he pulls the curtain aside just enough for him to peek around it, and see Eri standing in front of the door, suddenly stricken with wide eyes as she was found out. “Eri.”

“You’re mean!” Eri yells, stomping as she actually leaves, and Hitoshi caught a glimpse of Yamada walking down the hall just in time to hear Eri’s complaints. “Yama, Toshi won’t let me see him when he’s taking a bath, and that’s not fair, ‘cause he always...”

Eri’s voice trails off behind the door as she follows Yamada down the hall, and Hitoshi can hear Yamada’s voice answering her, soothing her from anger to whines, and down to quiet acceptance while he gets dressed. Hitoshi stares in the mirror when he’s done, bracing his arms on the counter. Wondering if he could just stay in this muggy bathroom and listen to Yamada’s voice, instead of leaving and having to look at him.

Instead of bearing the weighted expectation of Yamada’s green eyes, his fake to sincere smiles, and what words he’d use to say that it’s fine, that Hitoshi can talk to him. They won’t give him a mask, he won’t get hurt, he can just talk to Yamada.

Hitoshi runs a hand through the hair on the back of his head, dropping his head to stare at the counter. The tile is definitely easier to face than that.

But there’s a pull in his chest that makes him forget about fear, about expectation and complication, and he turns to open the door and practically announce that he’s done hiding, when he isn’t.

Because he just wants to be close to Yamada again, no matter what that feels like. Because he can’t stand this horrible ache of missing him any longer.

*

Yamada tried not to pry. Tried not to startle this. Even when he wrangled one or a few of the herolets into cooking with him over the weekend, it just didn’t feel as right as working with his favorite little sous chef Hitoshi.

Who had sprained his ankle in a leg snare, tried to avoid Shouta as much as he could, got drunk last night, and had apparently taken a bath just recently.

A bath. Not a shower, which he had to clarify with the little bean along with trying to clarify that while being curious about what other people looked like naked was normal, peeping is not too swell and Aunt Nemmie was going to explain some things for her later.

But Hitoshi, who has plenty of reasons to see baths as a trigger and avoid them, had taken a bath and if Yamada didn’t know it from Eri, he wouldn’t have guessed.

Except for maybe these little ‘leans’ that Yamada is definitely leaning into.

At first, Yamada thought Hitoshi was just trying to keep his weight off of his sprained ankle, and Yamada tried to excuse him to sit at the table because of that, not terribly passionately, and was immediately turned down. But he noticed that it just seemed like he had a certain gravitational pull for his ward, as it didn't matter which side he was standing on, Hitoshi was just leaning towards him a little bit.

And a few times, the lean ended with their elbows touching, or their arms, but as Yamada started serving everything on Eri-approved plates, he noticed a lean becoming an actual lean, as Hitoshi's upper arm rested against his, until his head found rest on Yamada's shoulder.

And he might have 'fixed up' the plates a little longer than he had to after that, picking at the sides to make everything presentable. Not really wanting a reason to pull away from that.

But eventually, the three of them sat down for a good meal, with his husband absent. Missed, of course, but Yamada found it easier to distract himself from that with two kiddos who had a wild weekend without him. Hitoshi let Eri do the bulk of the talking, and Yamada had heard practically every little detail that Eri could possibly remember about snow bunnies and hero training and the new and exciting Ketsubutsu students and their antics before he could pester Hitoshi into joining in.

Hitoshi saw a few animals, did listen to his show and liked the song he picked for him, did admit he found 'Zawa Coffee' annoying sometimes, and did not mention the alcohol at all.

Yamada found it a little easier to hear Hitoshi's version of events, and he knew there was probably a guilty-teenager shaped reason for it. But given that it was a one-off thing that he trusts Shouta has handled, and definitely didn't want to bring up that lecture in front of a little bean, he let it slide.

"Well, I just sat at the dorm missing you guys all weekend. The herolets were making fun of me for crying beside the window, they're so mean," Yamada says, even if that's not quite what happened. He kept the tears inside, and it seems to have paid off with herolets that didn't have to deal with anymore stress and a family that returned to him happy and intact.

"That's mean!" Eri chirps in, coming to his defense, and he absolutely loves his pint-sized defender who's picking around the garlic-y veggies she doesn't seem to be a fan of. Yamada knows he'll never stop being a fan of Hitoshi not only eating enough for a clean plate, but going back to pick up a few seconds of his favorite sides still resting on the stove. Like a teenager, with an appetite to match.

"They are mean! They bullied me all weekend, just because I'm not the wards they were looking for," Yamada says, and that's a little true. Monoma had an especially sour look when he dropped by on Saturday morning and heard that the wards were not in the building, and would not be in the building until Tuesday. "I think they'll be very happy to see you guys tomorrow morning, worrying their poor little herolet hearts out all weekend. And I think there's even a cake saved for someone too!"

Sato and Ashido defended that sugary sweet from too many herolets who had a moment of weakness when faced with the temptation of stress eating, but Yamada is sure that it will pay off. A coffee flavored cake from Sato's more than capable hands will certainly boost Hitoshi's mood tomorrow morning, and might even make up for the hysterics that are sure to come when the hero students have to make sure their wards are okay.

Hitoshi seems to have done the same math that Yamada has with the reminder, already looking exhausted at the thought. It might be better for him to jump on his phone and assure his friends that he's alive and well, and won't appreciate the trouble that they'll probably still give him. "Speaking of, you guys should probably get to bed pretty soon, it's getting a little later than usual."

It's closing in towards midnight, which will definitely be bad for a little bean who usually arises earlier than his favorite listener, and Yamada makes the executive decision while he cleans up the table that his little bean will need to sleep in a bit. He hears the sounds of teeth brushing down the hall, and Eri possibly describing the accommodations for that from her own cabin stay, which he knows will be very exciting for her to think back on for a while.

Before he hears Eri get a whole lot more excited. "Twenny! You got Yama hair!"

Yamada barely remembers to turn off the faucet but gives up on not sprinting down the hall, because this might be it. This might be the real deal, the real thing. His son, entering the final stages of puberty and springing closer to adulthood, growing his first facial hair.

It might be that all-too-common not-peach-fuzz patch that starts from the corner of the upper lip and then grows out, and it might have had to grow for a while with how pale Hitoshi's purple hair is. Yamada knows that he didn't notice his own first mustache until it started tickling his lip, being blonde and all.

And Yamada makes it to the doorway to see Eri watching in awe, sitting on the counter while Hitoshi pulls around at his face, looking in the mirror for any other 'weird hairs' that he was unaware of before. Yamada's too far away to see the 'Yama mustache,' and that's criminal, but Hitoshi's hand pauses under his chin like he found another one.

And Yamada is there just in time, to watch in horror as Hitoshi tries to pluck it between his fingers with a glare, before he notices Yamada in the mirror, pulling a mix of shock and guilt at the intrusion. Yamada can see in the mirror that his own expression might inspire the guilt. "Whoa, no need for plucking! We can have a little lesson on how to handle a razor-"

Yamada's hand almost flies to his mouth, just pulling on his own mustache, because he's going to teach his son how to shave.

"Uh-" Yamada clears his throat, trying to fight the tears as he glances down the hall, and tries to remember how to use a razor even if he gave Shouta a neat shave just a few hours ago. "Let's see what we've got here."

Yamada walks closer to Hitoshi, who frowns not quite at him, but doesn't seem to think that this new sign of maturity is any fun. Yamada sees a few sparse purple hairs right at the corners of his lip, just as he thought, so few that he can count them. And about three on his jaw, just stubble starting to poke through.

"You sure you want to shave? You could grow it out since you're not in school, rock the 'stache or the scruff-" Yamada stops the teasing when he sees another soft glare directed at his chest and two defiant fingers making their way to the chin again.

Yamada tries - and fails - to see the determination in destroying the scruff while the mustache apparently deserves to live, as anything other than a sign that the mustache might win out in a few years. Maybe Hitoshi would even trim it up like his.

Yamada has to distract himself with fetching the shaving cream from his and Shouta's bathroom along with the razor and aftershave lotion, wiping a few tears from the corner of his eye at the thought. But when he gets back, he still sees an Eri parked on the counter, and she's quite interested in learning the sacred art of facial hair grooming. "So, first you'll want to get your face wet, it'll help the shaving cream lather up and get another layer between you and the razor. A little warm, but not too much or it might sting a bit, might cut yourself easier."

There's a weird half-eyeroll that Hitoshi directs into the mirror when he turns on the faucet before he cups the water around the bottom half of his face, and Yamada isn't sure if he's just annoyed about not being allowed to pluck himself, or if there's a silent little barb about getting a cut and subsequent new scar to his face.

Yamada appreciates that it's silent, since he won't forget the sight of that horrible black mask coming off of his ward's face anytime soon. "Then, shake up the cream and spritz a dollop in your hand. You can just get full coverage this time, it's good practice! Might trim down a few other little hairs that you haven't spotted yet."

Hitoshi gets excellent coverage on the cheeks and chin, that part is very thorough. Yamada has to bite his lip not to giggle, because even if it's clear to see that Shouta came back from that trip begrudgingly more fond of his ward, the feeling is quite adolescently not mutual.

"And then just gently shave down, with the 'grain,' cleaning up with each little stroke. That way it's harder to cut yourself, gentler on the skin," Yamada says, watching Hitoshi turn on the faucet then turn his attention to the task. The first stroke on his cheek is too gentle to clear away the bottom half of the shaving cream, but Hitoshi still rinses and tries again. Yamada just cheerleads silently, alongside Eri who still seems enraptured by it all.

Until a stroke barely starts before it earns a wince, and Yamada remembers Hitoshi's face isn't exactly easy terrain to start with. Hitoshi washes the razor but his hands drop in the sink at the bit of blood welling up, his expression dropping too, into defeat.

"Ah, always get a nick the first few times, let me--"

'It's fine,' Hitoshi signs with too-quick movements, awkward with the razor in his hand, wetting a hand to clean away that blood, but then he starts washing away the shaving cream.

"Hey, hey, it is fine," Yamada says, a hand feather light on Hitoshi's shoulder when he reaches around him, between the teen and the sink to awkwardly pull a classic pinch of toilet paper off. And when he pulls back to look at the kid, he sees defeat written on his face. Which Yamada decorates with a bit of paper to soak up that spot of blood. "Want me to show you?"

Hitoshi doesn't look at him when he nods, but does so jerkily. Yamada smiles even if he doesn't see it, guiding his kid just another step back so he can get access to the running water. He runs the clean razor gently across Hitoshi's cheek, not surprised that it doesn't catch on anything thicker than peach fuzz. And he carefully avoids the raised edges of those scars.

"My moms arm-wrestled over who got to give me the first shave," Yamada says, noticing that Hitoshi is struggling to find a comfortable place to look other than the loudmouth in front of him. "It was a little different for me, since I decided I wanted to shave my legs as soon as they got a little bushy. Most guys don't bother with that, and it's perfectly fine for a girl not to go through the hassle either!"

It'll be a few years before peach fuzz turns to a razor argument for the little bean, but it's best to start on that early, before peer pressure gets there first.

"And my mother won, so me, her, and a bottle of shaving cream had my legs de-bushified just in time for swimsuit season. But, that meant that when this little mustache started up when I was in high school, my poor mom insisted that it was her turn," Yamada says, laughing under his breath at the memory of his dear mom, barely tall enough to come to the middle of his chest at that point, having to sit on the counter just to reach.

And Hitoshi's eager help by turning up his chin to get those offensive little hairs underneath.

"The angle was not great, and the razor was not new. I had more nicks than hairs I started out with, and that was not a good look for me."

Shouta asked if he got in a cat fight. With a cat.

Yamada, with all the intelligence of an incredibly embarrassed and flustered teenager, not only agreed but elaborated on the completely fictional events. How he had tried to fetch a stray from behind a dumpster, tried luring it out with different types of food, how the cat suddenly charged and dug its claws in and Yamada had to use his quirk to pry it off of his face and get the bloodshed to stop.

Shouta gave him the cold shoulder for two days. On behalf of the fictional cat that he thought Yamada had cruelly abused in that elaborate lie. Admitting that the whole thing was fake was almost the worst part of Yamada's high school experience.

"But, it was nice. I didn't have the traditional 'dad teaches you how to shave' thing, but I don't feel like I missed out at all. My moms knew how to shave, and doing it like this is kind of..." Yamada trails off when he swipes at the razor with his thumb to clear off the remains of that baby mustache, not sure how entirely to put it. "It's like one of those last steps of being a kid, getting taken care of and groomed like that. A little more independence once you learn how to do it."

Yamada checks his work before he starts on the other cheek, but happens to catch a look in his ward's eye that seems a bit panicked at that, as much as saddened. Yamada almost didn't want to say anything, because he knows that Hitoshi hasn't had the usual care that he deserved, that this 'last' thing is probably the 'first' thing for him.

"But, it's not like that's the end of that, you know? I'll be happy to be your barber, little listener. Hair care comes with a shave every time, on the house at Yamada's Boutique Salon," Yamada says, before he risks ruining how Hitoshi's shoulders have finally relaxed, and his eyes are back to half-lidded. "After all, Shouta's been growing hair for almost two decades, and I don't think he's shaved himself once. He'd have a full beard if I wasn't there to stop it."

"A Santa beard!" Eri says, with plenty of enthusiasm for the concept. One that Yamada hopes Shouta doesn't hear about, because he knows Shouta would argue that it would be fitting for the season.

"Exactly! We've just gotten undeniable proof that Shou can't shave himself," Yamada says with one more swipe before he leans away for Hitoshi to rinse himself off, and Yamada is grateful that he doesn't seem to look in the mirror to see the shaving cream still resting over his scars.

At first, it was like they weren't there at all, but now Yamada knows exactly what's hiding under the shaving cream.

"Now, we can finish up with the lotion, re-hydrate the skin because taking away that hair was a little rough for it," Yamada says, handing over the little lotion pump and watching Hitoshi pull a face at the first minty jolt of it. "There's some aftershave that has alcohol in it, but that stuff stings so bad, and it's pretty awful to dry out after all that washing."

The word 'alcohol' has a little echo in Yamada's ear after he says it, and he doesn't like that he might have to talk about it with Hitoshi so they can have it out in the open, so Yamada can know that's not going to be a thing with his kid.

But Hitoshi works the lotion in, fingers trailing lightly over the incomparable feeling of smooth that comes after a good shave. Definitely a little awed by it, by the way his eyes widen just a bit.

Before he double-checks his chin and jaw, and Yamada wonders if it's ever going to stop being funny. Hitoshi thinks he hates Shouta that much, to be so worried about having the same kind of facial hair.

“Well, at least there's one guy who likes a clean shave around here,” Yamada jokes, because while he likes a clean shave, he likes it on his husband. His own mustache is an undeniable look, and it suits him. He's also pretty sure he'd never even out the tan line if he did shave it off, after this many years of careful maintenance.

Yamada starts to excuse himself so that two kids who need a good night's rest can get to getting it again, but he happens to hover a little at the doorway, and feels a solid little ‘lean’ slowly morph into something else.

At first, it's just Hitoshi's arm pressing against the side of his chest, something he almost instinctively moves away from to give the kid space, but then the shoulder follows, and with a little turn, there's a kid gently pressed against his chest, the arms at his side not quite making it a hug.

But it's an invitation for one, and if Hitoshi needs to learn the sacred art of the casual hug, Yamada is the right guy for the job.

*

Hitoshi slowly pulls himself away from Eri while she sleeps, and unfortunately the softness of her bed seems to make her follow him, following the dip in the mattress. But eventually, he's able to get on his feet, and limp to the window.

His own room doesn't have a window, which was why he was fine with sleeping in Eri's room tonight. From what he can see of the wall outside, it looks like it will be difficult to climb down or up without rope, and three stories will be difficult to land, especially with his ankle still injured.

He starts opening the window, before the cold air reminds him. He doesn't have shoes, and wearing pajamas will make the trek agonizing. He might freeze to death before he gets to the dorm.

And he'd have to keep the window open if he snuck out this way, which would make Eri cold. So he shuts it, and slowly and silently leaves Eri's room to see if Yamada is in his room or not.

Yamada is on the couch, on his phone, and unfortunately in the living room which means that Hitoshi can't sneak out the front door without being noticed. It's a long shot, but he might have to try a different plan. The worst that Yamada would do is tell him ‘no.’

But Hitoshi doubts it. “Hey, little listener, can't sleep?”

Hitoshi shakes his head, and hates this habit of breathing in like he's going to say something. It's become a habit from spending so much time with Aizawa, from talking so much. Despite how he does it, a pang of cold fear cuts through him every time he does it in front of Yamada. ‘Know it's late. Can I see hero students? Very quick.’

Hitoshi signs the last part as quick as he promises to be, biting the inside of his lip because he knows Yamada is going to say no. It's late, he has to face them at school in a few hours anyway, but there are things he has to say before school and he can't say them over the chat. The chat that imploded so many times before he finally was able to check if any of them were awake.

To find out that one of them wouldn't be there, something that Yamada knew and didn't tell him. And the reasons why he wouldn't.

"It's definitely after curfew for them," Yamada says, which is almost a 'no,' but it's not. Yamada's green eyes seem so much clearer in this light, after too long that Hitoshi hasn't seen him, and how Yamada seems both familiar and strange because of that. "But they probably promised to meet you downstairs anyway."

Hitoshi nods, because they did. Some of them bragged that All Might wouldn't scold them, and Sero mentioned that Iida wouldn't be awake to know, which seemed to wake him up to tell all of them not to do it. 'Can't sleep until I see them. Will be quick.'

Yamada slowly nods at that, not happy, but he seems to accept the urgency. Even if Hitoshi is being misleading about why it's urgent. "Alright, but you definitely need to bundle up, and take the crutch. I'll walk with you—"

'It's-' Hitoshi stops himself mid-sign, because 'It's fine' never seems to work for him anymore. Yamada always takes it as the opposite. 'Rather alone. If okay. Will be quick.'

Yamada almost seems sad about that, but leans back on the couch and allows it. "Alright, but in 30 minutes I'll be calling a search party. It's late and freezing, and all."

'And all' is his still sprained ankle, infuriating and insulting because Hitoshi has had worse. It's not even broken, but every aggravating twinge calls him weak, and reminds him that he's usually healed by this point.

Hitoshi pulls a thick jacket over his clothes, and a scarf, and knows it's not worth the hassle to change into thicker pants. He puts one shoe on, the splint won't go over the other, and takes the crutch when Yamada gives it to him. Yamada seems to hover in the open door, to make sure he won't turn back around, and he won't.

Hitoshi walks through the snow once he gets outside, irritated with every single fucking twinge. How his arm seems to ache and chafe no matter how he holds the crutch under his arm, how the crutch seems useless until he tries not to use it. It's frustrating.

And when he finally gets to the 1-A dorm, Bakugo is the one scowling at the door to invite him inside. "What the fuck happened to your foot? Did you break a toe when you were running away from help like a dumbass?"

It's especially irritating that Bakugo doesn't sound mad, even when he slaps Hitoshi's arm. Hitoshi ignores him, walking into the common room to see most but not all of the hero students. All of them look tired, but have irritating weak smiles. Sure, they're angry that he ran away from 'help,' but now they want to smile at him like he was just too stupid to know they were 'helping.'

"A belated-Shinny, what happened?!" Ashido turns away from the cake, her smile falling when she runs towards him. Sato, Yaoyorozu, and Sero look concerned, Shoji, Tokoyami, and Todoroki are impossible to tell. Aoyama still looks like he's falling asleep on Jirou's shoulder, Kirishima still barely awake from where he's half-leaning on the counter, and Iida takes a few steps too like he thinks he should carry Hitoshi, or something stupid like that.

"It's sprained," Hitoshi says, adjusting his grip on the crutch and considering how he could use it as a weapon when Ashido finally stops short, looks at the crutch like she knows what he was thinking. "I didn't come here for cake. I came here to tell all of you to fuck off."

Bakugo makes a weird scoffing noise, before he tries to slap Hitoshi again. Hitoshi grabs his wrist and twists it. “What the fuck are you-”

They’re not getting it. “You’re all completely useless to me. Not a single one of you heroes could actually stand a chance against me now, and that means I have no use for you. As fun as it was for you to treat me like I’m weak, I’m not, and I’m not going to tolerate it anymore.”

“Shinsou,” Yaoyorozu says, curling a hand over the collar of her shirt. “I’m sure that you’re angry and hurt that we didn’t...”

Hitoshi glares at her, imagines that he’s glaring her into silence, but she probably just doesn’t want to say that they failed to protect him. They shouldn’t have tried, they’re too ill-trained. Too stupid. “I’m not angry, or hurt. I’m tired of all of you.”

Hitoshi lets Bakugo pull his wrist away, and trades a glare with the most useless one of them out of the bunch.

“I unfortunately have to live here, and deal with you during school. But don’t mistake me, I’m not going to tolerate your attempts at pity anymore. It’s insulting,” Hitoshi says, watching Jirou’s eyebrow raise as her eyes widen, her mouth opens but Ashido speaks first.

“Shinny-”

“Why are you doing all of these annoying things for me?” Nemoto asks, wrapped in Hitoshi’s voice from the place that he haunts in his throat, and Hitoshi sees Ashido come back into view after the flash of blindness that comes with Nemoto’s quirk.

“I want to be your friend. I want to make up for everything bad that happened, and make you happy,” Ashido is forced to say, before the yellow iris surrounded by black in her eyes turns white, and the nervous tension in her body goes slack.

“Shinsou-” Iida starts, angry, because ‘you can use your quirk like everyone else can’ was something that Bakugo said. Bakugo promised.

And Hitoshi knew it was never true.

“Oh, I remember that she wanted to be Brainwashed, but that’s not my quirk anymore,” Hitoshi says, tilting his head to the side to look at Iida’s frustrated tension, his fists knotted by his side, because he wants to act against him but he can’t. It’s ‘unheroic’ to attack a ward. “Whatever I ask, you’re forced to answer. And I can make you admit your deepest insecurities, the things you don’t want to admit to yourself. That would have been useful to have, before one of you invited 127 in.”

“That wasn’t us!” Kirishima argues, wide awake now, looking between Ashido and Hitoshi like he doesn’t know who to hit to break the control. His fists clench at his side, and Hitoshi steadies himself on the crutch. “Dude, I get that it was really messed up that you were attacked, but you hurt Tsuyu-”

“I’ll cut her tongue out next time,” Hitoshi says, and says it lazily, like a promise that he means that means nothing to him. Still staring with his head tilted back looking down at him from the end of his nose.

Exactly like Chisaki used to do.

“So again, fuck off. I’ll ignore that you exist, but if you invite my attention, you’ll suffer for it. I’ll unfortunately see you around,” Hitoshi says, turning to see Bakugo fuming, his hand splayed open and ready to use his quirk, and his glare murderous.

Good. They need to understand, he doesn't want anything to do with them anymore. He doesn't need the distraction, or these 'friends.'

And it's better for them to not have a dangerous friend like him.

*

Midoriya woke up to a slamming door, and looked at the phone still in his hand before he nearly flung it in his scramble to get out of bed. Shinsou said he was going to come to the dorm because he needed to talk to them about what happened while he was in the mountains with Aizawa. After he was attacked by that Chameleon quirk guy.

He runs down the stairs to see that he probably missed Shinsou's visit completely, Kaminari, Jirou, and Todoroki are turning up to the next flight, but Iida looks at him from the steps leading downstairs. "It's better that you weren't there, Midoriya."

Iida doesn't say anything else, turning away to continue to his own floor, but Midoriya continues to the common room to see Kacchan and Kirishima close to Ashido bent over the counter, her arms wrapped around something. Sato just looks at Midoriya, looking exhausted and a bit angry, before he rubs a hand over his face and starts walking to the stairs to leave. "Was Shinsou-"

"He's not-" Ashido snaps, throwing her arm out to swat at Kirishima, who seemed like he was trying to take whatever she was holding. "He's just upset, he didn't mean that."

Midoriya can tell that Ashido is really upset. She sounds like she's crying. "What happened with Shinsou?"

Kacchan turns around to look at him, stalking forward like he's angry at Midoriya for whatever happened when he was asleep. "Fucker is off his shit, he wants all of us to 'fuck off,' and he's fucking welcome to that. Just a heads up, don't fuck with him."

"Shinsou kind of came back with crazy eyes," Sero adds from the couch. "Literally. His eyes glow now, and his quirk is insane."

"And he's fucking dead if he tries it again," Kacchan growls, clipping Midoriya's shoulder like he's forgotten this isn't middle school, and Midoriya isn't just his punching bag for his frustrations.

But Midoriya lets him, this time, because Ashido is clinging to the cake she saved for Shinsou. Shinsou was clearly upset, there's something weird with his quirk and eyes, but Ashido is really hurt by whatever he said. "We can put it up. Bakugo's not really gonna toss it, he'll get over it by tomorrow morning."

Ashido just hugs the cake closer, sniffing, despite what Kirishima says. Midoriya puts a hand on her shoulder, and she flinches, before she turns around and nearly tackles him in a too tight hug. "I just want him to be happy, that's not wrong, right? It's not pity, it's not! I'm not a bad friend or a bad person, just because he went through stuff, right?"

"Of course not," Midoriya reassures, as best he can when Ashido is kind of squeezing the life out of him. "I'm sure he... didn't really mean that."

Got a lot of friends. That Chameleon quirk villain was taunting Shinsou with that. That villain threatened to hurt them, and hurt Eri. Just because Shinsou was close to them.

Shinsou really didn't mean that.

"I'm going to talk to him," Midoriya decides, gently pushing at Ashido's shoulders as he trades a look with Kirishima, who will probably be her next target for a hug. Ashido needs to cry it out, but Midoriya was the only one who heard what that Chameleon quirk villain said to Shinsou, who knows what Shinsou is trying to do.

It doesn't matter what Shinsou tries to tell him, how insulting he tries to be. Midoriya has heard everything that could be hurtful thanks to Kacchan, and he knows that Shinsou can't just push them away when he needs them most. He can't give up on having friends just because they might be in danger.

Midoriya knows that too well. He knows that he's similar to Shinsou because of that, because they both have dangerous secrets. If his friends knew the secret behind One for All, they could be at risk, and there's a part of Midoriya that still worries if he's being a good friend by keeping that secret. But he has to.

But it's different for Shinsou. They're the first friends he's ever had, and he can't give up on that so easily.

Midoriya finally pries away from Ashido and runs out into the cold, without a jacket over his sleepwear, but he sees Shinsou not far away, and he sees Aizawa too, standing in front of Shinsou. At first, he worries that Aizawa told Shinsou to say whatever he did to make everyone upset, but when Midoriya slips around the back of the 3-A dorm to listen in on their conversation, he hears that's not true.

"What part of you will not be unescorted was unclear to you?" Aizawa asks, in a tone that almost makes Midoriya flinch and mentally prepare for being grounded from classes for three days.

Shinsou just huffs, before he answers back in a clipped tone. "I thought I was clear about not turning your back on me."

Shinsou really is talking now. Maybe he could have brainwashed Aizawa, but it seemed like everyone got a barbed word from Shinsou when they met him downstairs, to be so hurt by it. And it does hurt, they worried the entire weekend and decided to wake up in the middle of the night to meet him, just because he asked them to. "If you were worried about my students-"

"I'm not worried anymore," Shinsou interrupts, this time he sounds so much like Kacchan did that night after Kamino ward, it's too clear that he's speaking loudly, in almost an airy way, to put more distance between his words and the hurt behind it. "Your 'eggs' got the message. If they try to get involved again, then they're just stupid and hopeless. That's another test you can use to expel them."

"You snuck out, on a sprained ankle, in the middle of the night to wake up my students and inform them that you don't want friends," Aizawa says, the usual way he sums up whatever someone did to get in trouble, usually in a more insulting way to make them feel stupid before he lays out what they should have done and how they'll learn to do that instead.

"I don't want distractions," Shinsou argues, still angry at first. Then, so quietly that Midoriya almost doesn't hear it. "Or casualties."

Midoriya was right. Shinsou is only doing this out of fear, because he cares about them. He doesn't want to lose all of his friends.

“One of them got stabbed because his great plan of attack was just running at 127. The other, the Problem Child, decided to hurl himself into the air so he could get skewered by the sword he couldn’t have seen,” Shinsou says, and Midoriya has to bite his lips together to keep from running out to defend himself. He was going to use an Air Force Smash, and kind of hoped that using a higher percentage of One For All would let him manifest a stronger version of Black Whip, but Hadou caught him mid-air before he could and basically accomplished the same thing with her life force spirals.

“Again, you’re not going to be unescorted,” Aizawa says, his voice dropping to a growl when he has to repeat himself. Before he sighs. “The wardship isn’t going to end that soon either.”

It’s a reminder that Midoriya didn’t need, and didn’t want to hear. Shinsou is a ward, and that means he’s only at UA temporarily, until the wardship ends. But after that, he’d have to be taken away from Eri, away from everyone, but now that Aizawa knows about Shinsou’s mom, he won’t be going back to her.

It’s not just because Shinsou is afraid of them getting hurt. He must have done what Yaoyorozu said Aizawa told him to do. Shinsou had to tell Aizawa everything he knows.

And that means the end of Shinsou’s wardship is getting closer. “It’s going to end. It’s temporary.”

Midoriya holds himself against the wall, just waiting for Aizawa to tell him that he’s wrong. Aizawa can’t just be okay with letting Shinsou go to who knows where after this, to be separated from Eri like that. “Not for months, at worst.”

Months?

Shinsou only gets to live at UA, for months? And no one knows where he’s going to go after that, if he’ll still be able to talk to them. If he has a phone, of course everyone will still message him on the groupchat, but it’s hard to get permission to leave campus for more than an hour, and they don’t know where Shinsou will be.

It can’t just end like this. Shinsou can’t just push them away because he’s afraid of that. “Hey!”

Midoriya looks around the corner to see Aizawa pulling Shinsou onto his back with his capture scarf, and Shinsou hitting the side of Aizawa’s arm with his crutch. “Since I can’t trust you not to run off on your own, even with a crutch, the privilege of limping back to the dorm has been revoked. You’re also not going to be healed by Recovery Girl, you’ll be healing on your own.”

“Great, so the next time one of your students invite The Miasma to kill me-”

“You won’t be unescorted,” Aizawa interrupts, starting to walk away. “Getting healed by a quirk every time you’re injured has apparently made you less aware of how to treat yourself while injured. Like the Problem Child.”

Midoriya tries to consider himself lucky that Shinsou called him ‘Izuku’ when they first started messaging, now that he knows that Aizawa and Yamada probably call him ‘Problem Child’ a lot. “Great, I’ll be forced to rely on you for protection. Which is going swell so far. Really knocked it out of the park last time-”

“Unescorted,” Aizawa interrupts, and it’s kind of nice that they argue like this, in a kind of playful way, but Shinsou wasn’t really unescorted. He was with Togata after all.

“And you’re just so perceptive,” Shinsou says. “To not see a villain in your own class.”

Even if Shinsou doesn't know he's here, doesn't know that Midoriya is listening to this, he feels the sting from that barb all the same with a pang in his chest. No one knew, no one would think that it was her. Midoriya wishes he could have known.

"It's funny, you couldn't have seen it. Invisible and all."

It's not funny, at all. After all they've been through together, from the very first day of school, they were meant to become heroes, they all had that dream. Except one of them.

Hagakure.

*

Hitoshi withers under the silence for too long, his ankle still throbbing in a way that makes him too thankful that Aizawa is still insisting on awkwardly carrying him around. Maybe he just wants to break the silence because the staff dorm is only getting closer, maybe just to distract himself from the pain from his sprain, or the exhaustion that's falling over him now that he knows the hero students won't bother him.

Maybe it's just because his hands on Aizawa's shoulders can feel too keenly how he's slumped forward, as though his weight is too great a burden. But he knows it's not that. "She's fine. Hagakure."

Aizawa doesn't answer him for a while, even though Hitoshi tried not to make him answer. Between one step and the next, he finally does, his voice too weary for it. "She'll be fine."

That doesn't answer the real question that Hitoshi has, and he struggles to word it right, his fingers fidgeting on Aizawa's shoulders. "You're... fine."

He knows Aizawa isn't. He doesn't know if he wants to be trusted with the truth willingly, or to have a pleasant lie so he can stop worrying about it. Maybe he shouldn't have said those things, shouldn't have lashed out at a clear wound. He doesn't know why that comes so easily to him now, and it's not even because Aizawa irritates him that much. "I'm fine."

But it is irritating, to get that lie, dismissive as it is short. Hitoshi glares at the top of Aizawa's head, and wishes that Aizawa could be anything less than just the human embodiment of irritating.

"I will be fine," Aizawa adds, more honest, and his voice softer for it. It's not a pleasant lie, but it's a pleasant truth, that Aizawa is hurt now and Hitoshi carelessly added to that pain, but Aizawa will be fine eventually. Probably not tomorrow.

And that makes two of them.

*

Saito swears under her breath when she pulls the file from the 8 Precepts raid, a hand over her mouth as she realizes what was done to her by that brat.

Confession. Forcing an honest answer. The kid's quirk requires a verbal response. This probably the greatest weapon of a quirk she's ever seen, ever imagined, and there's no telling what this kid could and would do with it, and he's used it on her. Eraserhead let him use it, and Eraserhead's allegiance to the Hero Commission has always been questionable, even before this wardship brought evidence of it to light.

But if this kid has two quirks now, and he's not suffering from the backlash of that, that means there's a way to repeat that process. There's a way to create a Nomu without creating a monster, without killing the host, and a way to get answers for the Nomus that are locked up in Tartarus, trapped in that inhuman cognizance. There's a way to save every Nomu that's been made, including the ones they haven't found yet.

This is a goddamn breakthrough, and her name could be stamped all over it.

Could.

Saito looks at Cheerio, rubbing her face against her laptop aggressively, desperately affectionate after their usual weekend bonding had been cut off by that assignment to track down the ward in the mountains, after Hawks seemed unwilling to respond for whatever reason. Saito sighs, trying to catch Cheerio's bright blue eyes and try to remember that she shouldn't be thinking like that.

Sure, the kid will need to be moved to a facility where they can run tests on him, but that's only better for the case. Mind Slice can step in, easy, they'll know everything about this Miasma and take them down before Miasma can take another victim. Hundreds could be saved in just that raid, and then thousands saved by preventing Nomu attacks. They could cripple the League of Villains at least, but they could have a chance of taking them out too.

The work of heroes is flawed. All Might himself, the Symbol of Peace, couldn't last forever, and he didn't bring the crime rate down to zero. It might never be zero, but it could be lower. Every percentage that shrinks is a million citizens that aren't touched by violence.

Save the one. The one person I can see, who's right in front of me. Who needs my help, and I can help them.

That's exactly why the system is flawed. Saito has seen heroes posing with fans while on patrol, she's seen them help with groceries or save cats from trees. All the while, the world is burning down, there are horrors and violence they don't face or stop, and it just goes on.

She can't do anything about that. She's quirkless, which means she's born to be the best target. She has no chance to fight the wrong of this world, except in this, except for doing the paperwork and triaging the situation. Forcing heroes to look up from their idealized worldview and see that the world is fucked. They're needed elsewhere.

Every ward is a kid. Every kid deserves a better world than what they're born into. They can't work on case-by-case basis, they have to stabilize and move on. She's seen wards slip through the cracks, they aren't protected well enough by those increased patrols in their next home or they become the criminals that they once feared. There's only so much that a kid can see of a cruel world before they try to emulate it, and there's no way to insulate that with kindness once the poison has sunk too deep.

This case is the worst case Saito has ever been handed. A kid who was sold by his mother when he was four, spent eight years getting tortured and performing criminal acts for money, gets sold again and gets tortured worse. This kid was raised in the mire of this cruel world, there's really no hope for him. He'll be the worst of the lot when he gets out of his wardship.

Especially with this quirk.

"Cheerio," Saito calls, scratching her cat's chin to get her attention. She shouldn't be wavering with this, and that Togata kid doesn't know a thing about the real world. He's not even a pro hero yet, he hasn't graduated. He hasn't seen shit yet. "Is this still a kid?"

Saito knows it's a kid, Shinsou Hitoshi is 16 years old, almost half her age. She remembers being 16 and stupid, and she's sure this kid will never have that opportunity, no matter what she does. The kid's just a lost cause, he's gone, he's never going to forget what he's gone through at this point. He'd do a lot more good for the world as a labrat than he could ever accomplish on his own.

But when Saito tries to open a new email to report directly to the Commission of Wardship Affairs board members, to send it right to the top, she can't click the button to do it. It feels too heavy. She knows it's a life that she'd take.

Save the one. The one is right in front of her.

She closes her laptop instead, dropping her head into her hands while Cheerio moves on to rubbing against her wrists, still begging for attention. She's not saving the kid, and she's not really going to do him any favors. She needs more time to think, that's all, and she needs to get some sleep before she has to wake up for work. Report her findings.

Maybe 'saving' can mean just not killing the one.

Code Breaks

Chapter Summary

The Traitor's tale, from past to present, to future.

Chapter Notes

Uploaded as a bonus, as Shinsou does not make an appearance in this chapter.

Trigger Warnings: Graphic injuries (Not vividly described, but in the paragraph that begins with "She probably doesn't have that much time, though."), Internal monologue describing death beginning in the paragraph that begins with 'Delete Face stays for a long time' and continues until the POV break *SPOILERS FOR THE WARY BELOW 'PREVIOUSLY ON'**

Previously on Wards of UA: Hagakure was revealed to be the UA traitor, working with Shiori (Aizawa's hacker informant) and the League of Villains. During the first group chat with 1-A, Shinsou revealed that '27' was a 'name he's used more often than the other ones.' During 'Come on the Radio!,' Hagakure installed two chatbots - Midobot to track how many times Midoriya asked Shinsou to check their chat, and Bakubot that tallied each time that Bakugo swore, but it seemed to cause a severe error on every member's phone when Bakugo swore on the chat for the first time. Shiori will only work with Aizawa or Sansa. Aizawa asked Shiori for all of the Number reviews, and Shiori refused to give him more than two Numbers', out of fear that she would be killed to silence her. Shiori has a habit of referring to things as 'analog' or 'digital.' Aizawa has previously expressed irritation that he can't take down the online suppliers of his knock-off hero merchandise brand, 'Delete Face.'

SPOILERS (a fake out death)

See the end of the chapter for more notes

It's funny. She doesn't know why she did it, either.

She has an older brother who has been hospitalized all of his life. He has a lot of issues, and they're all incurable because he has a defective quirk, now completely resistant to quirk suppressants. While her quirk allows light to pass through her body, his absorbs it. And his body can't handle it. Even the light from inside night vision goggles can give him second degree burns.

There's only a handful of doctors in the world who have a quirk that lets them see in the dark, and they're all pretty useless.

It's funny, because she has no idea what her brother looks like. She's pretty much lived in his hospital room; her parents visit him every day and stay for hours, just talking to a voice in the dark. It's funny, because no one really knows what Hagakure looks like either.

It's funny. She's not more invisible in the dark, but she feels like she is.

It's funny, because her brother isn't the reason why she did it. There's not a magic cure that's too expensive to buy, because skin grafting would be comparatively cheap if they found a perfect donor. One with a skin-related quirk close enough to his so the graft won't be rejected, with the right blood type too. She's not helping her parents pay for his medical bills, because they obsess over their finances too much for her to hide it. She's not really making much money from this anyway.

It's funny, because she's always hated playing hide and seek. It's too easy to win, and there's no point in playing if you don't win. You hide, you wait for someone to find you. Maybe you move to a new spot to make it harder. It's funny, because she used to try to lose, and she still won.

It's funny, because her parents would sometimes tell her to play hide and seek with them, and then they wouldn't try to find her.

It's funny.

*

The funny thing about encryptions is that they're meant to be broken. Someone is supposed to find the message in the bottle, even if it's tossed into a current that leads to a deserted island. Someone has to find it and break it.

Her parents are relieved when she finds a website for encryption fanatics. She was 8 years old when they bought her first laptop, when they covered up the webcam with tape and enabled the parental controls. Don't talk to people you don't know on there.

It's funny, because that was probably the most concerned they've ever been about her, but she picked the tape off as soon as they left. It's funny, because they never checked.

It's actually funny, because the camera wouldn't be able to see her anyway.

She gets better at encryptions when she starts using programming languages. It's not just finding the right book and turning to the right page, scouring the text for the key. It's automated. It's effortless. It doesn't have to be a book.

She finds more websites like that, and finds people who meet on other websites to continue the encryption. A key hidden in a chat room, in the backend of a webpage. She spends enough time in those groups to remember their usernames when they post a challenge. She keeps track of the chat rooms they like to use, the websites. The keys. She imagines what kind of people they are in real life.

She's 10 years old when one of them finds her.

She told her parents that she was going to the restroom, and she's old enough to know that they know she doesn't need to leave to do that. But she's tired of spending all of her time in a dark room, talking to a voice she doesn't really know. And if they know, they don't care. And she knows that.

"Your encryptions are good."

Don't talk to people you don't know on there. She thought that she wasn't really talking to them, she was playing with them, playing games and they shouldn't have found her.

“But you don’t know shit about VPNs.”

Hagakure met Shiori. Shiori cracked a code Hagakure didn’t even know she made.

She doesn’t know a lot about Shiori. Shiori is older than her, old enough to live on her own, or smart enough to do it anyway. She spends her time hosting websites for encryption challenges. Shiori is good at solving them, it’s part of her job.

She didn’t tell Hagakure what her job was back then. Honestly, she never told Hagakure, but she gave Hagakure the keys to find out.

Shiori teaches her about internet infrastructure. Hardware. It’s not encryptions, it’s not hide and seek, but Hagakure likes it. She likes learning about it from Shiori.

Her parents don’t complain when Hagakure says she has extracurriculars and can’t visit her brother. The only key they pick up on is the smell of Shiori’s cigarettes on her clothes. Her mom asked her, Are you smoking? She said no. Good, it’s bad for you.

It’s funny, because her parents used to ask her how her day was.

It’s funny, because she used to ask them back. It’s funny, because they’d always sigh, and then talk about how stressed out they were, how horrible their day was, how her brother was doing. It’s funny, because she practiced coding instead of really listening.

If var.Hagakure_asks == “How was your day?”;

open(obj.Parent_Monologue)

Parent_Monologue.write(var.Sigh + “Well, it’s been a day. Your brother needs to see that specialist and my boss won’t allow the time off, and we can’t really afford to have part of my salary reduced this month, thanks to the specialist...”)

If obj.Hagakure == “Gets to leave”;

close(Parent_Monologue)

It’s funny, because even though they don’t talk to each other, she still rattles off information like a script gone wild. Just like they do.

It’s funny, because she’s the only one who knows it’s all filler. It’s the part of the encryption that’s supposed to be picked out and ignored.

It’s funny, because even people who don’t know about encryption know to ignore everything she says.

*

Shiori cracked it. The real code that Hagakure wanted to break.

They were trying to frankenstein three outdated and broken computers into a functioning one, and Shiori was purposefully making it harder by not testing the parts with a known good.

“Don’t force it, it won’t fit,” Shiori grumbles, taking the RAM chip out of her hand. “The slot is for DDR3, and this is a DDR4. They’re incompatible.”

“Oh!” Hagakure says, taking it back to press it more gently against the slot. She’s right, the notch in the chip is close, but the slot's matching wedge is just a little bit off. "Jeez, it's so close, though! Why would they make them like that? The RAM sticks would still be compatible when it's operating, right? It's probably just a marketing ploy, there were probably a lot of competitors and they wanted people to have to buy-"

"What's your blood type?" Shiori asks, pulling the other set of RAM sticks out of the third computer. It was covered in cola residue when they picked it up, and the parts from it are the least likely to be salvageable.

"Type A!" Hagakure answers.

"What's your brother's blood type?" Shiori puts the sticks into the slot. They fit.

"Type B."

"Hook up the power supply."

Shiori wants to see if they can play HeroTube videos off of what they have now as a stress test. They have a spinning drive that sticks, and the RAM works but it throws errors all the time. The cola probably ate away some of the contact points.

It almost fits, but it doesn't. It doesn't work like it should, like they wanted it to. They should probably give up on it. Throw it away if they can. But they can't, they're just too busy to do that.

The videos Shiori picks are funny.

They're really funny.

It's funny, because when you're invisible, people can't tell whether you're laughing or crying.

*

Shiori doesn't always let her come over. She has work to do, and it's work that Hagakure can't watch her do. No one is supposed to watch it. Few people are supposed to know about it. It's secured, and she doesn't want to give Hagakure the key.

Shiori doesn't talk about the job postings on her sites. They're encrypted, and they're encrypted for a reason. Hagakure knows that.

She still takes the benign ones. There are some that she can do online. She's good at finding people. Google Fu. Unsecured street cameras. There are some that aren't online, but she's still good at them. Most security cameras don't register heat signatures.

Shiori doesn't talk about the job postings until Hagakure takes one that she deleted. It would have been harder to find out what it was asking for if the encryption wasn't so basic. A video game script that they copied and pasted, with the key at the end. It's stupid.

It shouldn't have interested her at all.

"I took that shit off for a reason," Shiori growls, the cigarette clenched in her teeth makes her sound more angry, but she's angry enough. For some reason. "Shit's black, Hagakure, and I don't mess with black. We're gray, and you're barely even that."

"It's fine! I couldn't pick which high school to go to anyway!"

*

Shiori didn't want her to take the job, but she still helped. Even if she didn't mean to at first.

Hagakure doesn't have a quirk that's offensive enough to take down robots, but she knows robots. She knows how to know that there will be robots, which websites to go to. What firewalls to break. Shiori knows how to break them.

Shiori knew how to make a screwdriver that would fry a processor chip but wouldn't fire on human skin. She also knew how to mess up the wiring so that it didn't work after the second fire. She knew that six points would put her in the Support Department, not the Hero course. Shiori probably wanted to know what they taught in the Support Department. Hagakure probably wanted to know that too.

But Shiori taught her to check her hardware whenever there was an issue. And she taught her about wiring too.

Shiori is the go-between after that. It was her idea, and the League accepted it. Shiori knows code, she knows encryptions. She knows the ones that are easy for Hagakure to crack, but impossible for anyone else who finds them. She knows hardware too. She knows wiring.

Shiori makes her a set of gloves before her first day of school.

*

Her gloves vibrate. Morse code, parsed through a Fibonacci sequence with her home server address as filler. It's one of the easier encryptions, probably because The League didn't give Shiori much time.

'Where are you?'

'USJ.'

*

It's funny, because Aizawa-sensei has to meet her parents at the hospital. He's still dressed like a mummy, he should probably be in a hospital bed himself instead of standing there talking to her parents and her brother in a pitch dark room.

It's funny, because he acts like this is normal.

Her parents don't care about USJ. Oh, it was horrible, but Tooru is fine. I know that's due to the heroes on staff, like yourself. We still trust you.

It's funny, because if Aizawa-sensei used his quirk on her brother, they could turn the lights on.

It's funny, because she could probably see her brother for the first time if he did.

It's funny, because he might not be able to use his quirk anymore, and it's her fault.

It's funny, because he only visits her family, and everyone else's parent-teacher conference was done by other teachers.

It's funny, because it's almost like getting caught.

It's funny. Because she's not.

*

Her gloves vibrate. Navajo morse code, parsed through the IP address that Shiori used to find Hagakure, with a song lyric that Hagakure really liked when she was 12 as filler. They've been planning this for a while.

'Where are you?'

She doesn't know, but she sends the last kilometer marker she saw on the highway back through a Fibonacci sequence with that same lyric as a filler. She doesn't have much time after it took so long for her to break the first code. It shouldn't have taken her that long.

She knew the solution before she started solving it.

"Hagakure, hold on to me if you get scared! We've got to show those Class B dweebs what Class A is made of!"

*

It's funny, because Ojiro doesn't even know code. He's terrible at encryptions. He's just honest.

"Hey, Hagakure. Are you feeling okay?"

"Yeah! Super duper! My favorite show just released a new season, and I'm SUPER pumped to binge watch it! Maybe I'll eat some ice cream too! Mic-sensei's essay is kinda kicking my butt right now."

"That's good," Ojiro says, and smiles at her. His eyes always meet hers, even if he doesn't know it. He doesn't know encryptions, he doesn't know tech, but he picks up on every parity bit that she leaves, if she leaves one. "You just seemed kind of down. If you want some help with that essay-"

No one else knows when Hagakure's down.

It's funny. No one wants to.

She doesn't want him to either, just because it's him. Just because it's her, the way she is now, the mess that she caused. The mess that she's stuck in. She's not gray anymore, and no one sees that.

She's almost killed everyone in her class - twice - and no one knows that.

It's funny. She doesn't know how to stop hiding. She doesn't think she can.

It's funny, because she's always invisible. She's always been hiding. And she can't stop.

*

It's funny, because Shinsou scares her more than Shigaraki.

It's funny, because they could probably be friends. When she looks at it from a distance, when she looks at how he is with Eri, she knows he's not a bad person. That might make them similar to one another, but probably not.

It shouldn't be surprising that she turned to the black, when she's lived half of her life in a pitch black room. People probably go crazy from that.

But she knows she's not crazy.

Shiori meets her on Club Penguin. They talk in better codes there. If anyone's monitoring what she types, it looks like she's just chatting with a peppy friend about boys on a cute little game platform.

Don't mess with him. 27 is probably a Number. It's darker than black.

Shiori doesn't stop her from putting up a job posting. She wants to know what's darker than black, but no one can find out. They're all in the gray.

A black site gives her a name. 'The Miasma.' Even they warn her away.

The Miasma is darker than black. Shinsou is a part of it.

It's funny, because she might be darker than black too.

It's funny, because she's afraid of him. Not because she thinks he'll hurt her, or hurt anyone. It's because he might see her. He might be able to help her.

It's funny, because she's scared.

*

It's funny, because Hagakure already placed a tracking script in Shinsou's phone and everyone else's with the Bakubot. For fun, she told herself when she did it.

Hagakure wrote the worm with Shiori years ago, and put it in the server that controls the robots. Shiori sent The League Shinsou's location, because Hagakure didn't, and Shiori is the only person who can infiltrate her computer. Shiori didn't even tell Hagakure that they asked for it.

It's funny, because he was walking around with Eri when they attacked. He probably wouldn't have fought so hard if she wasn't there. He wouldn't have gotten hurt.

It's funny, because they said they wouldn't hurt him. They just wanted to talk. (She couldn't say no.)

It's funny, because it's cold, but she stops feeling cold. Standing naked in the snow can do that.

It's funny, because even when it hurts, she keeps staring at the blood in the snow, even after the robots clean it away. It's funny, because they still don't see her. They've never noticed that she watches them, every time that she can. (USJ.)

It's funny, because she doesn't know whose hands that blood belongs on. The Miasma, The League, Shiori's, Hagakure's.

Hers. She knows it's hers.

It's funny.

*

It's funny, because she always wanted Aizawa-sensei to be the one to catch her.

It's funny, because she always imagined he'd use his quirk on her, even if there's no reason to. Just to be poetic. When she's caught, when they see her, they see her.

It's funny how much she wanted that.

It's funny, because he's not even on campus, he's with Shinsou somewhere, so it's just Principal

Nezu, Midnight-sensei, and the police officers. It's funny, she never even thought that Midnight would be there, even though she has the perfect quirk to counter Hagakure's. Invisible bodies still make noise when they pass out on the floor. It's funny, because Midnight-sensei didn't need to be there.

It's funny, because everyone still looks at her like they're seeing her for the first time. Like they're actually seeing her. Like they're shocked that such a peppy girl could have such an ugly face.

Ojiro never believed she was ugly. He tries to stop them. She tells him not to. She tells him she's sorry.

It's funny, because she's sorry that she told him that she loves him. It's funny, because that was the only honest thing she's ever told him. It's the only honest thing she's ever told anyone. He made her forget that she's not honest, forget that she's code.

It's funny, because they didn't take off her gloves until they booked her at the police station. It's funny, because in the end, she only uses morse code. It's barely even a code to her now.

I'm burned. I'm sorry. Be safe.

It's funny, because Shiori already knows.

It's funny, because she forgot that Shiori puts a tracker on everything she makes. It's funny, because Shiori wouldn't have forgotten that.

They never needed codes. Shiori never needed to ask.

It's funny, and she doesn't know why.

*

It's funny, because even with all the shit she had to do first, Shiori still got there before Hagakure's parents.

They left to get a lawyer, but Shiori knows they're not coming back. That's fine. She's here. She's always been here.

It's funny, because she thought she'd be done with the kid by now. Long before now. 'Two weeks, tops,' she told herself when she tracked Hagakure's IP and found it close to home. The kid picks up new encryption techniques so fast that VPNs would be nothing to her.

It was just supposed to be VPNs, just a little protection. She was drifting into the gray, and Shiori was supposed to keep her from getting stuck in it.

Now Hagakure's stuck and she's burned.

Shiori burns herself. Officer Cool Cat won't take the harddrive until she fills out the paperwork, so she does it. He looks at her after she hands it back to him, like he wants her to fill it out again, but differently. 'Shiori' isn't her name, but it's what everyone calls her, even Cool Cat. But there's not a space for usernames on paperwork, only legal ones.

She burns herself.

Delete Face doesn't even pick up when she calls, and for some reason, she always wanted him to be there. He's one of the better ones. He's always polite as shit when he needs something, because she's reliable. She's reliable on the black, because she's gray, and they can ignore that.

They probably don't want her to burn herself, because she's reliable, because she's been at war with the black for years. She keeps the odds fair. She doesn't know if they have anyone else. It's fine, she brought goodies for them. It's a fair trade.

They don't have a drive reader. They have to call the tech guy. Shiori chats with the tech guy while they set it up. He's a Mac head and she hates him for it, but they can talk shit about everyone else in the room. He has helpdesk tickets, she has users who spam requests when their job doesn't get picked up. They're digital people.

That's why she stuck with Hagakure. They're both digital people screaming into an analog world. They want someone to notice the sound, but they don't make sounds. They make codes. Error codes. There's not a tech guy around to fix them, or even read them, so they just keep making noise.

She sent out one last code, one last scream. She told him it doesn't matter if he comes home, she won't be there. It's fine, he's too analog to read it, even when she screams at him. Even when she makes it easy.

It's funny, because Hagakure used to think she liked horse races because she used those sites for her encryptions. She told her that those keys were another code. If Hagakure ever cracked it, she never asked who Giran was.

Giran is in the black, has been for a while. She's been battling him for a while. That fight's over, and he's too analog to know it.

Giran brought her into the gray, just like she did to Hagakure. Giran left her out to dry, and she's not doing that to Hagakure. They like what they see on the harddrive, and that's why she made it. That's why she's had it ready ever since Hagakure took this job.

There's a boring city code that says she's not allowed to smoke in the station, but they like the harddrive enough for her to get five 'last cigarettes' while they comb through it. It's only fair, and it's a fair trade.

She should have listened to Giran when he told her not to pick up the habit. She wants another. They talk about the city code again. She knows they're getting close to the end of it.

Hagakure is facing 2 years in prison, even after adjusting for her age. It's not Tartarus, not anymore. But it is The League. It's black.

It's funny, because smoke is gray, but it probably burns black. Cigarette smoke starts off gray and gets lighter, the more it works into the air. If there wasn't any air, it would probably be black.

When you're in the gray, you have a little air, a little white. Good intentions, usually. Everyone has them.

She had good intentions with Hagakure, but look how that turned out. Hagakure was in the white, and now she's not, despite any intentions. Shiori doesn't just corrupt disks, and she knew that before she started it. Smoke disperses, she watches it happen every day, every hour of the day. More often if her tech is giving her shit.

Her tech is fine today. What's left of it. The harddrive is the only storage device that hasn't been nuked and shattered. She's burning a lot of people here, and most of them deserve it. She sent a message to everyone else before she took a sledgehammer to her web servers. It wasn't even in code, so they know it's real.

She knows Hagakure is going to prison if she doesn't get that last cigarette. Shiori is burning herself, and she's burned herself pretty black with everything she knows about The League. But she can burn darker than black, if she needs to. If Hagakure needs her to.

"Numbers." That's all she has to say, really.

It's funny, because she works with a lot of numbers. Everything is numbers at its core, at its most basic operation. Bits. On and off. Pulses.

These Numbers are off. They're jumpy, they're scarred. Not a lot of people know about them, even in the black, because they're darker than black. Bad things happen to Numbers, and anyone who talks about them.

The Numbers themselves are kept analog, but people talk. The people that are alive complain about the jumpy ones. Numbers are rentable, so they have reviews. Shiori kept track of them, just in case, because she knows what's useful to keep track of. She doubts all of them have reviews, but the reviews she has are informative. Descriptions and quirks on most of them.

She gets that last cigarette. They're talking about how Hagakure was just answering questions that Shiori asked. Shiori asked her where she was and she answered. The gloves were just a fun project, Hagakure thought she was dialing into a test server. How was she supposed to know? She's young.

It's funny, because in the end, Shiori is the VPN. Hagakure went to the black, she dialed in, she was acting stupid. But she had protection. An alibi. It wasn't her address.

It's funny. It's funny enough that she laughs when she finishes that last cigarette.

They say cigarettes will kill you.

*

Hagakure's parents aren't going to pick her up. UA won't take her back. She's in limbo, in the lobby of the police station really, and that's how she was able to say goodbye to Shiori before they take her away.

They talk in code, even now. Even if it seems benign. It takes longer for Hagakure to parse it out, because the connection isn't that great in limbo.

Shiori left her hardware. Infrastructure. Hagakure doesn't know if she wants to take it. She doesn't know if she can. She's in limbo. She's burned, and she's not.

Shiori burned herself.

The League burned her back.

The police talk in codes, but she knows all of them. It was probably the blue fire quirk guy, they're talking about a lot of infrastructure damage. Engines exploding. Melted tires. Two police officers and a witness in transit that need to go to the burn unit of the nearest hospital.

It's funny. The police end up putting Hagakure in a hospital too.

It's funny.

It's really funny.

It's funny, because they think she can't stop laughing.

*

The medical guardianship for all of his students shouldn't still apply to Hagakure, but he doesn't mention that, and the nurse still allows him into her room.

Aizawa isn't prepared, and he knows it. He walks numbly down the hall, and tries to blame it on exhaustion. On shock. It feels like both.

It turns sour, when he sees his student the only way he's ever seen her, just by the clothes she's wearing. A white hospital robe with cuffs tying invisible wrists to the rails of a hospital bed. It's late, and she should be sleeping.

Aizawa already knows that she isn't, even if she doesn't move, when he sits on the chair beside her bed and still struggles to know what to say. Anything other than anger, anything other than empty promises he has no way of keeping. He knows Hagakure, he knows his student.

He knows she had the potential to be an excellent hero.

"57. 68. 79." A weak voice, shattered and thickened as evidence of crying, nearly makes Aizawa flinch. Hagakure knew about Numbers, possibly, she at least knew about the League. He doesn't know what she's trying to tell him, or if she can at this point. "20. 64. 69. 64. 6e. 27. 74. 20. 79. 6f."

Aizawa eventually realizes it, in the numbness, that this is a code. Shiori has muttered numbers like this a few times under her breath, while he was hovering over her work during incredibly time-sensitive cases. He still can't believe how he never saw this, how Shiori could be involved with his student this deeply. "Hagakure."

He still doesn't know what to say, any demand for answers would come out too harsh. He wants to know why, why she threw away her potential and committed herself to this farce. How she could have fooled him. How it felt to be that alone. "75. 20. 73-"

"I'm too 'analog,'" Aizawa says, swallowing down the bitter taste of that word, the next visit he'll have to perform. They're in the same hospital, not that they should know that. Whatever relationship they had needs to be broken, and should have been before it started. "To know what you're saying."

He hears a sharp gasp, and sees by the way the pillow shifts that Hagakure turns her head away from him. From her voice becoming thicker and louder, her breath stuttering, that she's crying now. "65. 65. 20. 69. 74."

It's a code that Aizawa doesn't know, and he can't ask Shiori about. Aizawa finds another one, one that he knows Hagakure knows, that she can answer to. If she doesn't want to talk to him, if clear conversation is something she's hiding from, he can sympathize with that.

He knocks on the wall, watching her shoulders flinch and rise up with the first one. Watching them tremble as he knocks out the first letter. 'Why.'

Morse code. Aizawa knows it. Most heroes do, at least for distress signals. Hagakure never let him know that she knew it too. Aizawa stops after that single word, when he wants to take it back and just ask for something else. Anything else from his student. "Meet me in the middle, kid."

Kid. Not his student. But still a kid who has lost someone important to her, who has lost every semblance of stability in her life, even if it was gained under impure intentions. Her family not being here is only an indication of the answer as to why Hagakure slipped this far, why she would do that. She still shouldn't be here alone.

Aizawa should have seen it.

"W-why," Hagakure sobs, the cuffs around her wrists shifting as she pulls. The nurse said she hasn't been combative, just unresponsive. Laughing. Aizawa knows she's not. "Why didn't you... You saw it."

"I didn't," Aizawa says. Hagakure was never on his list. He suspected others, and he feels guilty for that. He never suspected his own students, he believed in every single one of them. He performed those parent-teacher meetings at the beginning of the year, he performed Hagakure's after USJ only because he was already in the hospital. Hearing her voice, how little he could in that dark room with her family, was at times the thing he clung to to push him forward into recovering and returning to work. His students were still there, still needed him.

Hagakure needed him to see how far she was falling.

"I'm sorry."

Apologies don't come easily to him, but he feels that he failed Hagakure greatly enough to deserve it. Hagakure is so young, how she could have gotten involved with this is a failure from every authority figure in her life, including himself. He had poured over her records once she passed the entrance exam, he selected her for his class himself. He should have known her better than she knew herself, he should have seen what she could become as a hero.

He didn't see it.

"Sh-she's dead," Hagakure whimpers, her voice hollow before the cuffs rattle with two more tugs, as she seems to try to fight the sob that follows. How she falls into that void of despair. "She's dead! I k-killed her, my only... She's the only...."

He should have seen it.

He should have seen it in that dark room, where Hagakure's family met to be together and united with her older brother. He thought afterwards, about how that might have inspired Hagakure to be a hero in both light and dark terms, how she would have wanted to stand out to her parents through her accomplishments and how she needed to be recognized for something. He tried to fill that void, as little as he could, and often wondered if she would be happier if her talents could be recognized in the Support Department instead. He thought that her growing confidence was measure enough that she had found what she wanted in the hero course.

She found what she thought she wanted, in the hero course. Being recognized by villains and criminals. She wanted more than a place to belong, more than a future. She wanted to be seen by anyone.

And that person was apparently Shiori.

"Shiori isn't dead," Aizawa says, a statement that could become a lie in minutes or hours. "I worked with her, she was my informant. I'll do everything I can for her too."

Now that the facts are laid out, now that he knows Shiori was involved and with whom, he sees the similarities. He knows he doesn't know Shiori as well as he thought, but he knows who she is as a person. They both needed help, and he didn't see it. They never gave him clear signs.

“She made her choices, and she’s old enough to make them. However much she was involved, she took that risk. You can still have a future,” Aizawa says, even if that’s also a statement that can become less true. Hagakure was working with the League, and Shiori’s current state proves how serious they are. Hagakure is at risk now.

And he can’t be the one to protect her. “Wh-what... Do I look like?”

Aizawa imagines this isn’t a question in the metaphorical sense. Hagakure has been invisible in that metaphorical sense since she was born, as the second child to parents who seemed to have higher priorities for another. Aizawa should have seen her in that sense, but in another, he’s uncomfortable to answer her. “I don’t know.”

He may have cancelled Hagakure’s quirk when she broke into Hitoshi’s room, but after recognizing that his student was in the room and thus naked, not at all the criminal assassin that he had expected at the time, he made it a point not to look.

But perhaps, this has been a question that Hagakure has had for some time. As a teacher, it’s his job to guide his students to those answers. And he’s the only one who can answer this one for her.

Aizawa looks around the room, and doesn’t see a convenient mirror, and pulls out his phone. He stands up, placing the phone in front of Hagakure before he activates his quirk, and sees what he expected to see. A teenager with brown hair, with tears running down her face that she can’t catch with her wrists bound like that. Another stifled sob that breaks when she looks, a sound that an idiot would think was laughter.

“I think it will look better in the future,” Aizawa says, even if he can’t see that. Even if he can’t see what that future holds, maybe the girl staring at her own image for the first time in her life can see it more clearly. Hagakure knows herself far more than anyone else in her life, but that has to change. She needs someone else to guide her towards that future, beyond what a teenager can see.

Aizawa can’t be that person.

*

Tatami didn’t expect to see her teacher up this late, but when she heard a voice outside their cabin, she had to investigate. Ms. Joke was just getting off the phone, and it must have been important, but Tatami takes advantage of already being up and out in the cold to drape her arms around her teacher’s shoulders, grumbling about being woken up.

“What? Already miss the sleepovers?” Ms. Joke asks, and Tatami just sighs loud enough to possibly be in agreement, words are something that are beyond her in this half-awake state. Ms. Joke just ruffles her hair, the angle awkward with how Tatami is clinging to her back. “Y’know how we wanted a ward of our own?”

Words are not beyond her now. “Who?! Are they cute?! Do we get a cute little kid to ourselves too?!”

Ms. Joke tucks her phone away, spinning around in Tatami’s arms with a finger already raised up. “All I know is that she is cute, and she’s ours, and even if that cute little face is covered in tears now, it’s our job to bring a smile back on that face!”

*

The League is shit at everything, so it’s no wonder they couldn’t even burn her right. Left her at a slow burn, she’s still dying, it just takes a while. It’s just irritating, especially with the nicotine withdrawals. It's irritating, because she can't even look up and see if there's an oxygen tank over her head. It'd be funny if there was.

They set her up with a laptop. Her quirk is called something else, but she calls it Command Line, because she was tragically raised on Windows. When she was a kid, she could only send keystrokes, but now she can send massive scripts with her mind.

They hooked the laptop up to the guest wifi, even though there's no reason to. They're not digital people, or they'd know not to do that. Given enough time, she can connect to the secured network, get into the directories, into the root. She could probably knock out everyone's life support. It would take longer, but she could probably isolate it to her own.

She probably doesn't have that much time, though. 87% is a lot, and the parts that she doesn't have anymore are kind of important. Eyes, for example, tend to melt with enough heat. She was stupid enough to open her mouth, too. Screaming, probably. She doesn't really remember. Drugs can do that, especially the ones that they're pumping into her wherever they can. Wherever there's a port for it.

It's funny, because Delete Face finally shows up. He's the only analog person who knows that no one else will. "You never told me that you knew one of my students."

'I only tell you what you ask. And she was mine first.' Shiori's back to keystrokes, but she can blame it on the drugs. She doesn't have to wonder if she'll still be able to write scripts when she gets off of them. She'll be dead when she gets off of them.

"Was she your protege?"

'A lonely kid.'

That's the funny thing about tech. It doesn't work with loneliness. It never works alone. Most people think that tech heads are basement dwellers, that they isolate. That technology is isolating. That it even works when it's isolated.

It doesn't. A server without clients is a dead server. An ethernet cord that doesn't have a port is just...rope.

These drugs are nice.

'She'd be a better me. If she wants it. She wanted to be a hero, honestly.'

Hagakure never said that, but Hagakure doesn't have to say anything when she's honest. She probably doesn't even know when she's being honest, they're both so code. They've always been code, too much of it. Bad script. Shiori never meant to write so much of it.

'I fucked her up. Her parents did too. She's a good kid. Take care of her.'

"I should have seen it," Delete Face says, mostly to himself. He talks like that when she cracks a code he couldn't. She wishes that he cracked this one himself. It wouldn't have turned out this way if he did. But he's analog.

'Deathbed confession: I was behind most of those Delete Face vendors. You have a lot of fans in the gray. I made a shitton of money. Good hardware is expensive, you know.'

"Should've seen that too," Delete Face says. He doesn't laugh, but it's hard to laugh when you're looking at someone as charred as she is. She's kind of glad that she doesn't know what she looks like. That she can't see it. She can't even feel it most of the time. "You're younger than I thought."

'Smoking adds 10 years.'

She's 23, but he probably thought she was in her thirties. She was 16 when they met, and he probably thought she was in her twenties. She'd been in the gray for a while by that point, enough to be useful, useful to a lot of people but very few heroes. She's always been useful to him. He's just so damn analog, he needed her help a lot. He's the only analog person that she didn't mind helping.

'You know what's funny?'

He just hums interest. It sounds muffled. He probably feels bad for her, he feels the worst for the young ones, but it's not like she had much of a life left to live anyway. It was always going to turn out like this, one way or another.

'I'm type B.'

It's not really funny. There's a cut off point for skin grafts, and she's past it.

She's hospice, which is a nice way of saying that they're trying to get her so high that she forgets that she's dying. If she pisses off a nurse, she might die a little quicker, and she kinda wants to do that.

She's tired of rebooting, of bouncing the box. Force quit. Kill command. Smother her hardware by holding down the power button. Flip the kill switch on the power supply too. Unplug her, but literally.

'Don't tell Hagakure that. She'll cry. And we've already said goodbye.'

Delete Face stays for a long time, but he isn't there at the end, and she didn't expect him to be. She's not alone, though, and she didn't expect that. Whoever is with her might have tried to hold her hand, but she doesn't feel it. Doesn't know how much hand she has to hold.

It's funny. When you're dying, you don't feel anything, but you feel everything. It's impossible to parse. It's not even slightly code, it's the break. A full void. 0's and 1's.

They're not lying about seeing your life flash before your eyes. It works even if you don't have eyes.

It's a joke, it's funny. It's fine.

It's fine, because Shiori doesn't have time to see her whole life. Just the best parts. Some of Giran. A lot of Hagakure.

It's funny, because she doesn't feel anything, definitely not the hand holding her hand. Her brain is exploding on dopamine and drugs, she couldn't use her quirk if she tried. She can't connect to shit right now.

She can't even tell if they're digital or not.

If they're digital, she wants to tell her that it's okay, that she's proud of her, always has been. Hagakure deserved better, always has, she's sorry. She'd be a fantastic hero. She'd sell her merch like crazy. She's so damn sorry. Shouldn't have let it get this far, and it's all Shiori's fault. Should have been better, less rotten. Hagakure still has a chance. Should connect to people. Tech doesn't work alone. Tech can be honest.

If they're analog...

He's so fucking late, it doesn't even matter. Fuck his horses, fuck his smokes, and fuck the black. He set her up to take the fall, but he could have just asked. She wouldn't have said no. She still loves him. He needs to take better care of himself, stop smoking. He's getting darker than black and he doesn't even know it. She can't tell him. No home to go to. Don't pour out a beer. She's gray. He made her smoke. Just light one for her. It's funeral incense.

It's funny. She's so code that she's coding her own death.

Set Var.Breathing == False

wait(400)

#print("I love you both. So much.")

break

*

"I want out." She's honest, she can be honest. She can't be anything else right now, doesn't remember a single fucking code. Her wrists still burn from nearly ripping her skin off to get out of the cuffs, but she knew Shiori was here. Shiori was alive, because Aizawa said so.

Giran nods, he's still looking at her. There's a plastic tent around Shiori with one window. He doesn't let her look inside, and Hagakure doesn't know him. Doesn't know if he has the right to not let her. To tell her Shiori wouldn't want her to see.

She holds Shiori's hand through the plastic sheet. He tells her not to look when he lifts it up to put a cigarette between her fingers. She looked.

"You are," Giran says. His voice is lazy, gravely. They talk the same way, smoke the same cigarettes. There's only a few similarities, but they're there. They're enough. But they're so different. "It's easy, you're already...."

She'd hate him if he didn't have that vacant stare. The looseness in his body, like he's barely hanging by a string from the ceiling. Barely hanging on. She doesn't know what she looks like, but it's probably a lot like that.

He looks at her and laughs, but barely. "Stay in school, kid. I don't want to see you again." She doesn't want to see him either. She doesn't want him to see her, he doesn't have the right to. Shiori was trying to find him for years, he never showed up, she doesn't even like horse races.

School. She was in a school for heroes.

She's code. It's all she's known, all she's been. She wasn't a hero. Heroes don't know code, and they've never parsed her out. Not even Ojira. He doesn't know any code at all.

Code breaks. Heroes don't.

She wants to be a hero.

*

She's a ward now.

Maybe they didn't believe her when she said she doesn't know anything about The League. Maybe it's just because they know Shigaraki wants to take her out too, now that she's not plugged into UA. Maybe they want to see if Shigaraki will attack another hero school.

"What's with that look?" Ms. Joke asks, and Hagakure is trying to not blame her for it.

She's trying to do well here, she knows this is a second chance she doesn't deserve. She worked with The League, everything is her fault. She doesn't know how she was able to look Aizawa-sensei in the eye, she doesn't know how she'll be able to look at anyone now. Ojiro....

Ojiro probably hates her now.

She hates that the students that she took the Provisional Licensing Exam with already know her, that they have questions. Questions they don't ask, even if they still have them. Tatami talks to her the most, and Hagakure feels hollow every time she finds herself imitating her. Imitating how she was, how she used to speak. Filler.

She's tired of it.

She's tired of wondering if Aizawa-sensei knows how normal Ms. Joke really is, that even when she dresses like a clown and laughs and shouts all the time when she's in costume, at the end of the day she wears sweatpants and watches trash TV just like anyone else. But there's still something unnerving about how she is that Hagakure can't put a finger on. Maybe it's just because Ms. Joke has to keep her eyes on the traitor, she has to invite her to grab a slice of pizza and sit on the couch.

Hagakure has been fake, and she can spot a fake. She can spot the mask for the injection script. She thinks that's all it is when Ms. Joke asks her about tech, when she says she can't get rid of the notifications on her cellphone. When she sees Ms. Joke reading a book about 'Tech Lingo for Dummies' in the middle of the night, when Hagakure was just going to sneak into the kitchen for a glass of water.

Ms. Joke makes a lot of jokes, and they're all lame. That's probably a way to make the villains she takes down feel worse when she uses her quirk, because they laugh harder because they shouldn't be laughing at that. Ms. Joke tries to find a joke that works for Hagakure, and Hagakure laughs as fake as she feels.

This really isn't the end of it. This isn't what she deserves. She shouldn't have a place to go outside of a jail cell, she's a murderer. She killed the only person who ever cared about her because she just....

She just wanted someone to see her.

She didn't know what else to do, she knew no one really cared. Her parents stopped caring when they figured out she wouldn't save her brother, she wouldn't be the piece that puts him back together and takes him out of his hospital room. Shiori cared more than anyone else and she never saw that, she just saw the ceiling of her room driving her insane when Shiori said she couldn't come over, she couldn't see what she was doing. She wanted to.

She just wanted someone to want her there. Anywhere was fine. Anyone.

And now she doesn't have that. And it's her fault.

“Wait, wait, I’ve got one! Where do naughty hard drives get sent?” Ms. Joke asks, dashing out of the kitchen from where she was cutting up a pan of brownies, her finger raised in the air. She looks like she’s really excited about this one. “To boot camp!”

Hagakure laughs. It’s just a snort at first, and it catches in her chest, before the rest of it spills out. Almost like Ms. Joke is using her quirk on her. Almost.

“And now,” Shiori sighed and leaned back, throwing her legs on top of the monitor. “We’re in boot camp. Takes 10 freakin’ tries to get to the BIOS config, but I know that fan is plugged in, it’s fine, probably not registering for some idiot hardware update.”

Shiori always called it ‘boot camp,’ when she was working with an ancient OS that didn’t have UEFI. Shiori always seemed aggravated when that happened, stalling all the work she was trying to do. All the things she was putting off, all of her work, to show Hagakure how hardware could work and sometimes couldn’t. Troubleshooting.

She wouldn’t let Hagakure try, to at least take it out of Shiori’s hands so she wouldn’t get so aggravated with it. “No, it’s fine. I’ll show you the system logs after this, we can take bets on how many times I’ve got to bounce this stupid box before I beat the OS. I’ll disconnect the hard drive if it really starts pissing me off.”

She doesn’t know why Shiori didn’t just do that in the first place, BIOS would be the only thing that would load, it was pointless. Why did Shiori get involved? Why did she die? Why didn’t she just let Hagakure-

“Hey,” Ms. Joke says, sitting next to her on the couch with her hands on Hagakure’s shoulders. It’s fine, she’s just laughing, it’s funny, she swears she’s laughing. Ms. Joke looks at her like she knows and then wraps her arms around her, the soft band shirt catching Hagakure’s tears. “It’s alright. It’s alright.”

No one. No one knows when Hagakure is crying. It just sounds like laughter, that’s just how it works, no one has to look at her to see the difference because they can’t. She’s invisible, no one can see her tears. Laughter sounds like crying.

It’s funny, because it almost seems like they picked Ms. Joke, the Laughing Hero, because she would.

*

“It still doesn’t feel real,” Hagakure says, staring at that little diploma that’s rolled up in her hands, all dolled up and proper from her middle school graduation in that black uniform.

Shiori doesn’t feel even a speck of envy about it. She didn’t graduate but doesn’t need it, but she’s damn proud that Hagakure is going on to better things, getting better hardware to run her operations on.

“Graduating, moving into the dorms at UA. Getting into the Support Department, the best Support Department in the country.... You... know you didn’t really have to come though, right?”

Shiori tilts her head, knowing it’s a little pointless to try to look at Hagakure and try to see something on the surface to explain whichever thing she could mean by that. Invisible and all. But Shiori feels the chill of a fresh spring breeze wash over them, her neck and chin sweltering under the old scarf around her neck, and maybe it’s weird that she doesn’t feel it. Doesn’t have that kind of moment, like she usually does outside.

For some reason, she thought she did. She thought she panicked when she saw the sun, when she was standing in front of the threshold of her door. Sure, she had a backup plan to watch Hagakure's graduation through the surveillance cameras at her school, but she knew that her parents weren't going to be there, and if they were, it would just be quick enough to check it off their list. Not being there like Hagakure deserves.

"It's nothing, kid," Shiori says, as close as she can get to letting her heart jump right past her front teeth or something stupid like that, saying that she's proud. Hagakure wouldn't buy that shit, probably just feel icky hearing it as much as Shiori would saying it. Uncomfortable and all. "You wanna pick an ice cream place or something? You were telling me about that one spot. Now that..."

This didn't happen.

"I'm here..."

Shiori stops in her tracks, because she remembers. She got the ice cream delivered to her apartment after Hagakure's graduation, it melted and it was awful, and it was probably the sour cherry on top of her shitty day because Hagakure left on her own instead of getting chased out per usual.

Then again, they were still prissy at each other about The League and all, Shiori was trying to be the bigger person but she just wanted to shake Hagakure because Shiori isn't good at being the bigger person, and she knows it. She knows she shouldn't be anywhere near this kid, she shouldn't think that forcing Hagakure to consent to every attack on her class is some fucked up method of mentoring-

Shiori grabs the scarf around her neck and rips it off, doesn't know why her hands aren't shaking because they feel like they should. She doesn't know why she doesn't feel shaky at all in all this sunlight, this wind, this open air, but mostly she doesn't know what the fuck to do with this scarf.

She hasn't seen this scarf in years. The one Giran made her for Christmas. The one she lost when her whole life fell to shit and she had to leave everything behind, her legal name and Giran and having a home.

The one she didn't miss because fuck Giran, and she'd drop it on the ground and stomp on it if she could trust herself to move right now. Because she knows that she doesn't know what the fuck is going on.

But she's pretty sure she fucking died.

"Not quite!" Hagakure says, hopping right beside Shiori with way too much pep in her step and her voice, it's almost mocking how grating it is. "Like, don't freak on me too much, but you definitely were going to die, and it kinda medically happened? Not sure how much you remember right now and it's probably not cool beans to try to remember-"

"You're not Hagakure," Shiori says, glaring at a skippy little pipsqueak who's trying to wear Hagakure's invisible mug, but Hagakure sure as shit has never said 'cool beans.'

"True, fair. Does it bother you if I keep wearing this illusion though? It'll be more fun for you to guess who I am when we all gather around the water cooler," Not-Hagakure says, still kicking her legs around like legs are new, while that attempt at Peppy Talk slows down until it's normal person talk by the end. "So, don't freak out too much, but you're a little dead. At least, legally. Kind of in a coma and all too, getting some very specialized treatment right now. Something about a wax pit, a pretty special healing quirk is on reserve for you. You can't see it right now, but it kind of looks like that American movie with Angelina Jolie. ‘Wanted,’ I think?”

“Never heard of it,” Shiori says, because she’s not big on movies but this guy talks like he is. Now that he’s talking with his real voice, which is still pretty weird to know is attributed to this illusion of Hagakure.

“Well, I’d say we could catch up sometime and watch it together, but you’re going to be pretty busy, doing some real great work. You definitely aced an interview before that League of Villains stepped in, definitely caught our eye. Doing important work for us, gathering intel, that’s kind of my department,” Not Hagakure rambles on, and now that he’s using what’s probably his real voice mixed with a little drawl, Shiori thinks he’s mostly kicking Hagakure’s legs because he can feel the skirt somehow, or something.

This is all pretty weird, definitely some kind of quirk. It’s weirder because some pervert is dancing around in Hagakure’s skirt and she can’t kick him out-

“One, I’m not a pervert, but there’s this weird little attachment thing you have going on about your own memories in a skirt like this, and I’m trying to figure it out without going too deep. Two, definitely my quirk, great detective work right there,” Not Hagakure says, but stops dancing, starts talking a little more in Shiori’s language with the way he’s getting all bitter and snappy.

So, he gathers intel, and apparently she’s going to be gathering intel, she’s probably been gang-pressed into service for some shadowy organization and that’s unfortunately not new.

“Okay, we’re taking that... pretty well, I guess. Sure, you won’t be going outside much here, but that seems like a bonus for you. Like I said though, healthcare, room and board, we get recreational time for an hour a day starting out, until you get close to retirement like me. I guess to be fair, since I am invading your brainstem and all, I can get a little sappy and say I hope we’ll be friends? On the other side? I’m not really supposed to pop in on ya without authorization, but a buddy of mine is going to be away for a while and I’m already feeling lonely,” Not Hagakure keeps rambling on, and maybe the dancing was better than all this talking. “Have you ever seen ‘The Cell’ with Jennifer Lopez? It’s another American movie.”

“Nope,” Shiori says, rolling her eyes because this is going to get old quick. If she wasn’t trapped inside her own hardware, she’d probably have force quit this conversation, but there’s no escape. “I’m going to wake up in one of those places, aren’t I?”

‘Those places,’ the void that’s more than analog, where quite a few people she’s known have dropped off and gone dark. Shiori was born on the edge of society, a kid that no one wanted, growing up in a government-run childcare institution, and she’s seen kids that fall off the edge and don’t get found.

Fucking figures, she’s been waiting for this day to come for a while. Trying to live in the gray is close enough to black before this year got started on a shit foot thanks to The League. For some reason, she thought there’d be freedom in dying.

“A great detective,” Not Hagakure says, nodding her head with a little bounce of the bow holding her ponytail together. “But remember, you’ll be doing good work. I can already see how we can help you out with a lot of projects you left unfinished, you’ll be a great asset. In this digital age, you’ll probably be another me.”

There’s a way he says ‘another,’ that almost sounds like ‘better.’ That mostly sounds like ‘the next,’ which means replacement. And Shiori sure as shit doesn’t like how a guy with a middle aged voice talks about how he’s close to ‘retirement.’

“But for now, it’s all a dream. It’s your mind palace, and I’m just visiting,” Not Hagakure says with a shrug, then turns to look further up the sidewalk, even if no one’s there. Figures, Shiori would imagine she was there for Hagakure’s graduation, but wouldn’t fill the streets up with people so it’d be believable. It’d just be her and Hagakure. “And, I think this visit is coming to an end. I won’t be able to say it on the other side, but I think we’ll get along. I think it’ll be worth your while. And I’ll be laughing at whatever face you make when you figure me out.”

Not Hagakure shrugs again, and then just disappears, right in front of her eyes. Shiori can’t feel the spring breeze, she can’t understand why she’d be standing out here. If this is her ‘mind palace,’ that sounds like some way to dream. She heard some shit about lucid dreaming, but never slept enough to try it.

Might as well, now.

Shiori’s back in her nicest apartment, the one she’s been able to keep for a few years because she has a lot of shit on the landlord. She only pays rent because she doesn’t want him to get any ideas about tearing up a lease that doesn’t exist between them, when this apartment is listed as ‘uninhabitable’ on his records.

Shiori looks at Hagakure, without looking at her job boards for once, and takes the damn smoke out of her mouth to ash it. “It’s fine! I couldn’t pick which high school to go to anyway-”

“You’re better than this,” Shiori says, and even when she knows it’s not real, even when she knows this doesn’t make a single fucking difference, and it’s just stupid, she feels her heart crawling out of her damn throat and it chokes her up all the same.

Figures, she’s a sobby fucking wreck even in her own mind, when she gets like this.

“You go that far, and you’re going to regret it. I shouldn’t have started it anyway, Hagakure, I shouldn’t have gotten involved with you at the start,” Shiori says, and she can’t look up from her fucking ashtray. Like it’ll really break her damn heart to see Hagakure leave like she should have when it’s all a fucking dream. “You’re meant for better than this, you’ve got so much damn talent and goodness inside you, and there’s not a damn thing you’ll find that will make you feel better if you go down this road! There’s no one there who will see it!”

Shiori knows that Hagakure is past the point of seeing the warning signs, she’s too young to see them yet beyond chasing that feeling of being wanted, of being seen, of having friends that see her, but they’re not fucking friends. Shiori spent years thinking Giran was the best damn thing to happen to her, even after he fucked her over, but there are friends that are friends and don’t need Hagakure to do shit to recognize who she is. She’ll become something she’s not if she keeps going down this road.

Shiori became who she is, but she had shit chances from the start, crawling to the top of the bottom in her own little niche was the best it was ever going to be. But Hagakure deserves better.

“I just wanted you to see it,” Hagakure says, and this isn’t some fucking dream palace because that’s not on script, that’s not what Shiori wants to hear. “I don’t care about The League, or high school, or anything else. I just want to hear that you’re proud of me. I just want to be with you.”

Shiori chased her out of the apartment right after this, because she was pissed and because she had a favor from Eraserhead to make good on. She could have fucking stopped it right there, she knew he worked at UA. Hagakure hadn’t even taken the entrance exam yet and Eraserhead could have scared the shit out of her then.

But she didn't. Because she didn't want to burn another bridge that meant everything to her. She didn't want to lose Hagakure.

"Then be with me. Not them," Shiori says, and forgets that it's a dream, her room almost blips into what it could be if this was real for a second.

She'd clean up her space if Hagakure lied to her parents and said UA already had dorms, knowing they wouldn't check, and Shiori lives in Mustafu so it would be a shorter bus route. At first she sees a hardware project that she knows is for a Support Department exam, but changes it back to Hagakure's gloves, they're both working on it at her desk. Trying to figure out how to fit a full toolkit in there, because Hagakure is a hero that's more than invisible.

"We'll figure this shit out, I'll be a better friend, just don't do this shit, Hagakure," Shiori says, and she feels it like a command sent through her quirk, that dull pop in her skull that almost sounds like a dial tone, she almost convinces herself that it's real.

But it's not, because Hagakure isn't there, her uniform isn't standing up straight in her apartment, just like she left like she did in real life.

Because this is real life, and she'll still never see Hagakure again. Gang-pressed and all, she's alone.

Like she's been, and probably deserves to be. Corrupting everything she touches and all. Good luck to the shadowy goons when she wakes up and has to do 'good work' for them.

Shiori imagines another smoke, because the tingle of nicotine buzz is something she can imagine, not that she experiences it much anymore, and tries to think in the time she's got, locked in her own cranium until they wake her up or some shit. 'Good work,' 'unfinished projects,' 'intel gathering.' 'Mind palace.'

Eh shit, doesn't really matter right now, but if she can keep saving kids and fuck with Giran from beyond the grave, it sounds like a pretty good afterlife. Hopefully she'll wake up with eyes, even if she does most of her work blind, without monitors to reflect her quirk's actions.

Then again, with her quirk, it'll be hard to keep her in place, won't it?

Chapter End Notes

For those in the comments and discord, I did intend to kill an OC in this arc, and it was always meant to be Shiori. But, I found that I liked her a little too much after writing her backstory, which will also be uploaded to Ao3 along with a chapter as a flashback to Hagakure and Shiori's relationship before Hagakure applied to UA.

The numbers that Hagakure tells Aizawa are a code, Hexadecimal conversion to be exact. It's also relevant that the '#' in front of a print statement makes that line into a comment, meaning that command wouldn't be performed in the code that Shiori mentally writes.

Also, if you want more Shiori content, such as her backstory and a flashback chapter with Shiori and Hagakure's friendship, you can check out Troubleshooting in the Wards of UA series here!: <https://archiveofourown.org/works/26619751>

What You're Packing

Chapter Summary

Winter break begins suddenly at UA, as Aizawa attempts to be the steady presence that his students need, he's undeniably affected by the events that have unfolded, from Hagakure's expulsion to Shiori's death. Shinsou and Yamada struggle to reconnect when they both have revelations they'd rather hide from each other, but Mirio's renewed confidence draws him to reach out, and Aizawa makes a horrifying discovery after Shinsou is left unsupervised for too long.

Chapter Notes

Trigger Warnings: Disturbing imagery in Aizawa's nightmare (including maggots), Mentions of Bug sessions,

Previously on Wards of UA: Aizawa believes that Shiori is dead. Aizawa learned about the torture that Shinsou went through from Bug's quirk during the cabin weekend. Aizawa repeats his current class roster as a grounding mantra when his PTSD symptoms flare up. When Ms. Joke gave Shinsou a splint and crutch for his sprained ankle, she said that Shinsou should be on bed rest and Aizawa should wear a tux and trim up his mustache to take care of him while looking like a butler. Shoji's little sister Mizuno is the first friend Eri has made that's around her age. Shinsou's mother, Shinsou Ui, will be facing charges related to selling Shinsou to The Miasma when he was 4 years old, and thus will likely not be able to take custody of him after the wardship is over. When 127 attacked Shinsou, Mirio was there and tried to convince Shinsou to run to safety, but Shinsou used ConfessionWash to make Mirio leave in order to keep Mirio from getting hurt. Shinsou has multiple quirks now due to being fused with Chisaki and Nemoto during the raid on the 8 Precepts of Death, and Mirio was present when Chisaki fused into Shinsou. Shinsou had planned on wearing a Lemillion shirt when he had to meet with Chisaki for the investigation. When Shinsou and Eri were still at the 8 Precepts, Shinsou would steal vanilla-scented soap for Eri to use, since they only had bleach provided by Chisaki. Earlier in the wardship, Shinsou was convinced that Mirio only wanted to use Eri for her quirk, and considered killing him to protect Eri, but couldn't bring himself to do it. Shinsou had been cut several times in the fight between himself and 127 that followed after 127 forced the mask on Shinsou's face again.

Aizawa knows where he is. USJ.

He doesn't feel the pain, but he feels how his limbs are trapped and unresponsive, he feels the pressure around his head. He looks and he can't see Shigaraki, the central plaza seems barren at first glance.

But then he sees her, standing in that pool, alone. Hagakure.

“Why didn’t you see it?” Hagakure asks, her arms bare and invisible from wearing her school uniform without the blazer, but he imagines they’re pulled in front of her chest. He can see her face, as though he’s always been able to see it. He sees the tears running down her face. “Now, now I can’t...”

She can’t. Not now. Her potential, however much she didn’t see it at the time, he did and there’s nothing for it now. She can’t become a hero with this stain on her record.

“And Shiori.”

Aizawa looks towards the rasping sound, even when he feels how much he doesn’t want to like a boiling heat inside his body. Shiori, not as she should be, laying on the central plaza covered in leaking gauze without even a hospital robe for decency. A sight he can’t forget, however little he could stomach to see in that hospital room.

“I’m type B,” Shiori says, in her own voice, a voice she can no longer use, a piece lost to an inferno that still left its mark in his dream. “I could have turned out different. All this shit could have been avoided, Delete Face. You just didn’t see it.”

He sees it, and he fights to break the Nomu’s hold on his limbs, he fights to turn his head away but he feels that the Nomu has them too, rotting hands holding his wrists and his head are squirming with the same small maggots crawling from under the oily gauze wrapped around Shiori’s body.

“Don’t blink,” Shiori says, in a tone she never used with him, solemn as it is pleading and desperate. “Don’t blink, you’ll miss it.”

“Shinsou!” Hagakure screams, and Aizawa doesn’t blink despite the burning, despite the fruitless thrashing in the Nomu’s hold, but he turns his head just enough to see Hagakure with her hands held to her face in a silent scream, her fingers clawed with desperation. He follows her gaze to see Hitoshi standing in front of him.

His arms bleeding, the skin ripped away from his scars. Like they were before. His eyes glowing. “You’re too late.”

Aizawa tries to find the words to say, to argue that he’s not, to fight the static in his skull and the Nomu’s hold on him, to fight the burning in his eyes and only finds himself able to gasp, dragging each breath quicker than the last, his mouth open for it, but he feels his tongue twist like it’s no longer his tongue, it’s a maggot-

“Shou, baby-”

Aizawa throws himself back before he even feels the bed below him, or recognizes his husband’s voice or words. He only remembers both when he’s sitting on the floor, feet pressed to the carpet, a sting in his shoulder where he might have hit the nightstand. Still trying to catch his breath, collect himself enough to realize it was a nightmare, and lock up every piece of it that still remains in his mind.

He bends his head forward, towards his bent knees, bracing his arms against his thighs in a bid not to look at Hizashi yet. It’s been months since it was that bad. “I... packed your medicine, right?”

Aizawa nods, even if he has to hold his breath, even if he has to feel angry at himself for being afraid to speak. Afraid to find that his tongue was a maggot, like in that horrifying dream. “Skipped the dose. Night before last. Probably why.”

He knows it's not. He knows missing a single dose wouldn't bring back these nightmares this vividly, but the medicine isn't meant to stop them entirely. Just make it less likely that he'll have nightmares, make the nightmares themselves feel less terrifying. If the medicine is taken along with a regular sleeping schedule.

Which Aizawa will never have. "What time is it?"

Aizawa finally risks looking at his husband, only able to because his still electrified nerves seem to convince him enough that asking for the time is a good enough shield to hide from the questions he knows his husband has, how much he wants to talk about it. "7:30, but Nezu went ahead and cancelled classes for the week. We'll just start a week earlier after winter break. Homeroom teachers are supposed to be on dorm duty today, in an hour."

Hizashi looks up from his phone, his concern too apparent now. Aizawa still forces himself not to look away. Not to blink.

"You can let me handle it. My schedule is cleared, and I got along swell with the herolets over the weekend," Hizashi says, and Aizawa barely opens his mouth to argue before his husband predicts the argument. "I know, you feel like it has to be you, and it can be. But you can take a day for yourself to be there for them tomorrow."

Aizawa shakes his head, dropping to brace his forehead against his arms. "It has to be me. For me."

He won't be able to put it to rest until he sees them with his own eyes, until he sees all of his students in whatever state they're in. Until he meets them where they are.

When he can count off every name on his attendance sheet, he can begin to forget the one who won't be on it when winter break ends.

"It was a bad one this time," Hizashi says, and Aizawa imagines that the Nomu's hold on him wasn't just in his mind. It's rare, but when it's 'bad,' his body tries to fight before his mind wakes up from the nightmare. He's lucky that he married a pro hero with good enough reflexes, that he's never made a bruise he'd never forgive himself for putting on his husband.

Aizawa lifts his head slowly, taking in the tangled mess of the bed, Hizashi's worry still wordless but no less present. It's the same familiar question that Aizawa can't bring himself to answer, he can't bring himself to talk about it. To describe the nightmare that trapped him inside his mind.

There's another nightmare, one that's not in his mind, but still present in that one. He hasn't told Hizashi everything about what happened in the mountains, everything that Hitoshi told him. The oatmeal diet seems far easier to tell Hizashi than the other torment, one that Aizawa can't put to words himself. Not when he only hears it in Hitoshi's voice when he tries. B-Bug's maggots.

But he has to find those words. He can keep his own secrets from his husband. But not secrets about his ward. "Hitoshi told me more about what he had been through. At Miasma."

Aizawa looks at his husband one last time, before he finds a spot on the mattress to stare at when the words come to him.

Even if he has to say it, he has to look away.

*

Hitoshi wakes up alone, in his own bed instead of Eri's, to the sound of a door opening down the hall. With his eyes barely open, his face somewhat burning and too sensitive from sleeping on his stomach, he pulls his phone from the nightstand to check the time. He's slept for about four hours.

He pulls himself out of bed, and puts on whatever clothes his hands fall on when he reaches out. Black pants that feel tight around the waist, and a gray turtleneck knitted sweater. He should leave to brush his teeth, comb his hair, help Yamada make breakfast, but he doesn't.

He doesn't want to see Yamada right now.

It's frustrating, how much it's frustrating. He feels like he barely has skin when he's around Yamada, he feels too raw, too seen. He feels like Yamada already knows, because at this point, he's sure Yamada knows. Aizawa probably told him everything, especially about how Hitoshi can speak freely now.

Hitoshi knows that when he opens that door, Yamada will look at him and expect that. Expect Hitoshi to talk to him, because he can, even if he can't. He can't bring himself to do that to Yamada, to change everything so drastically and in such a terrifying way, it makes his gut twist at just the thought.

Hitoshi has to unpack from his trip, in order to use his backpack for school, so that's what he does instead with his extra time. His laundry basket is empty, but he puts the folded up clothes he used on his trip in there, including the hoodie that had been in his stash, still crusted with blood. He puts 50 back on her rightful place on his desk, right beside the picture of Eri. Just in case he didn't come back to UA, he wanted to make sure he kept those things.

Now he's back, and his room feels more strange than it did before he left. He still feels like none of these things are really his, not the books on his shelf or the cat figurines on his desk, or the laptop. Or the troll doll that Bakugo altered to look like him.

Or the cat keychains.

There's so many things that aren't really his, that were gifts, that are pieces of other people, and just looking at them sickens him. He doesn't want any of it, he doesn't need any of it. His room is too cluttered now.

Hitoshi kneels on the floor, to pull out his stash box, the black metal lockbox that Yamada bought for him to keep even more useless connections inside and out of sight. The key for the lock is always beneath the box, just in case anyone wanted to root through his things again and mock them like Hari did. He'd know if the key was moved.

It's never been moved, it's still pressed into the carpet like it should be.

Hitoshi picks it up, unlocks the box, and starts cleaning up.

The troll doll is the first thing, but the keychains are next. The notebooks and pens that he got are still useful, and he doesn't know who got them for him, so they don't bother him as much. But the books that he knows the 1-A students got him, all of their little trinkets, and all of the useless and horribly well-suited gifts that Quirk Thief has gotten him this month that have been stuffed under a corner of his mattress also need to go.

He keeps forgetting things, until he sees them, because he's been lazy recently with his collection. A wrapper from a snack that he got when he went to Yamada's radio show one weekend that was just sitting on his desk, one of Eri's hairbands that she had dropped on the floor in the hallway and he hadn't put back rests on his nightstand. He looks in the drawer in his desk and finds more useless things, like the recipes from Mrs. Midoriya, and her phone number that he can't call because he doesn't have a SIM card. He puts all of those things where they belong, in his stash box, before he locks it.

He puts it by the door, so he can get rid of it when he has to leave, but he hopes Yamada goes back to his room for some reason so he won't be there when he gets rid of it. He knows Yamada might be disappointed that he doesn't want the box, and maybe he should keep the box for that reason, to not offend Yamada. But everything inside of it needs to be thrown away.

He can't stand it in his room anymore, and the stupid feelings of attachment to the trash worst of all need to be thrown away too. This is the way to do it.

He only keeps what he knows is useful, like the headphones that Mandalay gave him. He knows it's stupid to not want to use them, even though he was so irritated that he couldn't on Friday because it would have 'ruined the surprise' of the training that Aizawa planned.

The surprise that came after the training, 127's visit, shouldn't be the reason that he doesn't want to pack the headphones to listen to his lectures. He just knows that the hero students might bug him because they haven't seen them, because they're stupid enough to forget that he doesn't want anything to do with them.

But he packs them, because that's the reason, and he doesn't care about what they do. If they're stupid, then he'll have to say it again, more slowly for them. And if there's another reason that he doesn't want to use these headphones, he's going to have to get over it, because it's a stupid reason.

He finds the knife that he almost forgot about at the bottom of his backpack when he does, and clips it to the inside of his waistband like he usually does. Like he always did, until Aizawa found out about 50, and then he stopped carrying his knife as much. He felt like he didn't need to. He hadn't even moved the knife from his drawer in almost a month, until Friday when he packed it. After he was attacked.

And he's not going to risk getting caught off-guard like that again. Even if Aizawa says he's not going to be alone, he's not going to be unescorted, he would be stupid not to have the knife anyway.

Hitoshi flinches when the door opens, when he knows it's Yamada coming in to ask why he was still signing to him if he could talk and what kind of disrespect he means by that, but instead, Hitoshi sees that it's Aizawa, and he shouldn't be awake this early. "You're up early."

That's honestly the stupidest thing that anyone has ever said to him, and Hitoshi barely knows how to respond to it. "It's a school day."

"It's not," Aizawa says, before he closes the door behind him, glancing at the stash box before he looks at Hitoshi again. "Winter break has started early. School won't be back in session for a month, which means I'll be spending more time at the 1-A dorm. I'll be there all day today, and tonight."

Which is almost meaningless, because Hitoshi doesn't care where Aizawa is or what he's doing, but if he's at the 1-A dorm and Hitoshi isn't, that means he's basically 'unescorted.' Free to live in peace because of that.

"Which means that I'm trusting you not to run off like you did last night," Aizawa says, like he has a mind-reading quirk. "You shouldn't walk without the splint either."

Hitoshi rolls his eyes, walking to his bed and pointedly putting his weight on his injured ankle just to spite Aizawa. He's supposed to 'heal on his own.' It's stupid and irritating.

"If you need anything--"

"You won't be there," Hitoshi interrupts, running a hand through his hair while he glares at the closet. "I'll need someone else to look stupid in a tux."

That might have been a step too far for some reason, because Aizawa's feet shift as he shifts his weight, and out of the corner of his eye, he can see Aizawa's arms cross in front of his chest. "Why aren't you talking to Hizashi?"

A question. A question that Hitoshi doesn't want to answer, and it's almost more irritating because of that. "Make me."

It's too easy to keep him from talking, they either have the mask still on hand or they saw enough of it to know how simple it is to make. Just two bars under his chin, held on his face by the top part that rests above his cheekbones and nose, a metal band around the back of his head to hold the entire thing in place. It's easy to make sure he can't talk.

It's impossible to force him to talk, and Aizawa knows that.

"I was asking what your reasons are--"

"I'd rather you didn't," Hitoshi says, wondering in the back of his mind how far he can push today while he reaches over to get his phone, to wonder if the hero students have said anything about him in that chat, or if they even have it anymore. There's another chat where he's not included, and they've probably gone back to it.

He's just curious about whether they have, and he's not afraid at all that he's pushed too far already. Aizawa is back at UA, back in his place of strength, and all those things that Hitoshi got away with during the weekend could be punished now. Easily. "We'll talk later, then."

Hitoshi doesn't look up until he hears the door close, until he knows that Aizawa is gone. Leaving. To go watch the hero students all day and all night, and basically be gone that entire time. He can hear him open Eri's door, probably to tell her the same thing, maybe invite her to go with him if she's upset by it.

Not that he invited Hitoshi. Or that he would think to do that.

The groupchat with 1-A is missing from the app now.

*

Ojiro heard the knock on his door. He saw the message in the groupchat, and the text message from Iida to gather downstairs in the common room for whatever speech Aizawa wants to make about Tooru.

Hagakure.

It takes a while to work up the nerve to pull himself out of his bed, not that he's slept much despite not leaving his bed. Ignoring all of the knocks on his door, and the messages from his classmates who hadn't paid this much attention to him all year, compared to the last 48 hours. Or however long it's been.

He should probably keep track of how many hours have passed since his girlfriend was arrested under the suspicion that she compromised the security system at UA leading to a villain attack that wounded four people. Especially because if Aizawa is making a speech about it, it's probably more than just suspicion.

Ojiro doesn't notice until he's halfway down the stairwell, that he's still wearing his pajamas. It's probably not what he should be wearing, but he doesn't trust that he'll leave his room again if he goes back to change.

When he opens the door, he finds he's not the only one still in sleepwear. Only a few others besides Iida are wearing their school uniforms, even if the news that winter break was starting early came a while ago. Maybe yesterday. He doesn't really remember.

Aizawa looks at him, because he's the last one to arrive, and it shouldn't feel so easy to not care about disappointing his teacher. But Ojiro takes his place next to Shoji, on the edge of where everyone is gathered, some sitting down but most standing.

Aizawa looks tired, but he actually shaved, which he only did when he was a part of that press conference after the summer camp incident. Maybe he had to have another press conference about Tooru.

Hagakure.

"Your first year as students at UA has been unique," Aizawa says, and Ojiro fights not to let his eyes glaze over. He knows Aizawa won't give them a long winded, flowery speech about how they need to pull through despite that, but just listening to his voice is exhausting. "There has never been a class at UA that has been targeted and attacked by villains like you have. From the beginning of the year with the USJ incident to the summer training camp. The League of Villains has placed a heavy burden on you."

It doesn't feel like that, most of the time. Ojiro hasn't been 'targeted' the same way other students were in those attacks. He wasn't kidnapped like Bakugo. He didn't get nearly disintegrated like Asui.

"That, along with the incident Friday night, was due to a spy who enrolled at UA to leak information needed to orchestrate those attacks," Aizawa says, and Ojiro feels his blood run cold, the first thing he's really felt since Tooru was taken away, before he even says it. "Hagakure."

Pft, 'Hagakure' sounds like a loogey. I really don't mind if you call me Tooru. His tail thrashed so bad and his face burned when he said she could call him by his given name too, before he had the nerve to say the things that were still true at that time.

That might still be true. The things he still feels, even when he knows it only rips him apart. "Hagakure was your classmate, and I don't expect this transition to be easy for any of you."

"She really did that," Bakugo says, almost like he's laughing, but too bitter for that. Like he's the only one affected by it, he's the only one who was kidnapped so he's the only one suffering now. He never said a word to Tooru except to hiss and growl and call her an 'extra.' "You're saying that bubblegum chewing preppy little bitch really-"

"Dude," Kirishima hisses, and Ojiro almost feels the eyes on him. Almost. He knows they're there. He knows it doesn't matter.

"At this point, law enforcement is only certain of her actions, not the degree of her culpability," Aizawa says, crossing his arms in front of his chest like he's daring anyone to interrupt again. It's the least stern that Aizawa has ever looked, because he just looks so tired. "She might have been blackmailed into this situation, and law enforcement will take that into account."

"Sensei," Midoriya calls, raising his hand too. Like this is class. Like this is the press conference that Aizawa shaved for, and Midoriya is the reporter. Like any of this matters. "The incident... where a villain with a blue fire quirk attacked a police caravan... Is Hagakure okay?"

Ojiro clenches his teeth, staring at the ground with his fists knotted. He hasn't actually read any notifications that came over his phone, but if he really ignored that Tooru was attacked like that-

"Hagakure wasn't involved," Aizawa says, quickly enough to reassure everyone, all of his classmates who probably knew about it and wanted to talk to him about it. They were bugging him this entire time because they thought that Tooru might be dead. "She will be placed in protective custody regardless. But she will not be able to communicate with any of you, or return to UA."

That's it then.

Ojiro's first girlfriend turned out to be a spy who betrayed his class to villains, got arrested and expelled, and now they can't even break up properly over text. "This is a sudden beginning for your winter break, and you'll have the day to plan accordingly. The revised schedule for your home visits and internships will be made available once I get them."

That's it then. Aizawa doesn't even bother dismissing them, just starts walking towards the stairs to go to the room with all the surveillance cameras. He just told everyone that Tooru did that, that she won't be coming back, and ended it with a bulletin about their winter break schedule like it's normal to say that one of their own almost got everyone killed a couple times.

Ojiro sees Kouda look at him from the other side of the room, and Ojiro decides that he'll be the first to leave, to avoid any invitations to spend time with all his precious school friends who will want to talk about how horrible it is that they didn't see it coming. Only, they'll probably want to ask if he did. He was the only one that knew Tooru was thinking about breaking into Aizawa's dorm to spy on Shinsou.

Only, no one knows that he told her she shouldn't do it, that she was just being paranoid. She always seemed so worried about Shinsou, so scared of him, almost. She always jumped to the worst conclusions, she was convinced he was up to no good whenever they weren't around.

Isn't that funny?

Ojiro doesn't even notice it, until he's standing in front of the door that leads to the girl's side of the third floor. His dorm is right behind him, and Tooru's is right in front of him past that open door. And her door is open.

Ojiro feels more than he has in days, or however long it's been, when he sees Tooru's door has been left open, like anyone could just walk in and take her things, take whatever they want, just because she's not coming back. They don't know what's most important to her, they don't even know the name of that little cactus Ashido gave her, or how often Tooru would fret about how much she should water it. How much she cared about that little cactus, how she shouldn't leave it behind.

Ojiro has his hands fisted at his side while he stalks towards Tooru's room, nearly shaking with rage when he thinks that something could already be missing.

But all of that cools when he sees Aizawa's back turned to him, his teacher crouched on the floor as he folds a cardboard box into place. To pack up her things of course. Probably, to send them to her family.

Ojiro must have been a pretty awful boyfriend, because he doesn't even know what her parents look like, how they are. Tooru never told him about them.

Ojiro feels the end of his tail hit the wall when Aizawa turns to look at him, when he really doesn't know what to say. Whether he really wants to argue that he should be the one to do this, Aizawa might have been Tooru's teacher but he doesn't know her like Ojiro does.

No one knew Tooru like he did, and he didn't even know her.

Aizawa doesn't say anything, but he waves his hand to invite him inside. Ojiro takes it, taking a step that doesn't even feel real to him as he takes in how different Tooru's room seems, when he knows she's not there to breathe life into it. He almost closes the door, just out of habit, but leaves it open enough.

He doesn't know where to start, in this conversation or with packing all of Hagakure's belongings away when he doesn't feel like he has the right to touch them.

"You were closer to her than my other students," Aizawa says, still staring at the box while he tapes up the bottom, setting it aside to use for packing. "She regrets what she did. She won't be charged, and the protective custody is for her own safety."

Ojiro just stares at Aizawa's back, waiting for words that he knows won't come. Even if Aizawa met with Hagakure.

She probably didn't have anything else to say to him. Nothing but her final words to him. I'm sorry.

"She didn't... tell me anything about that," Ojiro says, like he needs to absolve himself of any suspicion to his teacher. Somehow, halfway through saying it, his intention changes to something else. Something that aches in his chest, like talking about it is suddenly too much now, now that he's trying to. "She wasn't... like that."

Aizawa looks over his shoulder at Ojiro, but he has to turn his head away. That giant blue teddy bear that a friend gave her in middle school, still sitting right in the middle of her bed next to the wall. The cherry-patterned curtains that she picked, because her favorite flavor was cherry. Just artificial ones, she didn't even like the jarred kind. "It wasn't your responsibility to see it."

Aizawa stands up, like he doesn't know where to start either. Probably the banners hanging on her walls, probably her plushies. Her bedding could go in the same box, all the soft things packed together like that. They'd need tools to take apart her bedframe, they'd need to be careful with her laptop.

Her laptop is missing.

Probably evidence.

"You don't have to—"

"I want to," Ojiro insists, interrupting his teacher before he can remember himself, that he really shouldn't overlook their relationship just because he's overwhelmed right now. Aizawa is his teacher, and deserves more respect than he gets from his classmates sometimes.

But Aizawa just turns to look at him fully, the bags under his eyes seem more dark than ever. “You don’t have to blame yourself. Hagakure made a choice. One that affected you. But it’s out of your control.”

Ojiro nods, even if he’d prefer being scolded rather than reassured like this. He’s made a habit of not getting overwhelmed, acting unseemly when he wants to prove himself as a hero. He’d rather only have Aizawa’s attention when it’s earned positively, when it’s nothing but praise and calm, measured criticism meant only to help him improve.

He takes his hands that feel too shaky, and puts them to better use taking down the banners on her wall. Tooru’s room was clearly well-decorated, even if it felt a little crowded at times, a little too ‘cutesy.’ As much as she was cute, as much as she seemed to play it up in front of other people, there was so much more to her than that.

He doesn’t know if anyone else got to see that side of her, that could be serious.

He doesn’t know if what he saw was the real Tooru, or just another side of a fake.

Aizawa starts with the curtains, pulling off each end of the rod to slide them off, even if he folds them a bit haphazardly before piling them in the box. Ojiro puts the banners in too, before he grabs the plushies on her shelf. He bought one of them for her, the purple penguin with the green tie, the one that looks the most out of place when everything else is soft pastels and pink and cute.

He remembers what she named it, and doesn’t let himself remember it when he sets it in the box. Aizawa starts setting up another box.

“Sensei?” Jirou calls, standing in front of the cracked door, Yaoyorozu standing behind her. Jirou shared the same floor as Tooru, but almost seemed like the most reluctant of the 1-A girls to talk to her. Tooru wondered if Jirou just hated her, or if she was just shy. If maybe Jirou thought she was a little too much sometimes. “We can help, if that’s... alright.”

“That’s fine,” Aizawa says, carelessly. As if anyone can touch Tooru’s things now that she’s gone, now that she can’t speak for them.

But when Jirou and Yaoyorozu make a beeline for Tooru’s clothes packed in her drawers, Ojiro turns to look at the bed with a burning face and thump of his tail. He’s a little grateful that neither himself or Aizawa have to do that part.

“Did...” Jirou starts and stops, after Ojiro hears the slide of the drawer opening. He glances over his shoulder to see her holding a T-shirt that Tooru used as sleepwear, but only when she decided to stay in for the night, when it wasn’t a study night or ‘girl’s night.’ He told her before that it might clear things up better between her and Jirou.

“She liked that band,” Ojiro says, pulling the pillowcase off so it can be properly folded, even if it won’t really make much difference than packing the pillow with it on. “She worried that you’d think she was trying too hard to be friends with you if you saw her wearing it.”

He doesn’t want to know what Jirou thinks of that, if she feels bad for every time she walked down the hall with her earbuds in, already dismissing Tooru when Tooru just wanted to talk. Tooru thought it was a great opportunity for them to be best friends as floormates. That they’d have so much fun.

Jirou doesn’t say anything, and maybe she feels that regret. Maybe she just feels awkward voicing that.

“Here,” Yaoyorozu says, setting down a laundry bag, the perfect size to store all of Tooru’s bedding. Something that Yaoyorozu probably made. “I don’t think we have enough boxes.”

Aizawa doesn’t say anything to that, and it doesn’t seem like he brought these boxes in with him. Maybe they’re from a supply closet, maybe they’re just on hand for when they move out of this dorm, so that there won’t be any confusion or panic when they don’t have enough moving supplies.

Maybe there’s boxes on hand, just for this kind of occasion. When someone gets expelled, they can get cleared out quickly. One for each room, just in case.

“Do you guys need any help?” Uraraka asks, even though there’s already enough girls to pack away Tooru’s clothes. Even though it’s unfair that Ojiro knows he’s the only guy that will offer to help, the only guy that Tooru really ever talked to, he’s the only real friend she had even when the girls hung out so much. They always seemed to ignore Tooru, when she talked about all of the jokes they said, but didn’t really talk about anything she said during those get-togethers.

“Sure,” Aizawa says, agreeing again like he wants to just get this over with. Like he’s too tired, he wants to take another nap like he does during homeroom, just as soon as he checks ‘packing Tooru’s room up’ off his list.

Ojiro tries to argue with himself that Aizawa has more of a right to make that decision than he does, he has more right to decide what happens to this room because he’s their homeroom teacher.

But he grits his teeth, because it still feels wrong.

“Maybe, we could get a smaller box for her cactus?” Uraraka asks, probably focusing on her desk. Ojiro folds Tooru’s comforter, knows that he’ll put her teddy bear in last to pack up her bedding. This is moving along quicker than he expected. “It wouldn’t be good for it if all the dirt spills out-”

“She’d probably want Ashido to have it back,” Ojiro says, because he doesn’t know what ‘protected custody’ means, but it probably means that it would be a long trip for that cactus to make. Everything will probably be shipped to another city, another prefecture.

And Tooru would probably cry if she saw that Needly died on the trip, no matter how well it was packed. She wanted to take care of it.

“It doesn’t... really feel like it should end like this,” Yaoyorozu says, quietly. Her voice is so quiet, but it startles Ojiro into looking around the room, to see how empty it is already, how much more empty it is than it was before. How there will be nothing left of Tooru in this room, in this dorm, at UA or in his life.

She didn’t even say goodbye to him. She didn’t give him a single reason for what she did, if any of it was real. It probably wasn’t. It was probably just a part of her plan.

Hagakure didn’t say goodbye, but he has to. And he has to do it properly.

Ojiro clenches his jaw, and pointedly doesn’t look at Uraraka or Yaoyorozu when he slips between them to open the drawers of Hagakure’s desk. The seashells she collected on a trip to the beach, the necklaces she never put up properly, official schedules and papers that accrue from being a UA student, the same ones he keeps in a folder in his own desk drawer.

And then the incense he gave her, that she asked to ‘borrow’ when he mentioned that it helped him meditate sometimes. Sandalwood, his favorite, a plain incense and it looks like she used a few of those sticks.

She won't want them to be packed, anyway. She didn't tell him goodbye, but she meant it. She never meant any of it to be real, and he was just a fool.

Ojiro lights one, the rest of the package and the lighter still on the desk, the incense holder is only meant for one stick at a time, but he knows he's the only one who has the right to say goodbye. And he does, with a clap of his hands, his hands still shaking in front of his chest when he offers the shallowest bow, still filled with anger. "It's ending anyway. I wish her well."

He wishes it was that easy. If there was just an end that made sense, some explanation to smother the shaking rage he feels too brightly. Why? Why would Tooru do this? Why didn't he see it, why did she never say anything?

The reasons that make sense, that Hagakure never intended to make friends and that's why she never did, except for him because he was stupid enough to overlook everything else about her and just think to himself that she seemed lonely. He doesn't know what was fake, what he really has, which memories are just deceptions but he wishes all of them could burn up in smoke. He wishes he could start anew.

He wishes he never fell in love with her, so his chest wouldn't hurt this much.

"Oh, Sensei, I can help-" Midoriya's voice calls from the doorway, and Ojiro opens his eyes even if he fears that someone will see how they're watering, but everyone is watching Aizawa leave with the only full box they have.

"It's fine," Aizawa says, after he's already walked past Midoriya's open hands. Ojiro stares at his teacher's back.

He's heard Aizawa's voice in many tones, many moods.

He's never heard Aizawa sound like that.

"God, I was so stupid," Jirou growls, backing away from Hagakure's dresser and onto her unmade bed, the bare mattress, almost guided by Yaoyorozu's hands that are reached out and obviously trying to catch her. Jirou holds her hands around her face, trying to hide it, but her anger is clear enough to hear. Her hands are shaking too. "She was blackmailed, Aizawa-sensei said it himself! All those times she tried to talk to me, and I... I thought it was just Tooru being Tooru."

They didn't know Tooru enough, to know she wasn't always Tooru. She wasn't always jokes and invisible smiles and giggles and she could be close to tears sometimes when she talked about how no one else seemed to see her. You're kind of the only one who gets me.

He didn't get it. Maybe that was a puzzle he was meant to solve, maybe he should have been smart enough to figure out his girlfriend was forced to be a villain.

He was right beside her when they entered USJ for the first time. He can still hear her gasp of amazement.

He still has no idea if that was fake, if she already knew what would happen. Or if she leaked that information after. How they even forced her to do it.

How he never saw it. He could have saved her.

"Where is he taking her stuff?" Ojiro asks, the words feel numb as soon as they enter his mouth. He feels like he's asking another question, a question no one can answer for him. He feels like it's a mistake to have so many eyes on him right now, as he wipes at one of his eyes, already an excuse in the back of his throat that the smoke is irritating them.

“I don’t know, but he...” Midoriya trails off, still standing in the doorway like he needs permission to come inside. Like the person who should give that permission isn’t here, won’t be here, she’ll never come back. “He was crying.”

Ojiro turns to look at the open windows, so barren now without the curtains. The wall completely cleared of Tooru’s things, a sign of what’s to come to this dorm. He thinks it’s better if they find that odd, instead of finding another tear spilling over despite his wince.

“It’s probably hard on him... Since Sensei believes in us so much,” Uraraka says, her voice so quiet now, so devoid of anything that he wishes he could get angry at. “That time we watched a scary movie late at night... Sensei was the one to walk her to her room, because she was scared.”

“She thought there could be a quirk that would make someone look like that monster,” Yaoyorozu says, a creak of the mattress and the sound of rubbing fabric probably means that Yaoyorozu is comforting Jirou right now. Ojiro can’t bring himself to look around, as much as he can’t bring himself to leave when he wants to. When he doesn’t want to hear these stories.

“She wanted to be friends with all of you,” Ojiro says, the words numb, not half as hot as he wants them to be. How accusing he wants to be. “But you thought it was just Tooru being Tooru. You never saw past that, and I-”

Ojiro has to swallow, his hand wrapping around the back of the chair. Not Hagakure’s, not anymore, just a thing caught in limbo between the blissful life he lived three days ago and now.

“I didn’t see it either,” Ojiro admits, probably admitting more when he sniffs, when he realizes he can’t be here. “What a pathetic excuse for a hero.”

He feels like he can’t find mourning in this room, he can’t find the explanation or the thing he just didn’t see. If there was a piece that was missed that was evidence, that was a clue hidden in plain sight, it isn’t there.

Neither is Tooru.

Hagakure.

He feels the eyes on him like stove fires setting him over boil, and turns to leave, past his classmates, past Midoriya. Past the open door to the boy’s side and back to his own dorm, right in front of hers.

He’ll still see her door, every time he leaves his room. He used to smile so much when she tried to time it right, so they’d both leave at the exact same time in the morning before class.

Maybe that’s why he doesn’t want to leave his room anymore. His plain room, with no decor, nothing beyond functionality on the surface. Everything that’s sentimental or not immediately useful is locked in a drawer to preserve these clean lines that caged him in and just made sense once. Things that made him feel peaceful.

But Tooru’s room had been a better version of peace. When they sat and talked for hours, watching movies, studying together. When he could just smile at the way she’d fidget sometimes, when he pictured her smile because he couldn’t see it himself.

It never bothered him, to never see her smile. Not when he could hear it in her voice.

He folds himself in the center of his room, unwilling to crawl into bed again, admit defeat just yet. He folds his legs, just like he'll meditate in search of calm, but knows he finds nothing but these hot and shameful tears, this sorrow burrowing into his chest and he feels like he'll never reach the bottom of it.

He can't just forget her, even if he should. Even if it would be easy, to box up all of these memories and feelings into clean lines that make sense. Keeping this senseless burning out of sight at least.

He's supposed to be a hero. And his girlfriend was working with villains. And he'll never see her again to even ask her why.

Ojiro doesn't know how much time has passed, from these silent, angry sobs that melt almost into calm, until he finds them again. The closest measure of peace he finds is when he's too tired to cry. Too tired to wipe away his tears.

He hears knocks on his door at times, almost but not really. Too numb, or too sharp, he can't pick which one it is right now. The voices that call for him, worried, can't penetrate his neat little box he wants to stuff himself inside.

But he feels that freezing numb with this knock, before Aizawa's voice has him scrubbing at his face. "Ojiro."

Ojiro almost trips over his leg that's fallen asleep, balancing himself on his tail as he rushes to open the door. Aizawa shouldn't know that he's a mess right now, that he's acting senselessly. He doesn't want to bring shame on himself as a student.

Ojiro bites his lip when he opens the door, hoping that Aizawa just won't see his reddened eyes, how tired he is because he can't even force the barest smile of reassurance. But he sees that Aizawa's are worse.

He was crying.

"Here," Aizawa says, raising his hand with his fingertips barely touching the rim of the pot that holds Tooru's mini-cactus. Needly.

"Ashid-" Ojiro stops himself, rubbing a hand against his cheek again as if that will help him clear his throat, his voice as broken and choked as it should be, but he doesn't want his teacher to hear it. He straightens his shoulders, hears the ghosts of his prior martial arts instructors echoing in dojos he hasn't visited in years or months. "Ashido should have it back. Sensei."

Aizawa still holds out Needly, and seems to glance around Ojiro's plain room as if that much is an argument, that he does need some decor even if it was practically stolen from his expelled ex-girlfriend. "You need something. Whatever you choose to do with it is your choice. But trust me when I say that it helps."

Maybe it's just the respect that he has for Aizawa, that he doesn't want to insist a second time. Maybe it's that word, 'help,' that Ojiro can't bring himself to silently argue he doesn't need. He takes the bottom of the pot, feels the smoothness there and the weight of this plant that feels greater than he can manage. What if I can make the spines grow so long, they get soft, and I have a little cactus bush just like your tail?

He doesn't know when or if he'll ever want to stop hearing Tooru's voice, despite how much it doesn't make sense, how much it would be simpler if he just forgot her. But he nods, he'll find a place for Needly. He'll try to give it another name, to start. To start moving past Tooru's memory.

Hagakure's memory.

Aizawa doesn't linger, doesn't offer any more words of advice, as if he knows that Ojiro doesn't want them. Ojiro can see by how his teacher is slouched even further as he walks, that something is bothering him deeply, something as exhausted and frustrated and agonizing as Ojiro feels, and maybe worse. Aizawa probably had to return to Tooru's room, to make sure all her things were packed, and Ojiro couldn't bring himself to do that.

Ojiro closes the door, and the room feels suddenly bigger when he does. When he sees flat and clean lines, so many spaces. His windowsill, behind the edge of his curtain, makes enough sense right now. His cactus needs sunlight, and sometimes he might need to hide it from his own sight.

It makes sense, without straight lines and plain surfaces, that his first love would leave a mark on him. Not like this, he knows, it shouldn't have turned out like this, but it did, and he can't bury it so easily.

Ojiro feels something other than exhaustion for the first time in days, what he knows were days now, and he checks his phone but he doesn't bother with the groupchat. That would be too much.

Uraraka doesn't ask questions, thankfully, even if he knows she has them, but she says that she's excited for a spar. He doesn't know if he'll regret it immediately, if he'll only make it to the gym or only halfway before he regrets it completely, but he wants to try.

He can take something with him, but he doesn't want to lose himself. He wants to take part of himself back from this haze, he wants to break out of this smothering fog.

Uraraka: Gonna ask sensei if we can

Uraraka: WAIT

Uraraka: Did u kno that sensei smokes???

*

Hitoshi is trying not to feel like this sprain is just like one of Bug's restraints.

He has to lay down all day with his foot propped up, taking pain medication every four hours, with ice packs on it in accordance with a schedule that Yamada knows better than he does. Even if Yamada explained it to him, Hitoshi couldn't really pay attention.

Somehow, this uncomfortable buzzing under his skin has gotten worse since Yamada caught him trying to throw away his stash box.

He tried to do it when Yamada was out of the room, but the trash can in the kitchen just wasn't big enough to fit it inside. Hitoshi grabbed some paper towels and threw them in there to hide the box, but Yamada still found it, and pulled it out of the trash, asking him if he was sure about throwing it away. That it was still his possession, it's okay to keep it or not keep it, and Hitoshi couldn't quite breathe until he nodded his head, and Yamada seemed to accept it. Even if that meant the box was still thrown away, that it was possibly insulting to Yamada that he would do that.

Hitoshi can't put a finger on it, but Yamada has just been off all day. He just seems quieter, and every time he's nearly silent when he takes away the ice pack or refills Hitoshi's water glass, Hitoshi can practically hear him screaming to know why Hitoshi won't talk to him. He hears Aizawa's voice asking that too.

Eri had been watching cartoons with him on the couch, insistent about crawling inside his shirt with her head popping out of the collar, which is apparently a habit now. Even when she wanted to go to her room when her friend Mizuno called, she wanted Hitoshi to go with her, which Yamada should have said no to, but didn't. Eri and Mizuno have been having these little virtual playdates for a while, sometimes watching the same show or movie while Mizuno's face is on Yamada's phone, sometimes drawing together or showing off their stuffed animals.

Eri has some important business this time with Mizuno, and Hitoshi is dragged into it to accommodate her.

Yamada's phone is set up on Eri's table, so Mizuno can see the massive pile of stuffed animals that Eri has, so she can see Hitoshi sitting on the floor and picking up the ones that Eri wants to examine closer so Eri doesn't have to get out of his shirt. Eri doesn't want to part with the two biggest unicorn plushies, which Hitoshi uses to prop his foot up, Eri braced by one of his arms holding her folded legs.

Eri hums as Hitoshi holds up yet another rabbit plushie for the two little girls to weigh in on. "One of the nurses at the hospital gave me Mr. Whitus, but I don't think he gets along with the other bunny stuffies. I think Mr. Whitus would be happier with Todo."

"Yeah! All the other bunnies have colors, and he doesn't, and Todo has half of his hair white, so they'll be happy together!" Mizuno says, following the same logic as most of her other arguments, purely based on hair color, about which plushies should go to the 1-A students 'because they're sad that Haga can't go to school anymore.'

That's the story that Aizawa told Eri, apparently. Just that Hagakure 'can't go to school anymore,' and even if Hitoshi knows the full story, he's not going to tell Eri. She doesn't have to know.

Eri only slips out of his shirt to put the selected plushie on her bed, along with the rest of them. He's pretty sure this project only has half of the pure intentions Eri claims, because while he doesn't doubt that she wants to give away some of her plushies to help them not 'feel sad,' she probably wants to see the 1-A students too when she gives them away. It's only been a few days since she's seen them, but she might regret staying at the dorm today instead of going with Aizawa to the 1-A dorm.

Aizawa shouldn't have asked her when she was in bed and freshly woken, and not thinking clearly about the consequences of staying where she was comfortable. He should have waited, so she wouldn't feel compelled to give away her things.

Even if she still has a mountain of plushies.

He doesn't know why, but he pulls out his phone, as though he expects to find the groupchat suddenly there again, as though he just misremembered not seeing it earlier this morning. As though he wants to send them a picture of Eri, or tell them what she's planning to do, which he doesn't want to do at all.

But it's still not there.

Midoriya has messaged him recently, but Hitoshi is sure he doesn't want to read whatever he thought about what he said to the other hero students. Bakugo messaged him too, on Sunday, before he got back.

:---) changed their name to FUCK YOU I'M A HERO

FUCK YOU I'M A HERO: LISTEN FUCKHEAD YOU NEVER FUCKING CHECK THIS CHAT AND MICSEI SAID YOU DON'T HAVE ANY FUCKING RECEPTION IN WHEREVER THE FUCK THEY TOOK YOUR ASS

FUCK YOU I'M A HERO deleted this message.

FUCK YOU I'M A HERO deleted this message.

FUCK YOU I'M A HERO: BUT YOU BETTER BE FUCKING OKAY.

FUCK YOU I'M A HERO: AND GET YOUR SHIT SQUARED BECAUSE I'VE GOT MY FUCKING LICENSE NOW. THOSE FUCKERS TRY TO FUCK WITH YOU AGAIN AND THEY'RE DEAD. EXPLODED. FUCKING GONE.

FUCK YOU I'M A HERO deleted this message.

Bakugo just got stupider, then. He finally got his provisional license, possibly the last one to do it unless Todoroki failed to, and he wants to promise to keep Hitoshi safe. A fledgeling egg trying to fling itself at The Miasma.

He's surprised that Bakugo hasn't said anything else since then, hasn't even threatened to kill Hitoshi after seeing his quirk being used on Ashido. Ashido has messaged him since then, but Hitoshi skips over her chat. She'd know if he opened it, since there were a few times he didn't respond to her messages and she seemed irritated by that.

Monoma's chat with him still hasn't been set up. It's at the bottom of the list, and he did intend to use it to tell Monoma to stop annoying him before everything happened on Friday. So Hitoshi does it.

He sets his own name, and changes Monoma's accordingly, and waits for a while. But as soon as he sees those three dancing dots at the bottom of the screen that show that Monoma is typing a message to him, he closes out of the application.

He doesn't really want to stoop that far.

Hitoshi glances up when there's a ringing sound from Yamada's phone, which Eri runs over to answer. She knows how to answer calls on this app, and how to hang up on Mizuno, but he should have told her not to answer calls from other people, who might be trying to get in touch with Yamada instead of her.

And Hitoshi is pretty sure that Rat Boss doesn't want to talk to Eri or Mizuno. "Ah, I see that I'm interrupting something. It's good to see that you're doing well, Shinsou and Eri! And Miss-"

"Shoji Mizuno!" Mizuno answers with a salute for some reason. She does the same thing whenever she and Eri have to end a call. "Mr. Mouse man, you're very cute! And in charge! Are you in charge of all the stuffed animals in the world?"

"Oh, if only I was, but I hope to achieve that one day," Rat Boss answers, smoothing the front of his suit with his paws. "For now, I'm only in charge of a hero high school that I believe your older brother attends, and due to that, I'm afraid I need to get in contact with Yama-"

"Mr. Nezu, I can take the phone to Yama, but I just want your help really, super quick!" Eri pleads, her hands folded in front of her chest and her eyes begging the Rat Boss to agree. Hitoshi already has an idea of what she wants, and she really shouldn't impose that on Rat Boss.

"He needs to talk to Yamada," Hitoshi tries to scold, tries to remind Eri that she doesn't run the entire campus, she just rules over the 1-A class and most of the students. But the heroes and Rat Boss can't be ordered to her whims that easy.

"But Mr. Nezu's the cutest stuffed animal man ever, and he can help us pick plushies!" Mizuno argues, with Eri's nodding agreement, because they've spent enough time together to practically have a hive-mind about these things.

"You can use my phone to talk to Mizuno instead of Yamada's," Hitoshi tries to argue, to both of them, but he has to glance away with just the beginning of Mizuno and Eri's combined pouts. "It'll only take a-"

"Hey guys," Yamada calls as soon as he opens the door, and Hitoshi's jaw snaps shut, at first hoping that he hadn't heard, and next hoping that if he had, he thought he was only talking to Eri. "Did you get a call on my phone just a minute ago?"

"I'll be with you in just a moment," Rat Boss says, holding up one paw while the other cups his chin. "I believe I have time to pick exactly one plushie for your endeavors."

"Okay!" Eri nods, becoming serious as she takes the phone to show Nezu the mountain of stuffed animals in the corner of her room better. "I'm trying to pick a plushie for Momo, and it's got to be a really good one! I know she likes tea, and smart things, and science, but I don't have plushies that are like that."

"Hm, that is quite a conundrum," Rat Boss mutters, playing along with Eri's game. "Perhaps, Yaoyorozu would appreciate a smaller stuffed animal, maybe even small enough to sit in one of her tea cups as a companion? And I see that there's a small brown bear on top of the white tiger's head that seems somewhat tea colored."

"That's perfect!" Eri cheers, picking up the small teddy bear that fit perfectly in her small hand, her finger picking at the pink flower sewn next to its ear. Eri turns the phone around to smile at the Rat Boss. "Thank you Mr. Nezu!"

"It's no trouble at all," Rat Boss replies, though he's probably talking to the floor as Eri carries the phone to Yamada, who looks nervous. "I believe you have a laptop that can handle our discussion, so that we're not interfering with this most important matter. Do expect a call in the next 50 seconds."

Yamada pulls a panicked wince and hands the phone back to Eri, almost forgetting to pat her head, as he sprints out the door to catch Rat Boss' call. Mizuno hasn't hung up, but Hitoshi is pretty sure that Yaoyorozu's plushie was the last one to be picked. Not that he's been keeping track.

Not that they've asked for his opinion much. He's apparently just here to keep Eri warm inside his shirt, and hold up plushies so they can get upset that he picked the wrong one.

He's just sitting here with Eri, who doesn't entirely need him to be here while she has Mizuno on the phone, while Aizawa spends all day with his students instead of working to find The Miasma, even though Hitoshi told him where they are. Yamada has just been avoiding him, and it's obvious now, it's obvious that he's not okay with Hitoshi throwing away his stash box like he said he was.

He feels the irritation building like a buzz underneath his skin, rattling his bones, and when Eri looks at him like she wants to crawl back inside his shirt, he realizes that feeling is ill-suited for her. He doesn't want to feel that way around Eri, and he doesn't want to disappoint her by leaving, but one of the two is worse. "I'll... be back in a little bit."

He has to pull his leg off the unicorn stack with his hands, after his knee has grown so stiff, and Eri still walks towards him like she can really help him get up, something he needs to brace himself against her bed to do. "Okay, but we're gonna color together when you get back!"

Hitoshi doesn't know why his skin prickles with that expectation, why he would ever want to disappoint Eri out of something as ill-suited as spite. He just doesn't want to color with them, even if it's usually enjoyable. He's just weird right now, weird enough to feel sick. He should probably just stay in his room until he feels different, at least his own level of normal.

Whenever Yamada needs to do something to him to treat that sprain, he'll find him on his bed, and Hitoshi can explain that he just doesn't want the stash or the box, but he still appreciates that Yamada got him that box. But Yamada should be happy that he doesn't keep trash like that anymore, that he's more normal now. If Yamada wasn't angry, or whatever he is that makes him act so weird and seem to try to ignore him, then Hitoshi wouldn't feel this way with Eri.

He gets to his door, before he decides that he'd rather go to the kitchen and have a small snack first, since that seems to help with this feeling sometimes. It's odd, the way he feels hunger as either a sudden, immediate ache in his stomach sometimes, or a gnawing thing that almost feels worse than when he was actually hungry. It's like he's forgetting how it was before he was rescued, when two meals a day would be enough, now he's getting gluttonous.

"-also possible that Shinsou's quirk wouldn't be able to affect me, given that there are quite a few differences between my own mind and a human's," Rat Boss says, almost completely muffled by the office's closed door. Hitoshi balances himself on one leg when he stops, when he tries to understand what he's saying. "Hound Dog may also be an option in that regard, as we would try to keep Shinsou at UA in any eventuality."

"That's... good to know," Yamada says, like it's not entirely good to know for him. He's not excited about it, but he's definitely worried about something. But he says it's good to know.

But it's not good to know. That this is why Yamada has been acting weird all day.

Yamada is trying to get rid of him.

It doesn't matter if he was insulted by the stash box, if Aizawa told him that he's able to talk now, whatever Hitoshi did and it could be a million things, Yamada is trying to get rid of him. Pawn him off on another hero who could take him in and control him because his quirk would be useless against them, either Rat Boss or Hound Dog, and then there were other options outside of UA. Heroes that don't live at UA, that aren't close to Eri, that they're trying to pawn him off on.

Hitoshi bites his lip when he changes his footing as he walks, the tension when he walks with more pressure on the front of his feet hurts his ankle more, but with the carpet, he moves quietly. Almost silently.

And he opens Eri's door just as quietly, and Mizuno is the first one to spot him as Eri decided to start coloring her book before he returned, waving at him from Yamada's phone. "Hi Toshi! That mouse guy was kinda weird, but kinda nice. Is he nice to Mezo too?"

Hitoshi doesn't know if Rat Boss is nice to Shoji or not, Eri would know better than him, and Eri just looks confused as to why he's here so soon, looking up from her coloring book at the same small table where the teapot braces the back of Yamada's phone. "Toshi's not best friends with Mezo yet, but he's working on it! They're both just really quiet!"

Hitoshi feels more quiet than he has in months, he feels the words trapped behind his teeth but can hardly bring himself to say them. He wishes he didn't have to come to Eri with this. "Can I talk to you without Mizuno, Eri?"

Hitoshi closes the door behind himself, biting his lip when the door knocks against the heel of his foot. Eri frowns at him, lopsided and confused, but tells Mizuno that she's got something important to talk about with him, so she'll call Mizuno later to tell her what it is. Eri already knows how to hang up on Mizuno and send her video away, even if she still needs help to answer the call sometimes. "Yama said you're not 'sposed to walk like that, Twenny! You need to lay down so you get better."

Hitoshi huffs, probably the fullest breath he's taken since he heard what the Rat Boss said, and dutifully walks to Eri's bed, but just to sit, folding his hands in his lap and pressing his thumb against the heel of his opposite hand, trying to work up the courage to say it. "You know how you want to get better at using your quirk?"

Eri nods, standing up already to walk in front of him, almost like she knows what he wants her to do, and he wishes it could be that easy. He wishes he could look at her horn, still long enough to curve, still mysteriously devoid of any aches that she wants him to remedy.

He wishes he could get rid of the words 'using Eri for her quirk' from his mind. But he knows, there's a way that she wants to do this, and he has to use it. That there is no other way. "I can help you practice."

He'll be very good practice, for what he knows she wants to do as soon as she can control her quirk herself.

*

Yamada laces his fingers together as he waits what he knows isn't a suspicious amount of time for Nezu to call, but what feels suspiciously long. As an elective teacher, he's not really going to be put out of whack by the abrupt schedule change like Shouta and the other homeroom teachers are, so he really doesn't know why Nezu wants to talk to him.

Except, there's another reason he would. Hitoshi.

Even if the traitor has been ousted, UA's security was compromised just to attack Hitoshi, and Yamada doesn't doubt that the incident has brought the principal's attention to his ward in a way that Yamada won't appreciate. Nezu can be, to put it unkindly, a little cold and a lot sadistic sometimes, especially when the safety of the students is on the line, and he doesn't want to hear anything about 'get this wardship sorted out and get this liability gone.'

There's just too much to think about, especially in that aspect. Yamada should feel elated that they have a clue about where Miasma is now, especially to go with that list of what could be every single operative who ever worked for Miasma, all those Numbers that had reviews on Villain Yelp. Yamada looked through the file briefly, and knows that Sansa and Naomasa are definitely combing through it to make estimates on which Numbers are still alive or not, what they should expect at the raid. Heroes that should be tapped to be involved in that operation, to counter opposing quirks to the best of their abilities.

There's just too much to think about, with that and other things. With Hitoshi's scars most of all, and Yamada worries that Hitoshi has already seen him struggling with that.

He can't imagine it, as much as he can't get those words out of his head. The implications, hours and maggots, and he just wants to....

Yamada doesn't know what he wants to do, he just wants to do something. Anything, anything at all to make it so that didn't happen, maybe in the most selfish way, he kind of wishes that Shouta didn't tell him.

He's a hypocrite for that, and he knows it. He told Shouta several times not to hold anything back about Hitoshi, and he never regretted it.

Maybe he does now, because he knows he's just rattled too much from a horror he can't do shit about, and knowing that there's nothing for it just makes it worse.

"Ah, that's much better," Principal Nezu says, as soon as his video call connects. "Don't worry about the pleasantries or flattery, I've just been told I'm adorable enough times to last my ego well through the holidays. And it seems that Shinsou came back from the mountains with a slight injury?"

"Oh, yeah, the security system in a squatter's shack didn't work out too hot," Yamada answers, trying not to seethe. Trying not to blame his boss when he knows the blame belongs squarely on his idiot of a husband's shoulders. "It's just a sprain, so we're going to try healing up normally. Shinsou's had a lot of quirk healing, apparently. Always risks involved with that."

Yamada knows there are risks, but he'd much rather not risk having a kid on his couch as spooked as Hitoshi is for the next six weeks. Every time Yamada sets eyes on him, he sees Hitoshi stiffen in fear, in overwrought nerves that Yamada knows are going to be touchy for a while, he got attacked and all, but Yamada is also sure that this little 'exercise in learning the limitations of your body' thing is making it worse.

It's so ridiculous that Yamada can't laugh at the thought of Shouta trying to teach Hitoshi to be careful with himself. Shouta being a paragon of self-care and all.

"Well, as pleasant as the mountain trip must have been, I imagine that the transition back to UA will be an unfortunately difficult one," Principal Nezu says, folding his paws in front of himself on his desk. "Perhaps, it wouldn't surprise you to know I had some ulterior motives with that decision."

Yamada doesn't know anything to say to that confirmation other than 'No shit,' so in order to keep one of his most high paying jobs, he keeps his mouth shut.

"I had hoped that a bit of distance from campus could prevent Shinsou from seeing it as a retraumatizing place, associated deeply with the memory of that attack, but I'm afraid that I'm bringing concerns of exactly that, in the most unfortunate way," Nezu says, before his screen minimizes into a corner, and the grayscale view of the surveillance camera mounted on the ceiling of the 1-A common room comes up. And Yamada's eyes catch on the sight of Hitoshi, standing on the threshold of the common room with Bakugo's wrist in his hand.

Yamada knows that Hitoshi knows not to do that, Hitoshi is one of the few people in Bakugo's age group that knows not to grab him by the wrist. "Shinsou, I'm sure that you're angry and hurt that we didn't..."

"I'm not angry, or hurt. I'm tired of all of you."

It took Yamada too long to figure out who was speaking. Who was talking in such an exhausted, irritated tone.

He can't even reconcile the image on screen of Hitoshi with the kid who asked him for permission to see his friends, because he was so worried that he knew he wouldn't sleep until he saw them with his own eyes. Reconnecting with them, after the fact. After the attack. "I unfortunately have to live here, and deal with you during school. But don't mistake me, I'm not going to tolerate your attempts at pity anymore. It's insulting."

Unfortunately. That word rings like an accusation in Yamada's head, even if he tries to rationalize that Hitoshi doesn't mean it like that, he probably doesn't mean any of this. He doesn't know how Hitoshi put on such a good act with him, making him truly believe last night that Hitoshi was hardly worse for the wear, a little shaken but in kind of a good way. This kid tried to hug him last night, and hours later he was trying to alienate his friends. "Shinny-"

This explains the stash box. "Why are you doing all of these annoying things for me?"

Yamada nearly flinches at how wrong Hitoshi's voice sounds there, it's close enough to know that it's his kid, but it's just...wrong. Like a goddamn horror movie moment or something. "I want to be your friend. I want to make up for everything bad that happened, and make you happy."

Every word that Ashido says nearly brings tears to Yamada's eyes, almost proud of that particular herolet who honestly hadn't made it a secret that she was trying so hard to make Hitoshi happy here, re-write that awful past, as determined as Yamada in that same goal. But 'everything bad' catches in his ear, because he knows that Hitoshi doesn't want to hear that. Not when there's a bad way to take it. "Shinsou-"

"Oh, I remember that she wanted to be Brainwashed, but that's not my quirk anymore. Whatever I ask, you're forced to answer. And I can make you admit your deepest insecurities, the things you don't want to admit to yourself. That would have been useful to have, before one of you invited 127 in."

Yamada only thought that Hitoshi's voice sounded warped and awful when he used that quirk, but hearing the unguarded anger in his words now was like a knife to the gut. Painful enough that Yamada didn't want to believe this was real, he wanted it to be doctored somehow. "That wasn't us! Dude, I get that it was really messed up that you were attacked, but you hurt Tsuyu-"

"I'll cut her tongue out next time." Shit. "So again, fuck off. I'll ignore that you exist, but if you invite my attention, you'll suffer for it. I'll unfortunately see you around."

The video ends right as Hitoshi turns on his heel after dropping that bomb, and Principal Nezu couldn't look any more 'principal-y' if he tried. Yamada had to explain this. "He doesn't mean that, at all, he wouldn't hurt a fly-"

"I've been running this school long enough to know every explanation for a terroristic threat," Principal Nezu explains, his head tipping down to hide how his mouth is usually shaped into a smile naturally, and Yamada absolutely hates that word being attached to his kid, he almost wants to argue it didn't happen. Despite the video evidence. "Obviously, every child in my charge is different, every threat has a sliding scale of probability. But I am concerned about this one."

Hitoshi wouldn't, Yamada knows that, and he doubts that even Nezu could explain how he was worried about Shinsou's state of mind and go directly into thinking that he meant any of what he said there. "He just got back that night, and he's worried. Hitoshi is terrified that someone is going to get hurt because of him, because he's here, so he's trying to scare them all off."

It's such a classic move that Yamada is almost disappointed in how he didn't see something so predictable. Given that there's a wide ravine in his relationship with Shouta, a steep divide between pre and post Shirakumo's death, he wishes he could show this to Shouta and laugh about how his kid outdid him.

Blowing off 18 friends at once to make sure he doesn't get hurt again, a nuclear sized pre-emptive strike. Shouta couldn't even manage to shake off one.

"Still," Principal Nezu says, his folded paws falling forward to rest on his desk. "You are aware that someone who doesn't believe in giving leniency due to circumstances would be unnerved by this. The threat of bodily harm, coupled with the demonstration of his quirk? This is a matter to be taken seriously."

Yamada knows. Yamada knows that as much as Hitoshi is mixed up right now, that's not a pass for what he said or what he did, the intentions behind why he did it and why he probably picked Ashido to do it to.

The poor girl is probably a mess right now, and Yamada doesn't know if he could possibly explain it in a way that wouldn't break her heart further. It's already been made too clear that the herolets were devastated that Hitoshi was hurt, on their campus and in their minds, on their watch, and knowing that Hitoshi was in that much pain to say those things would just make the hurting double.

"Of course, he's just gotten back and things have been... really shaky," Yamada says, and doesn't want to say more on it. How he doesn't know if he's blowing hot and cold, or if Hitoshi is, how he still doesn't know how to settle himself when he knows he has to for his kid. Especially with what he knows now, how bad it is underneath what he thought was just nerves. "We're going to have a talk about that."

"I think we're due for a talk as well," Nezu says, and he honestly couldn't say anything more threatening. Especially right now. "I haven't meddled as much as I would like, but I take, shall we say, a 'personal offense' to this group that attacked my campus, and acted accordingly. I imagine you haven't had time to get fully up to date on your emails, but I've asked to help coordinate the finer details of this investigation, and I've been briefed accordingly by Detective Tsukauchi."

Yamada swallows, his stomach twisting around what feels like a block of ice, and he hates that he has to meet those words like it's a bad thing. Nezu is one of the best consultants for any heroic operation to have, he has pulled off miracles time and time again, with success almost a given and predictions about the enemies' movements so accurate that Nezu could rival Sir Nighteye. He should be elated to know that Nezu was going to be working so closely with them to bring down Miasma.

But, that raid is a bigger precipice than it should be for Yamada now. It's not as simple as wanting Hitoshi to be free, to be safe, to honestly work out some vengeance on his behalf in a way that Yamada positively aches for. It's the start of a timer.

Hitoshi's wardship won't end as soon as the raid is done, after the Miasma has been brought down. But after they're taken down, the next objective is supposed to be finding Hitoshi a new home, a new family. Shinsou Ui is solidly out of the picture on that front, but Yamada has made a promise. He promised that Hitoshi would stay, after the investigation, he'll stay here with Eri and with every person he's met and connected with since coming here, he'll keep this peace that he's found and Yamada will be there through every step closer to the happiness that Hitoshi has always deserved.

But that's going to require Shouta to change his mind, about Hitoshi needing a clean slate, a separation from the bad things that have happened at UA. It's hard enough to change Shouta's mind about anything once he's made it, but especially when he thinks it's the right thing to do for a kid's health and safety. "But, before we get into that, there's another small matter to discuss."

Yamada can't really argue against logic, no matter how hard he tries, when the facts of the matter still state that Hitoshi thought Shouta owned him for a good chunk of his wardship so far. That's not exactly a funny story to share around the holidays.

"With Shinsou speaking, and demonstrating the use of his quirk, I imagine that the validity of your wardship with him will be tested soon," Nezu says, and Yamada feels like an idiot when that seems to drop over him like it's news.

He knew that, in the back of his mind, ever since Shouta told him that he used his quirk on Mirio that night, but he still... worries. Even if Shouta said that it didn't work over the radio, Yamada won't even have to go fully deaf to follow the letter of the law, to take out his hearing aids to make sure Hitoshi can't wash his brain and all, because the hearing aids should keep the quirk out too.

But as much as Yamada has dreaded the certainty of that test, something new prickles at the back of his mind. Something he doesn't even want to acknowledge, doesn't want to feel it fully. "In that regard, I wanted to offer some reassurance that if worse comes to worse, it won't come to the worst conclusion. Even if it's almost certain that the wardship will be upheld, it's also possible that Shinsou's quirk wouldn't be able to affect me, given that there are quite a few differences between my own mind and a human's. Hound Dog is also an option in that regard, as we would try to keep Shinsou at UA in any eventuality."

"That's... good to know," Yamada says, almost numb to that. Of course, it's nice to know that Principal Nezu would be willing to take Hitoshi in, and apparently Hound Dog would too. It's nice to know that they've put thought into that, discussed it, making sure that Hitoshi wouldn't just be in limbo or tossed out if somehow the wardship test didn't work out.

But it doesn't matter if Hitoshi is just moving next door to become Nemuri's ward, even if Yamada still sees him every day, even if Hitoshi is in his classes. The possibility that Hitoshi wouldn't be living with him, that Yamada couldn't see that sleepy bedhead popping off his pillow every morning, couldn't cook breakfast next to him, couldn't hand him a cup of coffee, everything about that is unfathomable to Yamada right now. And Yamada doesn't know if Nezu has ulterior motives to remind him of that, but Yamada doesn't appreciate the reminder.

If Yamada doesn't get Shouta in agreement about Hitoshi living with them after the investigation, soon, that horror will still become a reality. In a horrible, permanent way.

"But of course, the quirk specialist appointment will shed quite a light on that," Nezu continues, and Yamada knows there's something beneath the surface of that statement that he's in no place to suss out, and knows that might be intentional. "It's set for Friday afternoon on campus, and I'm sure that won't be an issue?"

"Nope, clear schedule and all," Yamada answers, too quickly, his hands raising up to sweep out and fuck that's too soon.

Hitoshi talked to the herolets. He threatened them, verbally. Yamada didn't recognize it before, he just assumed, but there were certain things that Shouta said, repeating what Hitoshi told him, that Yamada knew wouldn't be translated like that in sign. Hitoshi might be talking to Shouta. But he signs to him.

If Hitoshi doesn't talk to him, if there's a reason Hitoshi won't talk to him, if Hitoshi is no longer selectively mute to everyone but him, Yamada doesn't know what to do. The Commission knows that Hitoshi is able to talk now, and use his quirk, because he used it on that Commission representative, and Yamada still wants to throttle Shouta for letting that happen.

If Hitoshi can't talk to Yamada, for whatever reason, Yamada has to fix it before they test the wardship because losing Hitoshi before the raid even happens is something that Yamada doesn't even want to imagine. “Good. Now, aside from the list of operatives, Shinsou also divulged that this Miasma operates out of a warehouse on the coastline, and he knows that because, I quote, ‘the water tastes salty.’”

Yamada still doesn't know exactly what that means, if Hitoshi had been drinking unfiltered salt water from the ocean since the age of four and hadn't died within days, or if they dunked him into the sea sometimes, but he can't exactly ask.

Apparently, they're not on speaking terms, not that Yamada got to know that before now.

“Yep, once things settle down with the herolets, Shou said he'll do some walking around on Google maps with Hitoshi,” Yamada answers, knowing that he probably should have done some digging himself by this point, trying to find how many warehouses were on the coastline to try to narrow things down. To soothe his nerves with the near certainty that those warehouses would look pretty uniform, and that there's still plenty of investigating to be had.

“Ah, that sounds productive,” Principal Nezu says, oddly. There's definitely something there he's not saying about that tactic. “Then, I suppose I'll focus on the list of operatives for now. It's quite expansive, yet still possibly incomplete. And there's the complicating factor that we haven't recovered very many bodies before the Nomus were spotted and identified. And there's almost certainly more Nomus that we haven't captured or seen.”

There were almost a hundred in Kamino ward, more than a hundred people who were used to create those things. Hitoshi obviously isn't the only Number left alive, but Yamada knows that there's apparently a lot of ways that Miasma disposes of ex-members.

Before the number tattoos were found on the Nomus, they had only found three bodies or bodyparts that had number tattoos. Hitoshi said that he didn't know how Nomus were created, Miasma probably got involved with that after he was sold, thankfully. But that means that they still don't know what they're dealing with. “I'll let you know of any significant progress, and I hope you'll do the same.”

“Of course, we'll keep in touch!” Yamada says, snapping out of his thoughts in time to see Nezu hanging up on the call. The investigation was heating up, but it wasn't a done deal, it was still going to take some time. Time that Yamada needed, in too many ways, first with getting Shouta on his same page but more importantly finding a way to tell Hitoshi that he knew he was talking, and threatening his friends which was not a good thing, and trying to figure out why Hitoshi wasn't talking to him.

Hitoshi... didn't blame him, did he?

Yamada was his assigned hero, it was his massive fuck up in the line of duty that led to Hitoshi getting hurt like that, getting sliced up and having that mask forced back on his face, and as much as Yamada blamed himself for going out on patrol that night, he still didn't really think that Hitoshi would blame him. Somehow, in a way that didn't really make sense, he didn't think that Hitoshi would connect those dots. Especially with how he acted when he came back, those ‘leans’ and that little attempt at a hug, that's not how a kid who's angry and betrayed would act towards the irritating betrayer.

Maybe, Hitoshi just doesn't want things to change between them. Yamada wasn't the only person who signed to him, but apart from those books, he was his primary teacher. While Shouta is fluent, Yamada has a special connection with the language that he used to talk to his mom when he was growing up, and Yamada feels that same connection with Hitoshi. Yamada himself knows that it would be a pretty big thing for him to transition to speaking instead of that, kind of letting that go in a way, but for Hitoshi, it wouldn't be the same.

Maybe, with all these changes erupting around him, out of his control, Hitoshi wants one thing to control, and that's whether he talks to Yamada or not. Yamada could totally get that reason.

He just can't really give that to Hitoshi, when the fate of the wardship rests on Hitoshi talking to him, and trying to use his quirk on him to make sure he can't succeed.

While Yamada is hopeful that Eri will still be on her playdate call with Mizuno at this point, so maybe he can have a chat with Hitoshi about this, about a lot of things honestly, but mostly trying to impress on Hitoshi that he understands if he doesn't want to talk to him, but he'll need to do that in two days, he flinches and freezes when he hears a knock on the door.

While he now understands why any of the herolets would want to drop by the dorm to have some words with his kid, and he's grateful that Principal Nezu wouldn't leave him in the dark about that, he does not want to get into that right now. Hitoshi needs to patch things up with his friends, pretty quick, but there are other, bigger holes in this boat that need to be seen to first, without rocking that rattling raft too much.

Yamada leaves the office, just in time to hear the front door close, which is not a good sound right now. Shouta might have said that Hitoshi is on house arrest for now, and while Yamada warily agreed with the 'needs to be escorted' part before, he's definitely on board with keeping Hitoshi at home until some things are straightened out.

There is no Hitoshi on the couch, but there is a little bean huffing as she stomps over to that couch, kicking her feet after she takes a seat and glowering at the fish in their snazzy aquarium on the kotatsu. And Yamada definitely has some questions about that pouty mood. "Did... Hitoshi leave just now?"

"Mm-hmph," Eri answers with a sharp nod, and Yamada is definitely concerned about those quickening kicks. That sharp little way that Eri answered, like her tiny little teeth are locked tight around a grenade that just one little insensitive comment could set off.

That's not the usual mood post-Mizuno date. "Who did he go with- he didn't take his crutch either," Yamada notices, that crutch still leaning against the wall beside the door. Yamada imagines he should bundle the little bean up for a hopefully short search party, but something about that mood is raising some hairs on the back of his neck.

It's only when the kicks suddenly stop that Yamada notices it. Eri's horn.

Is shorter.

*

Mirio's not really sure where to start, even if Shinsou did come along a little easier than he planned. "Jeez, I can't believe I left the mochi plushies in my room!"

Mirio kind of purposefully left them behind, because he wanted the excuse to have a talk with Shinsou one on one, and Shinsou went with it pretty quickly. He answered the door with that black facemask on, which was already kind of a sign of a rough day, and he didn't say a word when he tugged his shoes on right after Mirio mentioned he needed to run back to the dorm and invited Shinsou to come with him.

So now, he has Shinsou right where he wants him. It's just them, walking to the 3-A dorm. Plenty of time to talk to Shinsou about how Mirio could have protected him from that lizard guy, that he's absolutely still a hero without his quirk, he stopped that Saito lady from getting mugged and everything. Mirio felt like he didn't miss his quirk at all for the first time in months before this moment.

But right now, with his hands in his pockets and Shinsou staring straight ahead instead of saying a word to him, or even looking at him, Mirio feels too much like he did that night. Like he's not cut out for this situation, at all, but he needs to find a way to force through to the solution.

"Are you sure it's okay to leave without letting Yamada know-"

"I-it's fine," Shinsou interrupts, his voice coming out a little strained, kind of worried. Mirio's pretty sure that's mostly on his shoulders, since Yamada has always been fine with Mirio taking both wards out for a bit. Before the attack, but. He hopes things haven't changed with that.

"So, I just..." Mirio feels the words dying on his tongue, and brings a hand to scratch the back of his head, like the perfect words could just rattle out. Exactly what he feels, what he wants Shinsou to believe. Aizawa said something about Shinsou 'doesn't want anyone to get hurt' protecting him, but that still boils down to one thing.

Shinsou still thinks that Mirio can't handle himself, or handle protecting Shinsou if it comes down to it. Maybe Mirio made that worse with the way he answered that question, how he said he'd die protecting Shinsou, but that's in the worst-case scenario. If it came down to Mirio or Shinsou, he'd pick Shinsou, but there's a lot of scenarios before that.

"I'm glad you're talking now!" Mirio says, starting off with something he's confident in saying. Shinsou has been too scared to talk until now, Mirio knows how much he struggled with that, and maybe it's weird that the fear he must have felt that night might have rattled that out, but it's still good progress.

"I'm not," Shinsou says, kind of confusingly. He's... talking. About how he's not talking.

Mirio looks at Shinsou, who's still staring ahead, but picking at the bottom of his face mask now. He's definitely uncomfortable with this, and Mirio kind of figured he was. He doesn't seem like he's so anxious that he's talking, but he does seem like he's close to it.

"Just... to you. I'm not going to use my quirk, and it might not work through hearing aids," Shinsou says, mumbling at the end. With Yamada being his hero with the wardship and all, that's a pretty good thing that his quirk might be ineffective with that, but it's just a little weird how Shinsou says it.

Yeah, he's definitely still uncomfortable around Mirio. "Well, that's good, with the hearing aids and all. Yamada can still protect you as your hero and... so can I, you know?"

Shinsou finally glances at him, so quick that Mirio almost missed it. It looked like he was pretty wary about how this conversation might go, but Mirio needs to say it, to at least clear the air.

"Aizawa said that you were worried that I was going to get hurt, and I kind of get where that was coming from. Without my quirk, I'm just a big beefy bonehead, but the beefy part still counts for something," Mirio says, working up a grin to hope that Shinsou gets that joke, instead of seeing Mirio as a joke of a hero without his quirk. "Something at least close to a hero. And I know that what I said to answer you was kind of scary, it didn't really come out the right way."

"I didn't mean to use that," Shinsou says, and Mirio can see that he's glaring, he can hear the anger in his voice, how Shinsou is probably speaking louder with it than he's ever heard him talk before. "I didn't know it would happen, how my quirk changed. How- that... I'm a Nomu."

A cold chill runs down Mirio's spine, because that's definitely not what Shinsou is. "I'm... not mad at that at all, but... You're not really a Nomu."

Shinsou looks at him like he's telling him that his hair isn't purple, and Mirio has no idea if Aizawa and Yamada know that Shinsou is thinking something this messed up about himself, but he hopes that he's right about his assumption. That Shinsou has no idea what he's talking about.

"Like, Nomus seem to have multiple quirks, but a lot of them. And they look like monsters, big hulking monsters with exposed brains and everything. That's not you at all, so I don't think you're a Nomu," Mirio says, and wonders if he should mention that Shinsou could google it, and find pictures of Nomus from news articles. He's just worried that might bring up USJ, which he's pretty sure Aizawa doesn't want Shinsou to know about. "I probably look more like a Nomu than you do!"

A joke about how they would have to get 'mixed up together' to come out looking like a Nomu definitely isn't funny. Because he knows why Shinsou thinks he's a Nomu. Because he did get mixed up like that, in the raid. And came out with that Confession guy's quirk.

And that's Mirio's fault. "And I'm... sorry about that. If I was a little quicker, or if I could have stopped him. If I just grabbed Overhaul before he grabbed you--"

"Stop," Shinsou says, turning to glare at Mirio, his narrowed purple eyes seem even harsher with the black mask under them. He still doesn't know why Shinsou would wear something like that, willingly. "Talking like that. You saved Eri, that's what you were supposed to do. I was just distracting him and it worked--"

"That wasn't your job," Mirio argues, horrified that Shinsou thinks that it was. "I was the hero, I was trying to save you both. If I could have just... done that. This wouldn't have happened."

Shinsou stares at him, and Mirio has no idea what's going on inside his head. If he's finally realized that Mirio isn't the hero Shinsou seemed to think he was before this, not the kind of guy that he should have some hero merch for, not the hero whose image could have protected him when he had to face down Chisaki again, Mirio doesn't know what took him so long.

Mirio isn't an amazing hero, but he's a hero. He failed Shinsou, he messed up, but he wants to do better. Selfishly, he just wants Shinsou to see that he can. Even if he didn't, and he never has.

"You're an idiot," Shinsou decides, rolling his eyes, and Mirio honestly doesn't know how to take that insult with no heat behind it. "I'm not the kind of person who can be saved. You're not the first one to fail, and it's not your fault. You just have no idea what you're dealing with."

Mirio doesn't know what he's dealing with, he has no idea who these Miasma guys are, but that doesn't matter. He knows that they hurt Shinsou before Chisaki got involved, he knows that they still want to hurt Shinsou, and that's the only part that matters.

If those Miasma guys think they can hurt Shinsou now, they don't know what they're dealing with.

Mirio stops in front of the walkway to the 3-A dorms, because he doesn't want to get interrupted when he means this. When he wants to make sure Shinsou understands. He crosses his arms, smiles that Lemillion smile, and for once he can actually feel his strength under his hands, coursing through him. Ready to convince any doubters that he's strong. "I don't have to know who I'm dealing with. Being a hero means I'm ready for anything, and even though I've still got a few months of school left, I'm ready to do anything to protect you."

He sees how Shinsou's eyes get a little bit wider, the glare falling away, but not in the right way, and Mirio kind of wishes it wasn't this complicated. If maybe Shinsou could just be a little more selfish.

Because it looks like Aizawa was dead on. Shinsou doesn't want Mirio to get hurt like that. "Well, not anything! Kind of, anything, but I won't have to—"

Mirio raises his hands up, but doesn't have a clue what to do with them. He kind of just wishes he could do something with his hands to convince Shinsou to believe in him, that he's a hero, and maybe try to convince Shinsou that he wouldn't die to keep him safe, even if Mirio isn't really convinced because every time he imagines that kind of desperate situation, he knows exactly what he'd do.

He'd take a bullet for Shinsou, just like he'd do for Eri. "I'm not going to die that easily, y'know? I guess that's what I'm trying to say, I can still handle myself and handle protecting you, because even without my quirk, I'm still strong. I'm still Lemillion."

"Of course you are," Shinsou says, almost like that's mocking, almost calling Mirio an idiot again, and he probably is, but his tone is just deadpan enough to be calling him an idiot in another way. Oddly enough, in a way that Sir Nighteye would probably use to say it. "I know you're a hero."

Mirio can't help but nod, feeling both a weight off his shoulders and a puff in his chest before he sighs all of that out. Now that that's over, "And I got a surprise for you too!"

It's not exactly surprising that Shinsou follows him pretty close through the dorm, up the stairs to Mirio's room. It's another 'little kid' habit that Mirio can't help but notice about Shinsou, and fight not to call kind of cute, but Shinsou tends to stick pretty close to him whenever they're out and about, especially when he's out of his comfort zone.

If he got just a little closer, close enough to hide behind him, Mirio might honestly mistake him for Tamaki.

Mirio opens his door, seeing the plushies right on his desk, practically hiding the picture of Sir Nighteye with how big they are, and realizes that while Eri has spent some time in his room when Yamada and Aizawa were working, he's never properly introduced it to Shinsou.

"Welcome to my room! It's a little messy right now," Mirio says, glancing at the All Might calendar he hasn't changed the month for yet, the clothes that just kind of scatter around until Tamaki reminds him that they're supposed to be sorted into 'dirty' or 'clean,' when Mirio prefers to offer the option of 'still kind of decent to wear' if it hasn't gotten too sweaty. His bed is mostly made up, since his pillows are at the head of the bed where they're supposed to be instead of falling off, and his bedsheets aren't pulled out of the corners.

But just a glance at Shinsou reminds Mirio that Shinsou lives much tidier than he does. And maybe he's kind of a bad influence on him in that regard.

“But, I’ve got a brand new, top of the line, squishy soft mochi plushie for Eri,” Mirio says, grabbing the vanilla scented white one that he’s been waiting for over a month to arrive at the toy shop. It doesn’t really have a design apart from the little blush marks on top, but it’s huge, big enough for Mirio to wrap his arms around it and still squish it from all sides, and the best part is the soft-squish. It’s just like eating a really chewy mochi, but just squeezing it. “And, a soft squishy mochi for you!”

Mirio tosses the light purple one that he’s pretty sure is the same color as Shinsou’s eyes to him, and sees the exact moment when Shinsou catches it and catches that amazing squish. His eyes widen just a little, eyebrows rising. Mirio can’t really tell with the face mask in the way, but Shinsou just looks a bit more like the cute kind of kid he should be, who can appreciate the simple pleasure of squishing something that soft.

“And it’s lavender scented too! That can help you fall asleep easier. And they didn’t have any apple scents, but I thought the white one was kind of cute for Eri, and I’m pretty sure she likes vanilla,” Mirio says, giving Eri’s plushie another good squish and trying to tell himself that will be the last one. He got Tamaki and Nejire both a mochi of their own, but he might need to double back to the toy shop and get himself one, because it’s a little addictive.

“She does. It was her favorite. Back...” Shinsou trails off, still looking at the plushie in his hands, and he doesn’t have to say it. Mirio honestly doesn’t want there to be a ‘back then,’ at least not the way he knows about it. He knows that it’s a good thing that Eri and Shinsou met, that Shinsou wasn’t just left to those ‘Miasma’ guys, but he still wishes it could have been better.

That everything could have just been vanilla scented. “It’s kind of a good thing, that she doesn’t remember the smell like that,” Mirio says, catching how Shinsou’s eyes glance up quickly to his, as though he’s interrupting something running through Shinsou’s head. And he’s glad that he’s interrupting it, because he’s sure it’s not pleasant. “Sometimes, smells can kind of set off the worst kind of memories about bad stuff. But, she told me about how you got her favorite soap, and we figured out that it was vanilla. With Neji’s help and all, she has a lot of perfumes and lotions and stuff.”

Eri didn’t have them a lot, but sometimes she’d have a ‘Twenny fit,’ before Shinsou came to UA. Maybe Mirio would read a story ‘wrong,’ or maybe Eri would have a nightmare, but it would start by asking where ‘Twenny’ was or saying that she wanted ‘Twenny,’ and no amount of hugging it out or distracting Eri would really put that tearful fit down until she cried it out. But the one thing that seemed to do the trick sometimes, was Nejire’s bottle of Warm Vanilla lotion, which Mirio probably should have given back to her before now.

“I’m glad that Eri had you to get her that soap. To make sure she had good memories back then,” Mirio says, and he doesn’t miss Shinsou’s hands tightening in the mochi plushie, how he’s staring at it like that, how that’s definitely not a good squish. And since Shinsou’s not that great with tearful fits, Mirio looks at the wall to find his closest ‘distraction.’ “I never showed you this picture though! Eri drew it before you came to UA, wanted to make sure her hero got to be a proper sidekick!”

Mirio looks at the picture, actually looks at it and feels like a bucket of ice was just dumped on him as he realizes why he shouldn’t have called Shinsou’s attention to it. Eri’s drawing of him in his Lemillion costume, his red cape definitely bigger than it really was with his arms stretched over his head isn’t the bad part. It’s not Shinsou, who Eri decided was going to be a cat-themed hero with that same red cape behind him.

It’s the black mask drawn over Shinsou’s face. Eri drew it before she ever saw Shinsou without it on. “Eri just really thinks of you like her hero, you know? And, her birthday is coming up soon, I actually wanted to know what you think about what I got-”

“Hey, Togata!” Shizuo calls, as they open the unlocked door to Mirio’s room, which is kind of a bad habit Mirio has been meaning to call them out on. Holding another bad habit in their scaly hands, Mirio’s protein powder that he’s okay with sharing, but only one serving a day, and Shizuo always wants to get another one. “Can I hav....”

It’s a little terrifying, honestly, when Mirio feels that static crash over him and how Shizuo’s voice just cuts off into noise instead of words that he can understand. He feels his arms fall slack, dropping the mochi plushie, and his body almost seems to disappear after that. Even though he couldn’t move his head, couldn’t blink, couldn’t even speak, he saw when Shinsou noticed, looking at him with wide eyes, looking horrified.

Jeez, Mirio wanted nothing more than to tell him it was okay, because a quirk slip like this is definitely understandable right now, but as much as he tries to fight this hold over his mind, trying just makes him a little nauseous. Mirio hears other voices, but he can’t understand what they’re saying. He’s still stuck staring at Shinsou, watching him look at Shizuo, who’s saying something and stomping towards Shinsou, watching Shinsou look at Mirio again and hesitate on his feet before he turns and nearly breaks into a run.

Mirio can only watch Shinsou veer around and run past Shizuo, still staring at the door and the wall and Shizuo who marches over to him, until there’s something sharp on his shoulder that shatters the control, and he flinches back. “Shizuo, what did you do?!”

Tamaki has that kind of tone he gets when he’s in ‘Bulldog Tamaki’ mode, and it’s not softened at all by the yellow mochi plushie he has in his arms, running over to Mirio and grabbing the shoulder that feels a little stabbed, and Mirio looks to see that he kind of did get stabbed. There’s a few holes in his jacket and he can’t see it too well, but he feels a small trickle of blood. Tamaki, since he’s looking at Mirio’s shoulder from a better angle, definitely looks murderous like Mirio did get stabbed.

And Shizuo has their hands up, dropping the protein powder on the floor, like they just realized that using their spines from their Horned Toad quirk might not have been the best way to break the control. “Togata’s eyes glazed over and he got this weird look on his face, so I figured it must have been the ward kid’s quirk, but he didn’t say anythi- what?”

Mirio is smiling, technically, when he puts a hand on Shizuo’s shoulder and tightens his grip just a little too much. “Shizuo. I know you mean well. But don’t scare Shinsou like that again. Ever.”

“I didn’t scare him,” Shizuo argues, their mouth twisting into as much indignation as they can manage, but being a lizard mutant quirk tends to make them pretty inexpressive. “I just asked him what he did! I’m not going to scare a ward, what kind of hero-”

“Just,” Mirio starts and stops, feeling the realization drop like a lead weight to his stomach. “Stay away from Shinsou for a while. I need to find him.”

Tamaki nods, following behind Mirio, and neither of them think about the open door or leaving Shizuo in there when the hallway is empty, and Shinsou could be anywhere right now. Tamaki seems to read his mind, seems to have a better handle on the situation than Mirio does right now when he says he’ll check the dorm, but Shinsou would only stick around if he got too worked up to run further away. There’s nowhere in the 3-A dorm he’d run to if he got scared.

And apparently, no one he’d trust in the 3-A dorm either.

Mirio fumbles with his phone, because he doesn't want to make that call to Yamada and tell him he lost Shinsou that easily, but Shinsou must have made record time back to the staff dorm because Yamada is already calling him. "Hey, I'm sorry, I didn't think that Shizuo would come to my room or-I didn't really put it together that it was a bad idea--"

"Mirio, what's going on?" Yamada asks, but Mirio kind of wants to ask what's going on on Yamada's end, because it sounds like a lot of screaming. "Is Hitoshi with you?"

"Uh." Mirio doesn't know what makes it worse, Yamada asking him that himself before Mirio could fess up to it, or Yamada calling Shinsou 'Hitoshi.'

It's not entirely a surprise, not that Mirio's thought about it. He's thought a lot about how he'd like Shinsou to stay at UA, where he can be with Eri and where Mirio can know he's not going to get hurt anymore, and Shinsou clearly likes being around Yamada. So, it's not really surprising that Shinsou might stick around, in a 'Hitoshi' kind of way.

Mirio's brain turns to static but worse when he realizes where his train of thought went just from hearing Yamada call Shinsou 'Hitoshi,' when Aizawa has called him that too, when they've both called him 'Mirio.' "No. He... ran. After accidentally brainwashing me. And getting scared."

There's a pause in the screaming in the background too, and Mirio almost misses it. "Okay. Eri and I are gonna be in Gym Gamma, so if you run into him, just... let me know?"

The uncertainty in Yamada's voice at the end makes Mirio feel like Yamada doesn't have a plan for this either, so Mirio falls back on his training. "I'll let Aizawa know too!"

Mirio calls Aizawa after Yamada hangs up, but it goes to voicemail, which Mirio counts himself lucky for when he looks around outside of the 3-A dorm and realizes there's too many footprints in the snow to really know where Shinsou went. He asks some underclassmen if they saw him, and they point him in a direction that Mirio was really hoping he wouldn't go.

Not towards the dorms. But towards USJ.

Mirio runs, knowing that Shinsou's purple hair would stand out in the crowd, and probably even more so if he hasn't dropped the purple mochi plushie. He knows there are other buildings, other places that Shinsou could go to, but he doubts that he did. Even if it doesn't make sense on a logical scale that Shinsou would want to go back to the place he was attacked by that lizard quirk guy, after Shizuo's lizard-based appearance scared him, Mirio knows that Shinsou probably isn't operating on logic right now.

Shinsou is scared out of his mind, just like he was that night. But this time, Mirio can't let him run away and face it alone.

As soon as Mirio sees him in the distance, crouching in the snow next to the P.E. track almost exactly where Mirio thought he would find him, he sends a text message to Aizawa just telling him the location, but keeps running. He only remembers to slow down when Shinsou turns his head to look at him.

Shinsou is holding the plushie against his chest, and despite everything, Mirio feels his smile become more honest at the thought that at least Shinsou seems to like it. "Hey, it's okay! I was just worried about you, and it's okay that you used your quirk--"

"I didn't!" Shinsou argues, springing to his feet and backing away, backing up pretty fast which reminds Mirio that Shinsou can still take off sprinting again, and he can see on Shinsou's face how bad that could go. Even just seeing the top half of his face, the black facemask still covering most of it up, the panic is too clear to see with the shaky way Shinsou runs a hand through his hair, how wide his eyes are. “I didn’t, that’s not how it works, I can’t- I’m not...”

Mirio still hasn’t gotten close, but he can hear how fast Shinsou’s breathing now, how he probably can’t talk with the panic getting that bad. Mirio just raises up his hands, trying to find the balance between too soft and condescending and too rough for Shinsou’s rattled nerves in the tone of his voice. “Shinsou, it’s okay. I’m here, and I’m here to help. Just take a deep breath-”

“I’m not too stupid to fucking breathe,” Shinsou yells, his hand pulling away just to throw it out to his side, pure frustration that’s definitely getting to be too much for him. “You just think I’m stupid and weak and you don’t know anything about what I’ve been through! Anything! You have no idea what I can do-”

“Then, show me,” Mirio says, even if he worries that Shinsou will show him that he can take control of him again, which will not be fun given that Aizawa would probably have to knock him out of the brainwash and not be happy that they have no idea where Shinsou would have run off to. “Show me what you can do, and I’ll show you that I can protect you.”

Mirio knows that Shinsou can fight. The kid flipped him nearly on his head when they sparred, and even if Mirio knows he was holding a lot back, he doesn’t know if Shinsou was holding back too. If this might be the best way to do this.

If Shinsou doesn’t think that Mirio is strong, strong enough to be the person to run to, then maybe it’s easier to show it with a demonstration.

Mirio walks forward, still with his hands up, the blood trickling down his arm under his jacket from where Shizuo broke his skin, and he’s not surprised when Shinsou pulls out his knife. In a way, that kind of makes it better. Even if it’s a completely different feeling from facing that lizard villain, especially with Shinsou still holding the mochi plushie to his chest with one hand. “Get the fuck away from me. I swear, I will kill you this time.”

“You don’t have to go that far,” Mirio says, hesitating before he takes a smaller step. Shinsou holds the knife in front of him defensively, at an angle in front of his chest. His first move from that position would be a slice, but could move quickly into stabbing, probably at Mirio’s left side. Which means that Mirio could drop into the ground and come up behind Shinsou on the right, grabbing his arm from behind to take him down, if he had his quirk.

But Mirio doesn’t, so when he sees the knife move, just wavering, he strikes quick to grab Shinsou’s hand and force the knife out of his grip with his thumb in a pressure hold, grabbing Shinsou’s shoulder with a forearm against his collarbone that could force Shinsou to fall backwards on the ground, could put pressure on Shinsou’s windpipe, the perfect hold for taking down a vocal type villain.

Shinsou starts to fall back, but Mirio only has the barest warning before Shinsou locks his leg in front of Mirio’s to use as leverage before he turns and forces his arm completely straight, dropping the plushie when he breaks Mirio’s hold on his shoulder pushing his arm away. Shinsou tries to use his grip on his wrist as an anchor point for an arm bar, his free hand on the back of Mirio’s shoulder, but Mirio finds it too easy to just throw him onto his back in the snow in front of him. Away from the knife, just in case.

He doesn’t even have time to see Shinsou’s expression before he’s on his feet again, and Mirio has to back up to get a split second to predict what his next move is.

Shinsou is an unpredictable fighter, but only to a point. Mirio knows that Shinsou has the same strategy that he did before, to find some hold or grapple to force Mirio down, but Mirio realizes it for the first time that Shinsou doesn't use any offensive strikes at all. No punches, no palm jabs, no kicks, Shinsou just wants to become an octopus and choke him out at some point.

But Mirio has sparred with an actual octopus, who is now his boyfriend, so Shinsou isn't pulling out anything he hasn't seen before.

Mirio doesn't want to hurt Shinsou, as much as these defensive grapples seem to indicate that Shinsou doesn't want to hurt him. Mirio fights almost the same way he did before with Shinsou before Shinsou had to meet Chisaki again, he never throws a punch that he wants to connect and nothing is at his full power. But he still wants to show Shinsou that he is powerful.

Shinsou finds an opening, a momentary distraction in the fight, to jump onto Mirio's back with his feet digging into Mirio's hips, one arm tight around his neck and the other probably trying to complete the sleeper hold, but Mirio hooks a hand into the bend of Shinsou's elbow with another under his knee to twist and throw him off. Before Shinsou gains his footing fully, still kneeling on the ground, Mirio slides the hand holding his elbow to his wrist to twist it behind Shinsou's back, stepping behind him in one of the most basic restraint holds. Still loose, he doesn't try to force Shinsou closer to his knees or the ground, because this is a restraint hold, but not a villain take down.

This is Mirio trying to prove that he could have done this before, that night Shinsou was attacked, if he could have trusted him.

There's just a moment of Miro fighting to catch his breath, trying to find the words to say when Shinsou has gone still and quiet, probably irritated about losing first and foremost before Mirio can explain things fully, before Mirio hears Aizawa's voice. "What. Did I say. About not running off?"

Mirio turns his head so fast that he practically hears himself pulling a muscle, because that kind of Aizawa tone? Always means punishment with a capital P. "This might look kinda stupid, but Shinsou's okay, he's fine, you're fine right-"

"Why didn't you ask me to go to the 1-A dorm?" Shinsou asks, his tone unnaturally flat and rough, and Mirio starts to cover his own mouth to see if that would stop the quirk's effect, but apparently, it's not meant for him.

"Because my students are dealing with enough right now, I'm dealing with enough, and you need to sort things out with Hizashi," Aizawa answers, before his eyes glaze over under the influence of Shinsou's quirk, and Mirio doesn't even have a second to consider how to break Shinsou's control before Shinsou takes advantage of how Mirio's hold had loosened further to twist and stand, pulling Mirio's arm by his elbow into a joint lock behind his back.

Mirio knows how to get out of it, easy, because this is kind of the worst grapple Shinsou has tried to pull so far, but feeling Shinsou press his forehead against his shoulderblade stops Mirio from doing that. Just listening to how ragged Shinsou's breathing is. "I need to leave. They're trying to get rid of me."

"What?" Mirio asks, before he remembers that's not exactly a great thing to do right now. Shinsou took control of him at the dorm without asking him a question, Shinsou's quirk has clearly changed in some big ways that Mirio kind of needs to know about now, and Shinsou's control might not be the best right now. Not when he sounds legitimately convinced that 'they're' trying to get rid of him.

“Aizawa said it himself, he doesn’t want to deal with me, and he had to tell the truth, and Yamada is planning to assign me to another hero, and-” Shinsou cuts himself off, before he pulls back just to headbutt Mirio’s back, frustrated but kind of gentle, in a weird way. “Fine, I deserve it, but I don’t want... that to happen.”

“Look, Shinsou,” Mirio tries to reassure, but it’s kind of awkward when he can’t look at him, and even when he tugs at his arm, Shinsou just holds him tighter. So Mirio sighs and relaxes into it, if this is the way Shinsou wants to have this conversation. “I think you might be a little confused about what’s going on? I’m a little confused too, so that’s okay, but I do know that with that part of your quirk, things come out really wrong sometimes. Aizawa probably meant that he’s just got a lot on his plate right now, since his students have a lot going on, but that doesn’t mean he wants to get rid of you.”

Mirio looks at the knife on the ground, since he can’t look at Shinsou with his insistence on the tactical hold, and kind of understands that Shinsou might be ‘a lot’ right now. Not that Mirio can blame him, because Shinsou’s clearly got a lot on his own plate, but Aizawa is probably dealing with a lot if the rumors are true about one of his students.

“And Yamada definitely doesn’t want to get rid of you, he actually called me to ask if you were okay before I found you,” Mirio says, and doesn’t ignore how Shinsou turns his head where it’s pressed to his back, his grip tightening for a second. There’s definitely something that Shinsou didn’t mention before he left that easily with him, probably to do with the weird screaming in the background. “I know you’re worried right now, and it’s probably scary to face Aizawa and Yamada on your own to straighten things out. So, I’ll stick with you for moral support! If things really are that bad, and they are trying to move you to another place, then I’ll be there to talk some sense into them.”

Mirio is absolutely sure that’s not the case, and this might be Shinsou acting so much like Tamaki, not just with the hiding behind his back but letting worries spiral into horrifying monsters inside his head. And even if the monsters aren’t real, they’re just as scary, and Mirio has been ready and able to face them with Tamaki since they were kids.

He just kind of needs to get his arm free first. “Sounds good? If Aizawa gives us any trouble, I think I can take him.”

Shinsou raises his head away, only to drop it one more time, but his hand and arm falls away from the joint lock that Mirio’s elbow had been stuck in.

But Shinsou is still hiding behind Mirio, his head moving to press against the back of his arm, and there’s the smallest tug on the end of Mirio’s sleeve that he has to look down to confirm that Shinsou is picking at his sleeve, so much like Eri does, and Mirio kind of wants to cover his face because it’s just weirdly adorable. Especially for a guy that tried to threaten to kill him a while ago.

Shinsou glances around his shoulder, and Mirio looks up in time to see Aizawa crossing his arms again, apparently out of the control. Aizawa looks like he definitely needs some explanation, and it should be pretty easy to take some of the pressure off Shinsou at first. “It was my fault, sensei! I asked Shinsou to come with me to my dorm, because I wanted to talk to him, and Shizuo kind of scared him-”

“I wasn’t scared,” Shinsou argues, probably just for argument’s sake, and it sounds muffled against his arm but still draws Aizawa’s attention to him.

“Shizuo was just kind of the wrong person to run into right now, and I take full responsibility for that,” Mirio says, and he’d bow to try to chip off a little more of Aizawa’s irritation, but that would mean that Shinsou’s human shield wouldn’t be able to defend him fully. And he doubts that Shinsou would react well to that.

Aizawa doesn’t really seem like the irritation has been chipped off at all with the way he hasn’t moved a muscle. When Aizawa gets still like that, that means nothing but trouble. “You seemed to be holding your own well against Mirio. Especially with that sprained ankle.”

Mirio feels a real urge to bow and scrape, because he must have forced Shinsou to come with him to the dorm in the first place without meaning to. He had no idea that Shinsou was still hurt, he thought his ankle was already healed by Recovery Girl, since he couldn’t get that taken care of in the mountains with Aizawa.

“Especially since Eri seems to have burned through some of the reserves of her quirk, after possibly Rewinding someone,” Aizawa says, and Mirio’s blood runs cold as he struggles to wrap his head around what Aizawa was saying. Shinsou wouldn’t, Shinsou is the last person who would-

“Four days,” Shinsou says, and Mirio turns his head to see Shinsou pulling the face mask down, revealing scabs on top of his scars, scars from that mask he wore before. Mirio had to ask Tamaki, had to beg Tamaki to tell him how Shinsou really was at the end of that fight when he had been forced to leave under the influence of Shinsou’s quirk, and he said that lizard quirk villain put another mask on Shinsou’s face. Another cruel mask that cut him like that. “That was the limit she was comfortable with. It might take repeated tries to Rewind Mirio-”

“You either allowed Eri to use her quirk on you, without supervision, or you used your quirk on her to control it, again without supervision or knowing the consequences of that,” Aizawa says, and Mirio understands exactly why Aizawa was so still, exactly why he’s using that tone. Aizawa was probably scared to death when he heard about that.

“She wanted to practice,” Shinsou argues, and Mirio hears the snow crunching under his shoes where he shifts on his feet, hiding a little further behind Mirio, even if he’s not picking at his sleeve anymore. “And you weren’t going to heal me any other way, so I’d have no way to run when you and Yamada tossed me out.”

“Which, is another problem. Probably a big misunderstanding,” Mirio says, kind of hopeful that Aizawa and Shinsou can have that discussion about using Eri’s quirk like that without him there. Literally caught in the middle. “Shinsou thinks that Yamada is trying to reassign him to another hero, which is... why he did that, I guess.”

Mirio is guessing that Shinsou also wasn’t a fan of having a sprained ankle either, and maybe wanted to use himself as a test subject for Eri’s quirk, which is not a good decision at all on his part. But Shinsou is a pretty bad decision maker, honestly.

And Mirio might have decided on the wrong words to explain, as Aizawa rubs his eyes before pinching the bridge of his nose. “Hizashi is the last person who would try to reassign you to another hero, he was probably discussing what would happen if the wardship test failed. Which we could test beforehand, if you would talk to him.”

Mirio glances at Shinsou again, seeing him glaring at his feet, and he can’t understand any of this. Shinsou using Eri’s quirk to heal himself from a sprained ankle of all things, being convinced that Yamada was trying to get rid of him. And talking to Mirio, and Aizawa, but not talking to Yamada? He was talking about how his quirk probably couldn’t work on hearing aids earlier, that was one of the first things he said to Mirio.

“And this misunderstanding doesn’t excuse you from leaving the dorm without permission or recklessly endangering yourself using Eri’s quirk,” Aizawa says, and Mirio feels himself sweating under Aizawa’s glare right now, even if he’s not talking to him. He’s not sure there’s enough paper in the world that could take down the essay that Shinsou will probably have to write to make up for this. “You don’t seem to understand that these limits are there for your own wellbeing. Get on the track, warm up, and start running. Only stop when you’re tired.”

Not an essay then, but that’s still an Aizawa Classic. Mirio looks at Shinsou, who’s glaring at Aizawa now instead of at the snow, who still has that black facemask dangling off his ear and several scabs on his face. But Mirio is pretty sure Shinsou has some other wounds if Rewind took his body back to the very night he was attacked. “Uh, sensei, Shinsou might still be hurt from that attack-”

“Just from the mask,” Shinsou grumbles, before he reaches up and balls the facemask up in his fist before stuffing it in his pocket, heading for the track behind them. Accepting Aizawa’s punishment, but apparently counting Mirio’s support out now. Maybe he doesn’t need it.

But Mirio’s still following him to offer it, smiling when Shinsou looks over his shoulder and seems surprised by that.

The first thing that villain did, apparently, was put the mask back on Shinsou’s face. Before he started using that knife. Right after Mirio was forced to abandon Shinsou.

He’s not abandoning him out of his own free will this time.

The stretching is silent, if a little bit rushed. They probably should have stretched before that ‘kinda-spar, kinda-fight,’ and when Shinsou does start running, Mirio easily keeps pace with him on his right side. So that Shinsou can’t really see Aizawa, if he still feels scared of him.

But the closeness also lets Mirio keep track of how Shinsou’s doing on this run. The weather isn’t the best for this kind of exercise with the cold air, early evening chill. The track has grown patches of snow since it’s only cleaned up in the morning if it’s not scheduled to be used. Shinsou might look a lot better than he did when he arrived at UA, still skinny but not scary skinny, but he doesn’t train like the hero course students do.

Mirio recognizes the fire burning behind Shinsou’s narrowed eyes when it gets brighter, the more he seems to be getting a little winded. Shinsou hasn’t trained enough to reach that point, but he’s still pushing himself like he can do it.

“Stop,” Aizawa calls out from his place on the edge of the track, after they round the bend that came after Mirio really started worrying how far Aizawa would push Shinsou, or how far Shinsou would push himself. Shinsou stumbles when he stops and Mirio catches him with a hand on his shoulder that Shinsou jerks away from, still breathing too hard. But right after that, Shinsou braces his hands on his knees, almost like he’s about to collapse.

Shinsou’s exhaustion seems to get worse after he’s stopped, like he wouldn’t let himself realize the fatigue wearing on him until he was allowed to. Mirio sees that, and realizes how bad that is, because all first year hero students have to learn how to learn their limits before they go beyond. Pushing beyond the beyond, or in Shinsou’s case, beyond the beyond of the beyond, can only lead to trouble.

“Run another lap,” Aizawa orders, and both Mirio and Shinsou turn to look at him. Aizawa is calm as ever, and Mirio knows there’s no malice behind it. Aizawa likes to prove a point when his words aren’t taken seriously, and that’s why practically everyone in the hero course realizes at some point that they've got to listen to Aizawa.

But Shinsou isn't a hero course student, he's a winded kid who probably needs to cool down at this point. Even if he can fight, even if he's fought a lot before and probably made such a habit of pushing past his limits to survive that he can't recognize them now, Mirio doesn't really want to see Shinsou even more exhausted.

But Shinsou pulls himself up with half a growl in the back of his throat, and starts running again. And Mirio catches up to run with him. And he realizes it.

This is kind of like breaking a horse.

Not that Mirio knows a whole lot about that, just from some movies, but when there's a horse too wild to be ridden or even get close to it, the cowboys in old westerns would just put it inside a corral with a length of rope tying it to a pole in the middle, and make it run in circles. Even if the horse started out wanting to run, it would eventually get tired. That's when they'd make the horse keep running, just running in circles until it was too tired to fight when someone would get close and take it back to the stable to care for it. Eventually, the horse was supposed to learn that listening to the cowboys was better than listening to its instincts.

Shinsou's instincts seem to be pretty bad ones right now, and Mirio is still trying not to think of how bad it could have turned out if Eri's quirk Rewinded Shinsou way more than four days. Shinsou needs to listen to Aizawa, and probably learn to listen to his own limits.

Shinsou drops into a stumbling jog on the last few steps, still bent over when he stops, but he keeps clenching and unclenching his hands like he doesn't want to brace himself again, like he doesn't want to seem that exhausted in front of Aizawa. But Mirio knows that Aizawa sees that too. "If you stopped when you felt tired, you wouldn't feel like this."

Shinsou's hands clench longer, his panting breaths turning almost into another growl. But he still won't look at Aizawa, staring ahead like he's expecting another lap.

"If you don't know your limits, you'll get hurt from unnecessary recklessness," Aizawa continues, folding his arms in front of his chest again. "Healing from a sprained ankle is easier than healing from a worse injury."

"Wasn't... me," Shinsou gasps between pants. "Your... crazy grandfather... did that."

Aizawa just tilts his head, and Mirio kind of wants the story behind that, but he's not going to interrupt right now. "And after that, you proceeded to ignore your injury, run and climb a tree with that sprained ankle, and wanted to take a three hour hike on foot after all of that. You did that, because you think that injuries won't affect you later on when you can be quirk healed over and over."

Shinsou turns to look at Aizawa, pulling himself to stand, but Mirio sees how he drags his leg to face him instead of stepping. Walking back to the dorms will not be fun for Shinsou. "'Pain... is the best teacher,' huh. That's not... a new one."

Mirio is honestly impressed that Aizawa doesn't react to that. Whether Shinsou means that honestly, if he thinks that Aizawa only meant to hurt him with this exercise, or whether Shinsou was saying that to make Aizawa feel like he was just like the villains that hurt Shinsou before, Mirio feels sick to his stomach. But Aizawa doesn't even blink. "And you wouldn't be hurt, if you ran until you were tired. You're coming to the 1-A dorm, with me, and that's not an invitation. And your walking privileges have been revoked."

Mirio doesn't really know what that last part means, but Shinsou seems to. And Shinsou seems to find that to be the worst part of his punishment, as he throws his head back with a growl under his breath to roll his eyes at the sky. But, since that seems to be the end of it, Mirio does some cool down stretches and eventually Shinsou catches on to do them too.

Mirio gets his answer about what 'walking privileges being revoked' means when Aizawa turns around and crouches, and Shinsou throws himself on his back for a piggy back ride. Neither of them seem happy about that.

Mirio doesn't know what he feels about it either. At all.

It's probably time for him to leave, then. "Don't forget the mochi plushie! And the knife!"

Mirio picks up both items out of the snow, and while Shinsou raises a heavy hand to take the plushie, Aizawa takes the knife. Mirio definitely wants to take his leave when he sees how worn out Aizawa looks, now that he's close enough to him to see it.

"And I'll talk to you later, Shinsou!" Mirio says, walking faster to make sure he makes it to the 3-A dorm before they pass him to the 1-A dorm. Pretty sure that Yamada already got the details from Aizawa, but he sends the text anyway to confirm that Aizawa has custody of Shinsou now.

He's very interested in why his sweet and perfect boyfriend happened to have a yellow mochi plushie in his arms the last time Mirio saw him, because Mirio definitely feels like he needs it. And the said boyfriend. And some nice cuddling to unwind.

And trying not to think about what Shinsou getting Rewound by Eri really means right now.

*

The walk starts silently, which Aizawa takes advantage of and extends by offering Hitoshi a jelly pouch along with the knife to be put away. The jelly pouch is not just an adequate meal replacement, but should help rehydrate him after exercising to that extent.

And as Aizawa expects, Hitoshi's biting words come right after he finishes that jelly pouch.

"You smell like cigarettes," Hitoshi says, leaning on his elbows into the top of Aizawa's shoulders just a bit too hard. It hurts a bit, but Aizawa has been hurt far worse, and he's too exhausted to think about calling Hitoshi out on it.

"I smoke occasionally," Aizawa answers, too exhausted to consider whether that's a bad influence on an impressionable youth. Exhausted isn't the right word for what he is right now, not when the most strenuous thing he's accomplished today is packing up all of Hagakure's belongings to be shipped to Ms. Joke once the wardship begins, but it's the one he'll use to sum it up.

Aizawa and Hizashi both smoke occasionally, they have a 'stress stash' of cigarettes that Aizawa tells himself he's allowed to burn through. When that half-full pack is finished, he won't buy another one. He'll let Hizashi do that, if he feels the need to.

When those cigarettes are gone, he'll have to put Shiori to rest in his mind. He would have helped her, he wouldn't have let it come to this. He could have saved them both. But he didn't.

He doesn't know whether he's calling Shiori a friend now just to salt his own wound, when he always thought of her as a reliable informant and a pain in his ass and a tragic person who refused to get help with her clear issues all at once. But he regrets that he'll never step foot in her apartment again, he'll never be met with that foul mix of cigarettes, trash, and body odor. He just wants to remember the way she looked before she was attacked, when he thinks of her.

Hitoshi's elbows pull away from his shoulders, replaced by his forearms. He knows that Hitoshi is fidgeting, likely uncomfortable with this method that's only barely disciplinary. Hitoshi pushed himself too far, and Aizawa isn't in the right state of mind to not feel responsible for that. And he knows he'd feel worse if Hitoshi injured himself from being pushed further in walking to the dorm. "I'm not angry with you. You're allowed to make your own choices here, up to a point, and willfully going against my instructions to keep you safe is one of those points. And using Eri's quirk on yourself...."

When Aizawa saw Hitoshi and Mirio fighting like that, when he saw that Hitoshi was doing more than not taking into consideration his sprain, that he was fighting like he didn't have it, and put together the reason why Eri was having an emotional meltdown as the backlash of using her quirk and why Hitoshi left his crutch at the dorm, he was terrified. Even if the moment had passed, even if he could see that Hitoshi was alive, he still felt that terror like Eri's quirk was being used on Hitoshi in that moment.

"You could have been killed if you were Rewound too far. Eri would have killed you," Aizawa says, and he doesn't want to imagine the horror that would have unwound from that. He knows that Eri could never recover from it, Hizashi would blame himself. Hizashi didn't realize what had happened until Eri started lashing out, he would have only realized what had happened by Eri's screams. "You can't do that, ever again."

Hitoshi's silence is unnatural now, and the too-loose weight of his arms on Aizawa's shoulders rings with an accusation Hitoshi already leveled. That Aizawa went too far with that discipline, he acted too familiar.

"Are you hurt?" Aizawa asks, and he realizes he should have asked before. He shouldn't have just assumed Hitoshi wasn't injured by the way he was fighting, because Hitoshi has proven time and time again, recently, that he doesn't know when to stop when he needs to.

Aizawa sees Hitoshi's answer, rather than hearing it. Out of the corner of his eye, he sees Hitoshi signing 'no' with his right two fingers moving up and down. Hitoshi signing to him.

Aizawa doesn't know if this is a cold shoulder, or a sign that he has gone too far, but he'd rather have this discussion verbally. Especially when Hitoshi can't sign much when he's draped over Aizawa's back. "If that exercise was something familiar to you, I'm sorry for telling you to run. You can tell me when something like that--"

Aizawa watches Hitoshi's hand go limp, before his skull smacks into the back of Aizawa's head. Aizawa would think that Hitoshi was now communicating displeasure by headbutting, certainly a unique sign for JSL, but the way that Hitoshi jolts back and nearly pulls Aizawa off balance by how he's carrying him seems to suggest it was an accident. "Not that."

Those two words, as quietly and rushed as they were spoken, provide more questions than answers. Aizawa fights not to stop walking as the silence drags on again.

Finally, Hitoshi sighs. "Fine, I was stupid. I thought I could use my quirk on Eri if she went too far, but I couldn't. I was lucky that she stopped on her own."

Unbelievably, horrifyingly lucky. "And you did that because you thought Hizashi was trying to place you somewhere other than UA."

One of Hitoshi's arms withdraw, and Aizawa can picture the teenager rubbing the back of his neck in his usual habit. “I didn’t like being injured either. Even Chisaki and Bug healed me.”

Both of those names are ones Aizawa doesn’t want to be compared to. Or thought to be worse comparatively. “Healing done by a quirk isn’t standard medical care. It has risks from overuse. Apart from a few exceptions, most people have to deal with a splint for six weeks.”

On an industry standard, most heroes are exempt from that and usually placed in the front of the line for any doctor who has the license to use their quirk in medical care. A triage system follows that, dire civilian cases can be treated with quirk healing. An ankle sprain is not that.

It’s a system that Hitoshi will have to get used to, at some point.

“I know,” Hitoshi says, like he knows, but Aizawa knows full well he’s never experienced that. It’s something that Hizashi and himself have probably enabled too far by bringing Hitoshi to Recovery Girl for every injury. “Chisaki probably would have killed me, if I disobeyed him. Bug too. If I was lucky she just would have beaten me.”

Every inch of that horror that Hitoshi describes like it’s nothing to him doesn’t sound like an accusation, or an attempt to discuss his experiences frankly with the outer appearance of trying to unnerve Aizawa to gain pity, instead of admitting he’s overwhelmed. It honestly sounds like an admission of where they stand, a retraction in too many words.

That at the very least, Aizawa isn’t as cruel as those criminals in Hitoshi’s eyes now.

“We can see Recovery Girl for your face. That isn’t intensive enough to be dangerous,” Aizawa offers, even if his reasons behind it aren’t so benign. He doesn’t want to add more scars, to know that Hitoshi has them because he decided against that course of action. Hitoshi signs ‘no’ again, but Aizawa won’t take that as another retreat into silence. “How far back did you want Eri to go?”

He has to ask, and the pressure on his shoulders when Hitoshi stiffens is almost an answer in itself. The answer he offers isn’t surprising. “Far enough. My hair would be messed up again, but my pants would fit better.”

Aizawa suspected it, but the confirmation is still unnerving.

Hitoshi wanted to Rewind himself before the raid.

Before he was fused with Chisaki and Nemoto. Before his quirk could have mutated with Nemoto’s, a desperate action especially when there was a near certainty it wouldn’t work.

If Eri’s quirk was able to reverse that, Hitoshi wouldn’t have a mutated quirk in the first place.

“There are no easy fixes like that,” Aizawa says, because as much as Eri’s quirk is powerful, it’s also flawed. That’s another reason that Hitoshi can’t return to the dorm tonight, when Eri will likely not be in a mood to see him given that she tends to have a lingering anger after these quirk outbursts. “You could lose a great deal more than you would gain if you attempt something like that. You’ve moved forward in ways you can’t clearly see now.”

Aizawa stops in front of the 1-A dorm, knowing that at this hour, it might be better to scale to the rooftop access or the window he left open on the sixth floor, when he still doesn’t want his students to see Hitoshi right now. Not today, when they deserved at least one day to mourn Hagakure’s parting.

“And we’ll buy more pants,” Aizawa mutters, at least grateful that wasn’t the reason Hitoshi risked Rewinding himself out of existence.

Without an answer to that, Aizawa adjusts his grip behind Hitoshi's left knee before he throws his capture scarf, picking the window. He hesitates long enough for Hitoshi to see what he's doing, and feels Hitoshi wrap his arms loosely around his neck to steady himself.

After making sure the plushie was secured between them, pressed tighter against Aizawa's back.

Aizawa has to trust that Hitoshi knows how to hold onto him when he pulls himself to the window in one fluid movement, catching himself on the windowsill to make sure that he doesn't knock Hitoshi off of him by accident. He winds his scarf back around his neck and closes the window, but even on solid ground, Hitoshi's arms remain wound around him, underneath the scarf. Aizawa's hands go back to Hitoshi's knees, but he starts to feel Hitoshi's weight more solidly against them.

Before Hitoshi's head drops to Aizawa's shoulder, and Aizawa realizes what happened. The kid has dropped into a dead sleep on him.

Despite his best efforts, Hitoshi's leg falls when Aizawa has to open the door to the Safe Room, but the thud of Hitoshi's shoe isn't enough to jolt him awake. Once inside, Aizawa awkwardly tries to deposit Hitoshi on the cot, more successful than he should be, stripping off his shoes even if his jacket will have to stay on, or risk waking him.

Aizawa only sees Hitoshi move when he puts the purple plushie next to him, the teenager curling towards it with an arm falling short of cradling it almost instinctively. Mirio should probably know how well received his gift was.

Aizawa takes a picture, with a little spite, but sends it to his husband to help soothe his nerves. Hizashi insisted that he would be better equipped to wind Eri down right now, rather than switching duties at the dorm, but he knows that his husband is still worried about Hitoshi.

Aizawa can't say he's not worried either. Hitoshi's every action recently has nothing short of worrying, and often far beyond that. As much as he knows that Hizashi can't take that on in the present moment, when Eri would likely lash out at Hitoshi like a trapped and vicious kitten with some reasonable offenses to iron out, Aizawa isn't sure if he can handle him either. He knows that he needs to get to the bottom of why Hitoshi is refusing to talk to Hizashi, he knows he needs to help Hitoshi cope with that recent attack when Hitoshi is clearly suffering profoundly, evidenced by these abrupt changes in his demeanor. Lashing out at every opportunity, when before there was only silence.

Hitoshi mumbles something in his sleep, trying to curl himself closer to the plushie, and Aizawa takes the blanket folded up on the end of the bed to lay it over him. Before he takes another cigarette to take to the rooftop, where he won't be spotted by his impressionable students at the window like he was by Uraraka.

Hitoshi is a mess, but he's also Aizawa's responsibility. His mess, in a way.

He'll have to find better ways than smoking to cope with that.

Rule of Law

Chapter Summary

Aizawa begins a new method of investigating The Miasma, with Shinsou's help.
Ochako considers the upcoming voluntary internship period during winter break.
Shinsou faces the first 'family meeting' to discuss rules that he knows he's broken, and consequences, which will require further testing.

Chapter Notes

Trigger Warning: Shiori mention in Aizawa's POV, Casual mention of suicide that is not intended to be serious in Shinsou's POV

Previously on Wards of UA: After Shinsou left the dorm with Mirio, after Eri used her quirk to Rewind him 4 days to heal his ankle sprain and accidentally revert him to the point where the mask had cut into his face during the 127 attack, he was taken to the 1-A dorm to be closely watched by Aizawa. Shinsou used his quirk without talking for the first time on Mirio, and has been using sign language sporadically since. Ojiro and Hagakure were dating prior to Hagakure being revealed as the UA traitor, and Ojiro took that revelation particularly hard. Eri picked out plushies from her massive collection to give to the hero students, after hearing that Hagakure 'couldn't go to school anymore.' Monoma created an Advent Calendar for both Shinsou and Eri, to give them a gift every day in December, which was created with the goal to make Shinsou realize that he's a kind person who doesn't just want to Copy his quirk. Shinsou does not feel confident about his ability to cook, and feels that Yamada lies to him any time that he tells Shinsou that he made a meal well. Shinsou has also recently started growing facial hair, and he particularly hates having stubble on his chin like Aizawa. Aizawa Shoga, Aizawa's grandfather, threatened Shinsou saying that he would 'pickle his fingers and eat them,' which was a threat that Shinsou was particularly impressed with and wanted to use at the soonest opportunity.

Hitoshi hardly moved while he slept, as far as Aizawa knew. Aizawa tends to stay awake during dorm shifts to make sure he won't have to rely on his students coming to him with an emergency or issue. Most teachers don't stay awake, they actually use the cot and trust the automated system to alert them to true emergencies.

But he fell asleep in his chair, now blinking blearily at the door until he woke up enough to find the edge of the desk digging into his temple uncomfortable.

Aizawa checks the video feed with still blurry eyes, finding a few students in the kitchen making breakfast and the doors for his other students' rooms still closed. No alerts about mixed sex gatherings, no fire alarms that he wasn't aware of.

He pulls himself to stand and stretch, and starts making a pot of coffee with the machine that Hizashi purchased for him, knowing that this eventuality would come to pass multiple times. He's sure that with Bakugo in the kitchen, there's a perfectly good pot of coffee he could invite himself to downstairs, but he frankly doesn't have the energy for that.

He fills the pot with water from the bathroom sink, meets the half-full package of his special blend of coffee grounds with deep gratitude as he pours half of it into the machine and sets it to the strongest brew strength. He watches the steady drip of pitch black liquid slowly fill the pot, still considering whether he should swap it for his coffee mug for greater efficiency, before he sees a sudden movement out of the corner of his eye.

Hitoshi jolts awake and to sitting, pulling a hand to rub at his face, before his eyes fall to and focus on the coffee pot.

Aizawa at first wants to pettily guard this coffee that he needs, because he has responsibilities that Hitoshi doesn't, before he realizes that there's a distinct possibility that Hitoshi hasn't had a drop of coffee in the past four days. Not while they were in the mountains, and if Hizashi hadn't given him coffee yesterday, this could be a simple solution for taking the edge off some of the teenager's irritation.

When the drip falters to those last few drops that Aizawa will willingly sacrifice to the heating element at the base in exchange for coffee in his hand a few seconds sooner, Aizawa pours the coffee into a spare mug that he's nearly sure is Hizashi's, then his own, before he holds the first out to Hitoshi. The teenager moves faster than he should at this early hour to crawl to the bottom of the cot and take it, pressing the mug to his lips to test whether it's cool enough to drink from yet.

Aizawa has long since learned to drink through the pain when necessary, familiar scalding on his tongue soothed by the taste, and when he blinks afterwards, he actually feels awake.

He checks the time, and sees that he has a few more hours before Toshinori will take over, and a few hours after that a training exercise will be held that's described as voluntary but is in fact mandatory, which he's sure that his students will understand with voluntary internships starting after New Years Day. That means that their lunch will likely come from Hizashi, depending on how Eri is doing, but breakfast will take place here, in this room most likely.

Since Hitoshi is still waiting for the coffee to cool, still inhaling as much of the smell that he can, Aizawa pulls out another jelly pouch from the drawer full of them, and tosses it towards the cot, though Hitoshi catches it before it lands. He watches the teen blink and stare, before he seems to understand it's for his own consumption, moving to open it, made awkward by his hold on the coffee mug.

Aizawa thinks that at some point, he should wake up enough for them to exchange words, but when he has half of his first cup left and Hitoshi finally takes a sip of his own after finishing the jelly pouch breakfast, Hitoshi seems to make his preference known. 'Good morning. How is Eri?'

Aizawa watches Eri's unique name sign being signed out, again awkward with Hitoshi's coffee mug held between his knees. He knows the reason why Hitoshi would prefer to ask that question in sign, given that his quirk control when asking questions is worse than it was at the start of this wardship.

But he still worries that this silence is more than that.

'Good morning. Not awake yet. Hizashi will text me.'

For two different reasons, both wards were exhausted enough to go to sleep early yesterday. While

Hitoshi had run several laps under Aizawa's instruction, passing beyond his physical limits, Eri spent nearly an hour screaming with Hizashi in Gym Gamma, the toll of using her quirk finally left her with exhaustion. 'Investigation.'

Hitoshi takes another sip of coffee after he signs that, something that shouldn't be his second thought upon fully waking up. Aizawa passed along the information that Hitoshi gave him about Miasma's whereabouts to Naomasa, he glanced over the list that Shiori gave Naomasa briefly before he needed to excuse himself for a smoke break, and hadn't looked at it since. He knows that Nezu is also coordinating on this now, but the final piece is dependent on Hitoshi.

Hitoshi not only knows that Miasma operates out of a warehouse on the coastline, but he should be able to recognize it if he sees it. They'll likely need to visit the location, or several, to confirm it in person, but Aizawa is hopeful that this method might bring about a few leads.

While Aizawa knows intimately that warehouse districts are unnervingly similar to some degree, and hot spots for criminal activities, he hopes there's something unique enough about Miasma's base that can be spotted on Google Maps. "Here."

Aizawa stands up after pulling up a warehouse district on Oshima Island in Street View, which will allow Hitoshi to 'walk around the area' without actually having to travel to the location. Hitoshi sits down and toggles between a few steps, demonstrating that he knows how to use it. This location should buy Aizawa a few minutes.

"I'll be back," Aizawa says, picking up the pack of cigarettes from the desk, and with a glance sees that this pack he's allowed himself won't last the length of the investigation. Even thinking of the list that Shiori exchanged her life for is enough to stir up these feelings.

He has enough reasons to want to be done with this investigation.

*

Ochako rolls over in her bed, the pleasant strain from sparring with Ojiro yesterday reminding her that she's a step closer to her goal of being a hero. Even if Ojiro seemed down at first, sparring seemed to breathe some life back into him, and he definitely needed it.

Ochako still jolts when she hears that violent rapping at her door, and a painful groan from her empty stomach makes it worse. "Oi, your lazy ass gets room service until you start waking up on time."

Ochako flops backwards onto her bed when she's sure that Bakugo has left, definitely leaving her a serving of overly spicy breakfast in front of her door. It's probably not some mild form of bullying, because as much as Izuku has been snipping back and forth with Bakugo recently, Izuku must have had time to tell Bakugo something she asked him not to tell anyone about.

She didn't get enough money to buy food this week.

During the school week, she gets a free lunch included with her tuition to UA, and there's breakfast offered too, not that many students take advantage of it. Her parents send her enough money to cover dinners and weekend meals, but the decision to start winter break early was sudden. She hadn't told them when they sent her the usual 6,000 yen.

She knows not to tell them, either. The winter holidays mean that her parents can't collect their usual overtime, and she knows the third week of the month before her dad collects his salary on the last day is the hardest. She can pull through just fine, she has a small savings for this kind of situation.

She knows that she shouldn't have to worry about that, when everyone already arranged to contribute to a dorm-wide grocery fund before winter break began. The number that Iida told her was everyone's responsibility was a lot smaller than the one that YaoMomo put in the 1-A chat. And she's pretty sure that YaoMomo is still contributing the most to that fund.

Maybe, she shouldn't care where that food comes from, or whether she deserves it. She needs to eat well so that she can train harder, and skipping the breakfast placed right outside her door will mean that the toll she took from her body yesterday won't be paid back, and it will strain her health for that.

But she wishes that she could see it that simply, that Bakugo brought her breakfast and she should just eat it. That it's the same breakfast everyone else gets, it's not like the elementary school leftovers that she ignorantly bragged about taking home to her peers that weren't enrolled in a program that allowed them to do that. That Bakugo isn't wearing that weird, pitying expression that so many of her friends used to when they said that they'd pay for her meal if they stopped at a fast food place, or said that she didn't have to buy anything for their birthday to come to their party.

She wishes that she wasn't the only person who sees everything with a price tag, even gifts. Even well intentioned ones.

She wishes she could just afford it on her own.

There's another knock on Ochako's door, and she knows it's not Bakugo trying to enforce that she eat breakfast. He's been doing that a lot lately, if he's not training then he's cooking and probably disregarding who's food he's using to make it nearly inedible, he's trying to feed someone. She knows it's not Izuku, because he doesn't knock just once, and not that softly.

Ochako pulls off her sleeping mitts to answer the door, and sees Tsu wrapped up in a blanket, her eyes barely opened. A plate of food in both hands. "Good... morning. Kero."

Ochako finds a half-smile that she hopes doesn't come off as pitying. Despite everyone's efforts, the cold weather still gets to Tsu, and it's probably the reason that Bakugo is apparently delivering room service to her too. "Ugh, I overslept too! I wonder if Bakugo's going to get fed up with this 'room service' thing, and start making it even spicier."

Ochako steps away in invitation, which Tsu takes as she drags herself towards Ochako's bed. She almost collapses on the still-warm sheets where Ochako had been sleeping before tucking herself into her blankets too, before holding out one of the plates. Just from the color, it looks like the spiciest one.

Ochako knows Tsu well enough to know she's not always blunt when she speaks. She's blunt without having to talk at all, especially these days.

And she's very bluntly asking Ochako to eat the spiciest breakfast, because her amphibian tastebuds are more sensitive to it, and for some reason, that makes it easier when Ochako sits down and takes it from her.

If Tsu was trading which serving was hers, then Ochako is doing her a favor to make sure that Bakugo doesn't hear that she didn't like it. Tsu can weather Bakugo's sparks as well as any of them, but it's honestly exhausting to put up with sometimes. That kind of favor is worth the 20 yen for rice, 19 yen for instant miso, 200 yen for the filet of fish, 30 yen for two eggs, 200 yen for a portion of fried tofu with sauce.

She doesn't know how much the sauteed vegetables cost, because her parents always find it cheaper to get the frozen mixed bag, but she knows that whoever went grocery shopping probably got fresh produce. She doesn't know how much the spices or sauce cost either, but she knows that buying spices can be expensive, before adding in how Bakugo probably buys specialty brands online.

"Ocha," Tsu grumbles, and Ochako stuffs the bite she had been hesitating over into her mouth. Maybe she shouldn't care about how much Bakugo spends to make every bite agonizing to eat. "I don't know what to do about Eri's birthday party, kero. Shinsou has made things very awkward."

Ochako frowns and puffs out her cheeks a bit when she sees Tsu take the glass of water that had been on her bedside table to take a drink, especially since she really needs it. This red fish is coated in chili flakes, enough to be crunchy. "He probably won't say anything, since it's Eri. But I don't think you have to go just because Satsuki will be there."

Samidare apparently had some issues with being invited to playdates with Eri, which he told to Tsu rather than telling their parents, but the last time that Ochako heard about it, it seemed to be ironed out. Samidare might still be a kid at 10 years old, but it's understandable that he would feel uncomfortable among a small gathering of 6 year olds. 10 is an awkward age, between childhood and longing to be a teenager already. "Shoji is going, though. And Kota might be there too, kero. If Kota starts any trouble with Tsuki, I feel like I should keep him in line."

Tsu hands Ochako the glass of water, and Ochako flusters for just a moment before taking it. It might be an 'indirect kiss' to share a drink like that, but they're just friends. Just girls, who are friends. Tsu probably doesn't care about that kind of thing.

And Tsu cares about a lot of things, that she probably doesn't have to.

"I think Aizawa-sensei and Mic-sensei can handle it, but Ragdoll or Mandalay should be there too to watch Kota," Ochako says, and she hasn't asked, but she wouldn't be surprised if Izuku was going to be invited to Eri's birthday party too, but on his own merit instead of accompanying a younger sibling. She knows that there might be a few of her peers that might be invited, even if Eri should have more friends her own age to fill a birthday party, instead of being friends with teenagers like them.

The 1-A girl's chat already arranged to go to the mall tomorrow to buy something for Eri's birthday, a milestone bigger than Ochako's budget can really accommodate. Even if she knows that Eri might not care how much money is spent, that she might not remember this day when she gets older, this is Eri's first birthday after being rescued. As a member of the operation that freed her, Ochako feels like her gift should stand out, it should be meaningful. It should be everything that Eri deserves that day.

She hasn't even seen her options at the mall, but her savings is already arguing for something out of a discount bin.

Tsu slowly wilts on her bed, curling up more and more into her mountain of blankets until Ochako realizes that she could use a few more hours of sleep and warmth before All Might's training exercise today. Ochako grabs both of their plates and the glass, making a note to get another so they don't have to share when Tsu wakes up. Because Ochako knows for a near certainty that Tsu will probably curl close to her if Ochako sits on the other side of her bed, while her best friend naps.

And, that's not weird, to cuddle with a good friend like Tsu. Tsu needs to be warm during these cold months, and cuddling with a friend is a good way to get it.

Ochako opens the door to the common room, and sees that there's more people than she expected to see, and a few that she didn't really want to see this early in the morning. Eri is here, and Ochako always wants to see Eri, but for some reason Monoma is standing beside her holding a bag. And Ochako only has a few seconds to wonder what's in that bag, and why a few of her classmates are lined up in front of them, before Eri reaches into the bag, so far that she nearly falls into it adorably, then pulls out a yellow fuzzball with a folded up piece of paper tied to it. "Ugo! This is your plushie friend!"

Bakugo turns around with a weak sneer from whatever he's cooking on the stove, as Eri runs over to him to present the fuzzball held over her head. Bakugo stares at it, almost threatening to hurt Eri's precious feelings, and Ochako is already walking over to put up her dirty dishes and make sure he doesn't, but Bakugo finally takes the plushie, flipping open the card to read it.

Eri turns around and catches sight of Ochako, and Ochako nearly melts at how happy she looks, how wide she's smiling. "Ocha! I got you a plushie friend too!"

Ochako can see that everyone seemed to get a plushie friend from Eri. Todoroki has a white rabbit with a tiny bow around its neck, placed on his head though he doesn't react to it being there. Kouda has a small pink butterfly in his hands, and Shoji has something, but he's holding it too close to his chest with both hands for Ochako to tell what it is.

And Ochako tries to just melt at how cute Eri looks when she holds up a pink jellyfish for her, with that folded up note tied to a tentacle. Eri beams up at her, seeming so proud. "I didn't have a flower plushie, but the pink jellyfish head looks kinda like your hero costume!"

Ochako nearly drops the dirty dishes in her hand, but Ashido slid on her knees to grab them before Ochako herself dropped to wrap Eri into a hug. Her hero costume. "I love it, Eri! That's so thoughtful!"

She doesn't want to think about it. How much plushies usually cost, how Eri was just giving them away freely. How Eri wouldn't be impressed by any gift that's under that price range. She just tries to smile and pet Eri's hair, her chest exploding with warmth when Eri reaches up to hug her back.

She could die happy. In a cute, adorable, fantastic little girl's arms. If that wouldn't also be horrifying.

Speaking of horrifying. "Of course, I hope that 1-A can raise their gifting standards a tad for Eri's birthday, seeing as she had to clear out the useless debris cluttering her room by regifting."

"Mono," Eri deadpans and turns around, and Ochako gets to see the vengeful sight of Monoma withering at that, the smug look falling off his face as though that hilariously appropriate nickname hit as hard as Kendo's hand. "You promised you wouldn't be a dark face! You're a hero, and heroes are supposed to be friends!"

Monoma bites his lips and closes his eyes, the hands holding Eri's bag becoming fists as though withholding himself from arguing with a five year old was physically painful for him.

But Eri turns around, Ochako's arms still wrapped loosely around her, and her wide eyes and cute cuteness are enough that Ochako wants to smother her in another hug just from getting her attention. "And I didn't pick the plushies that my friends gave me, because I want to keep them, but I got a whole lot from the big test week from people I don't know. And I like them! But they don't get enough 'tention from me, so I think you guys should be friends with them."

Ochako loses the fight in self-restraint, pulling Eri into another tight hug, barely holding herself back from crying. Eri is so pure.

Ashido is not, as she slides back over to Ochako's side with a hand shielding one side of her mouth "Hey, Eri-berry-horn-sis-erita, you know how heroes should be 'friends with everyone?'"

Ochako rolls her eyes and pulls back, even if she wants to shield Eri from this really desperate ploy written all over Ashido's face. Eri nods.

"You know, Shinny's being kinda weird, and he's not talking to us, and he doesn't seem to think that he should be friends with us, and I think that's a problem that you could sort out pretty quick," Ashido says, clapping her hands together and dusting them off like the problem was already taken care of. They've talked about this.

Shinsou said he doesn't want to have anything to do with them, in far worse words than that. If he doesn't come around, Ochako won't really miss it. Maybe, she'll miss out on the chance to fight him one on one again, to really go at it sometime, but most of 1-A is perfectly fine with Shinsou deciding to have nothing to do with them, even if it makes things awkward sometimes.

Ashido thinks it's perfectly fine to use Eri's influence on Shinsou to make him make amends, and even if that works, it would only spell trouble. Shinsou would probably still act the way he wants to whenever Eri's not around, he'll probably say worse things to Ashido for instigating it.

And Eri sounds like she's going to turn 30 instead of 6 when she sighs, and lays a hand on Ashido's shoulder. "I'm sorry Ashi, but Twenny's a teenager now. He decides to do a lot of dumb stuff, 'cause of hormones. And sometimes it's okay for him to do dumb stuff, but sometimes it's not. But you gotta tell him how it makes you feel, and he can get smarter eventually."

Eri is so smart. So perfect. Ashido might be stricken, now that her desperate plan has been laid to waste by a 5-almost-6 year old, but she just doesn't get it.

Eri would never hurt them with cruel words, or threats, or force them to wake up in the middle of the night just to hear them. And that's why Eri is so perfect.

Ochako doesn't know what being a 'teenager now' means with Shinsou, or what 'dumb stuff' he did to Eri, but if Eri says the word, Ochako will pile drive him through the floor until he comes to his senses. But that's not to be today. "Twenny!"

Eri sprints out of Ochako's arms and runs past Monoma to the staircase, where Aizawa-sensei and for some reason Shinsou are standing. She had no idea that Shinsou was here at the dorm, how or why he snuck in, or why he has that giant purple pillow in his arms. Why he would wear that black facemask now, based on what Izuku told her about the attack.

But Ochako scoots a little bit to her left to get a little closer to Ashido, to try to keep her from inviting any kind of 'attention' from Shinsou that he made it clear, they don't want. Especially Ashido.

And if the loud clattering from the kitchen is any indication, Bakugo doesn't want to get into it either.

"Twenny, I understand that you're going through a lot, being a teenager, and being dumb," Eri says, and Ochako puffs out her cheeks trying not to let the laugh escape from that last word, said so innocently and accurately. "But it hurt my feelings when you went with Mirio without inviting me. It made me really mad. And sad."

Ochako turns around to level a glare at the guy who might have more knife skills, but definitely had no right to make Eri feel that way, only to see that he already knew that. Shinsou drops to crouch in front of Eri, and though Shinsou doesn't usually look like much other than bored or tired, he looks depressed. "I know. And I'm sorry. I'll make it up to you."

Eri nods, holding out her pinky for a swear that Shinsou shakes on, before she looks up at Aizawa-sensei. "But I want Zawa to carry me, as a punishment."

Punishment. And it looks highly effective from how the life practically drains out of Shinsou's eyes. "Okay."

That's a pretty clear sign that even if Ashido wanted to talk to Shinsou right now, now was not the time. Even Bakugo, who acted like he wanted to deck Shinsou in the face at the soonest opportunity, wouldn't tempt it right now. Everyone knows how Shinsou is about Eri, and sometimes it's the most charming thing about him.

Monoma doesn't seem to know that, digging through the bag to reach into the bottom before he carelessly flings it at Todoroki. "I'm elated to hear you've decided to preen through your so-called friend group, much like Eri has with her plushie collection. Here's the gifts that I've unfortunately been unable to give you, that I'm sure no one in Class A would think-

Ochako doesn't know any JSL signs other than the basics that were appropriate to learn for Shinsou, like 'yes,' 'no,' 'good morning,' and 'die,' but she spots one of them from Shinsou after he stands up to glare at Monoma. She's guessing that Monoma knows that sign too.

She's guessing that Kouda is not going to translate half of what Shinsou is signing, from the way that Monoma is gaping, or how Aizawa-sensei raises an eyebrow, before cutting Shinsou off with a hand on his shoulder. "That's enough."

Aizawa-sensei seems to glance through Monoma after that, scanning the room to look at the rest of them with Eri held in one of his arms.

"Do your best with Toshinori," Aizawa-sensei seems to decide to say, instead of anything else. Anything about whatever is going on with Shinsou, or escorting Monoma out, which means that as Aizawa-sensei leaves with that hand still guiding Shinsou to the door, Monoma is still standing there, gaping.

Ochako feels like she's not the only one waiting for him to leave, slowly realizing that Kendo is usually the one to 'guide' Monoma onto that route, when he slowly raises one finger before he turns, that maniac face in full swing. "What the hell did you imbeciles do to him?!"

This is the first time Ochako has heard Monoma swear, and it sounds like his first time swearing by how awkwardly his voice drops when he says it. Ochako might have to shove past Monoma to get to the stairwell and escape back to her room, but she definitely feels like doing that as Monoma continues on.

"You ingrates, you self-absorbed swine, you-you you!" Monoma points at Todoroki, apparently blaming him for whatever has gotten him this riled up. "And you!"

Ochako tilts her head, wondering what she's to blame for.

"You ruined it," Monoma snarls, his hands curling in the air in frustration before he curls them into fists, turning his head away. "I was this close, I was so close, I've already won over the adorable sweet Eri, the golden avenue into Shinsou's trusted inner circle, but whatever you've done to him has waylaid all of my plans, all of the effort I've put into the advent calendar, selecting the best gifts suited to their tastes, the bidding wars, you have no idea how vicious eBay can be in collector's circles--"

Ochako stands up, because she's heard this tune before. It's grating, on a nerve that Monoma doesn't want to step on.

You could afford to be a little grateful, you know. I'm the one who bought that album you had your eye on, the least you could do is- "And after all of that, you cretins did something to make Shinsou--"

For some reason, even though Monoma seemed to blame her for something, he didn't seem to notice that she was approaching until she reared back and delivered a judo chop that she was hopeful was an off button. And it seems like it, momentarily, before Monoma turns to look at her with her hand still resting on the part of his hair.

"You cannot imitate our beloved Kendo like this! This is an insult to the superior class, Class B--"

"We didn't do anything to Shinsou, but it sounds like you haven't done anything to deserve being friends with him either," Ochako says, because as sad as Monoma's entire existence seems to be, as much as she knows her words probably won't be heard from a guy like him, she has to say them. "Especially if you think that you can just buy friends with gifts. You can't just spend money on people until a friendship pops out."

"Nice guy," Todoroki adds in English, a pretty accurate description of Monoma if he thinks that he's supposed to be rewarded for his 'kind efforts' with Shinsou's friendship. Even if Ochako wouldn't really be surprised if 'friendship' was just the word he was using with them, when Monoma seemed so passionate about it.

"Of course, 'boundaries' and 'Shinsou is his own person with his own decisions' and-and all of that," Monoma says, his fingers moving to quote the most reasonable words he's ever said mockingly. And it's still weird that he hasn't tried to shake off her hand, but it still seems to mellow him out a little, so she doesn't pull it back just yet. It might be the secret to making Monoma chill out. "You know, I've been learning JSL - fluently, mind you, not that you would think to become fluent in the only language by which Shinsou can converse, you animals. My intentions are pure, and it's only a matter of time before Shinsou recognizes that--"

"And if he told you to get lost?" Ochako asks, because she's pretty sure that's exactly what Shinsou said, and if Monoma is fluent in JSL, he'd know that.

"Of course I would respect that," Monoma scoffs, crossing his arms like the accusation hidden there is ridiculous, or he hasn't realized it was there. But then he squints his eyes at her, pouting when he does realize it. "...But I'm not a quitter."

"You need to quit," Ashido adds, which is pretty hypocritical. "Because Shinny has decided to be wrong, about not having friends, and you're just dragging this out for all of us! Leave. Shinny. Alone."

Each pause is punctuated by a clap, but Monoma rolls his eyes and scoffs at it. Before that twisted grin starts to rise over his face again, pointing at Ashido. "Ha! Now I understand perfectly! You're going to try to use me against Shinsou to win him back, but I see the perfect opportunity to make him come to his senses! Truly, it seems that the uncouth and irresponsible degenerates of Class A are indeed useful as a comparison to the brilliance of Class B!"

Monoma just keeps pointing at Ashido, maybe waiting for her to taunt him back. Maybe waiting for something else.

Ochako gives him another pity chop, and it seems like that was what he was waiting for, as he scoffs again before turning to leave the dorm.

She rolls her eyes, as sad as Monoma's entire existence seemed to be, they all have the opportunity to get a break from it. Even if winter break started off unpredictably, and there doesn't seem to be a real break from campus and school for the holidays, there will be two weeks where students who can get an internship offer can leave the dorm during that time. And since school isn't in session, it won't be like the fall semester voluntary internships, they can actually leave and pretty much take care of themselves during that time. It's an amazing opportunity to be a little more like fully fledged heroes during that time, to figure out housing, and food, and have even more time to learn from their mentoring heroes.

And Ochako is sure that Monoma will have a great time doing that.

Unlike most of her peers, Ochako can't just ask her parents to help her fund that opportunity. That narrows her choices down to staying in Mustafu, or her hometown, which only has a few local heroes who aren't established enough to offer internship slots. Ryuko is based far enough away that even if she stays in the dorm, she won't be able to participate in full patrols without missing curfew, and even though she really wants to intern with Gunhead again, she would have to ask him if he would be willing to provide for room and board like he was required to for the first internship, and she can't bring herself to do that.

She should be able to take care of herself. She should be able to stand on her own two feet, like so many of her peers are able to.

Ochako fills two glasses of water to take to her room, and almost bumps into Ojiro as he's putting his own dishes in the sink. It looks like he also got Bakugo's 'room service special,' but he actually got tea to go with it.

She can't help but feel jealous, or feel like this is further proof that the breakfast is actually bullying.

"Bakugo," Ojiro says, drawing Bakugo's attention as he snarls. "Thanks for the breakfast, but... what did you do to my tea? It tasted a little off."

"St. John's wort," Bakugo answers, oddly quiet for his usual personality, but it's almost as though Ochako jinxed it by thinking of that as he rears up and scowls. "You're been so fucking depressed and it's bugging the shit out of me, so drink the fuck up and get your serotonin straightened out, dumbass!"

Even though it's possible, on some almost impossible level, that Bakugo was making breakfast for everyone because he 'cared' or something. The connection to the tea makes Ochako realize something worse. "Bakugo, are you..."

She doesn't want to say it. She doesn't want to say it when he looks at her and he looks so quiet, like he already knows. It's terrifying to think that she's right.

"And Yaomomo-"

"Fuck no," Bakugo screeches, the rag that he was using to clean the counter exploding before he throws down its charred remains. Ochako can't help the relief that washes over her, because even if YaoMomo might be able to mellow him out like that, she doesn't think anyone could really repay her sacrifice. “Are you stupid?! Are you that fucking stupid?! Fuck no, I’m not fucking with that tea sipping fucker just because I make tea, why the fuck are you that fucking stupid-”

“Oh, Uraraka,” Ojiro calls, as Bakugo keeps rambling on, but they’ve long since learned how to tune him out when he gets like this. It’s probably good training for disaster relief operations, honestly. “I was wondering if you could introduce me to Gunhead, since you’ve already had an internship with him. I’m not sure if you were planning on going back to him for winter break, but-”

“Of course!” Ochako agrees, and she can already imagine how much Gunhead will enjoy taking him under his wing. “I can call him and see if he’s taking internship offers, and I’m sure it’ll be a lot of fun! I haven’t really decided if that’s what I want to do, I’m still trying to work things out.”

“Thank you,” Ojiro says, just the smallest smile on his face as he rubs the back of his head, and it seems like he could really use the break from campus. From the dorm, and from everything for a little while. She’s happy to help. “If it works out, I have family in Nara, if you were looking for a cheaper place to stay. It’s pretty quiet, but it might be safer than-”

“Oi,” Bakugo interrupts, looming too close with a spatula coming between them. Ochako wouldn’t think anything of it, but Ashido is right behind Bakugo’s shoulder, her hands covering her mouth with something close to horror in her eyes. Ashido shakes her head, and that’s not- that’s not. “Get that disgusting shit out of here, don’t talk about that kind of bullshit in public. You better take these internships seriously instead of planning some love nest-”

“That’s not what I was trying to-” Ojiro covers his face, his tail thrashing back and forth behind him, and thank god. Ochako doesn’t have any time to think about those kinds of things, and she doesn’t want to have to let Ojiro down gently, if he did have that kind of thing in mind. “My cousins have a bed and breakfast, it’s not like that!”

“Oh thank god,” Ashido practically wheezes, collapsing onto Bakugo’s shoulder. “Rebounds are just- no. No, don’t do it guys, it never works. I know you might want to really get under Midoriya’s skin by getting with a guy like Ojiro-”

“What?!” Ochako can’t help but feel the blush like a burning fire on her face, because it’s not like that at all. “I’m not-with Izu-no!”

“Oh?” Ashido asks, her head popping up with a grin that looks menacing. “Not with Izu? Not even a little? With Izu?”

Ochako could go through all twelve rounds with Ashido over this, and still not win, so she decides to cut her losses and ignore that. Ojiro might have decided against what he already offered, but, “If your cousins are looking for part time help for the holidays, I can-”

“Oh, no!” Ojiro says, waving his hands even if the blush is still lingering on his cheeks. “They usually have vacancies, even during the holidays, so you wouldn’t have to pay or help out. It’s a family favor, or I guess.... A hero in training discount.”

Or Ojiro already knows she wouldn’t be able to afford it on her own. She would be exhausted, and probably wouldn’t have time to sleep during her internship. But she would be earning her own keep, honestly. “I... still haven’t decided. But I’ll talk to Gunhead and ask.”

Ojiro’s grateful smile still lingers on her mind as she makes her way back to her room. It’s a favor, kind of, to introduce him to her mentor, but is it enough for a two week stay in Nara? She doesn’t even know how much each night should cost, if there’s a reason those rooms are vacant even on the holidays.

If there really is a vacancy, or if Ojiro was lying to her. Just because he's that nice.

Tsu groans but wakes up enough to hold out her hand, begging for the glass of water before she can go back to sleep. Ochako hands her that glass with a smile, one that Tsu works up to return when Ochako also hands her the little teddy bear wearing a yellow raincoat and hat that Eri picked for her as her 'plushie friend,' a handmade invitation to Eri's birthday party tied to its leg and personalized with a drawing of 'Froppy.'

The 'Uravity' on Ochako's card has a big fist raised in the air, and blush marks. Maybe, Ochako appreciates that both of those things are part of the hero that Eri sees, even if she didn't see Ochako pin Overhaul down during the raid, Eri can so easily reconcile that 'Uravity' is cute, and powerful. That she can train to mitigate how almost non-offensive her quirk is, to fight the assumption that she's best suited as a support sidekick, not even as a hero, to stand on her own, despite what the Management Course interviewer said during her entrance exam.

Maybe, Ochako is distracted enough, or Tsu is more awake than she thought, because she sits up and stares at her. "What's bothering you, kero?"

Ochako shrugs, and smiles, but she knows that's not really enough of an answer to sate Tsu's curiosity. She just can't find the words to admit just enough, but not all of it. "Oh, just internships, I guess. Ojiro asked about Gunhead, and I think that would be good for him. I'm happy for him. I just don't know what to do yet."

"You should take this time to be selfish, kero," Tsu says, and Ochako feels selfish already, when she hasn't asked what Tsu's plans are. If she does have plans to leave the dorm, when the cold weather bothers her this much, and would probably make it hard for her to go to her first internship offer with Seal. "It's our duty as students to become the best heroes we can be, to take every opportunity, kero. Even if that means relying on others for a while, that's a debt we can pay back, kero."

A debt that can be paid back.

If only things could be that simple.

*

"Eri, please," Hitoshi begs quietly, running a hand through his hair to keep himself from seeing what he knows he'll see. What he can already hear from her sigh, how it burns under his skin from the frustration.

"Twenny, Yama wanted you to pick lunch, and you're big so you're supposed to know what you want," Eri says, and Hitoshi grinds his teeth and glares at the open refrigerator again, and he knows that's not supposed to be a punishment. Yamada shouldn't know, but he probably does, but he wouldn't smile that way if he was trying to hurt him.

It's probably not supposed to feel this frustrating, when Hitoshi can see several options from the ingredients, but he can't just pick. And he can't just turn around and walk out the door, no matter how much he wants to. He can't drive away that weird image of satisfaction that punching a wall on his way out might bring, some way to fight this stupid fucking task in a way that makes sense but it doesn't.

Hitoshi just closes the refrigerator door, pressing his forehead against it with his full weight, hard enough to hurt. This is just misery, and the worst part is there's no reason for it. No cause. He's just being stupid.

He's fed up with it, feeling this way. Like there's a monster under his skin, boiling his blood, making him do things that make sense in the moment without thinking things through. He knew that Eri would have her usual Quirk Grumps when he left with Mirio, but that offered escape just sounded too tempting to avoid it. As though he should avoid it, he should abandon Eri after asking her to try Rewinding him. After he shrank her horn down to half size, then abandoned her. Just because he was afraid to deal with it. Of Yamada finding out. As though Yamada wouldn't if he left Eri alone.

Hitoshi almost flinches when he feels Eri's small hand on his shoulder, and he turns his head to look at her from the corner of his eye. She still looks mad about it. "You can make the fish soup that's kinda chunky and spicy, like Ugo likes to make."

Fish curry, perfect. Hitoshi kind of knows how to make that. "Thanks. I'm sorry."

Eri pats his shoulder, and it should feel worse to be pitied by her, but it doesn't. Hitoshi leans back on his heels to curl a hand around her head, his fingers wrapping loosely around her horn. Eri doesn't pout, doesn't tell him to stop like she does when she's irritated with him. She's just that full of pity.

And he pities himself, too stupid to deal with picking lunch like Yamada doesn't do that every single day for them.

"And hot chocolate, and apple bunnies," Eri adds, and the tilt of her head betrays how she's well aware those aren't the usual sides. But he tries not to focus on how those are two things too simple for an idiot like him to fuck up.

"Got it," Hitoshi says, and stands up to get to work. He pulls out the apples, milk, fish, carrots, onions, and potatoes, placing everything but the milk into the sink to rinse it off after pouring some milk into a pot to boil it for hot chocolate. The hot chocolate mix and marshmallows are in the same cupboard as the coconut milk and curry mix, Yamada started the rice before he followed Aizawa to the bedroom to 'talk to him.'

About what, Hitoshi knows and hopes that he doesn't know. He hopes he's wrong.

He knows he's probably right.

For some reason, Eri finds him washing and cutting the vegetables more interesting than watching TV, so he picks her up and sets her on the counter, right against the refrigerator and away from the stove, while he focuses on trying to make the cuts even. It always takes him some time to practice, to remember how to be confident about the placement for the knife, something that never affects Yamada.

Something embarrassing, for how often he's prided himself on his skill with a knife in other ways.

When he pours them in, the onions screech and steam blows up from the pan, and Hitoshi pulls the pan up and away from the stove because he turned the heat up too high to start off. Eri shuffles a little further away, pulling a face, and he tells himself she just doesn't like the smell.

But he knows that she doesn't trust that he can cook this, and he doesn't really trust himself either.

"Twenny," Eri asks, kicking her feet loosely a few times. "Are you still hurt on your face?"

Hitoshi pushes the chopped vegetables around a few times before setting the lid on to steam them, feeling the black facemask around his face like an accusation everyone can see through. Especially Eri. "It's not as bad, just scratches. It'll heal soon."

As soon as Hitoshi got back to the dorm, he pulled out the first aid kit to actually take care of the scabs, even if it's probably too late for proper disinfection, but one of those ointments promised fast healing.

He had to use the ointment for a few new scabs on his face, something that makes him even less willing to take the mask off. But he didn't have shaving cream in his and Eri's bathroom, even though the razor was left behind, and the Rewind brought those hairs back. That stubble, like Aizawa has.

He thought it would be easier, since he doesn't have any scars under his chin except for the two wrapping under the edge of his jaw, but he still cut himself a few times. Luckily, the mask hides that. "Did my quirk hurt you?"

Hitoshi looks at Eri, her heels hitting the cabinets under the counter in unison, in a test kick. She's the least to blame for that. "No, it just took me back to when I was hurt the first time. It's not your fault."

Eri still won't look at him, staring at her knees. She still thinks it is her fault, because it was her quirk. But her quirk was entirely under her control, she pulled away by herself before it got far enough. Or too far.

Now he knows that he can't take control of her if he's the target, but he still hopes that he could take control of her if he's not. "If Mirio was hurt back then, that's how you can know you went far enough. You can take him past that point, so he has his quirk, and he's not hurt."

Eri at least looks up, even if she's still frowning. She nods, and it's far too quiet. Too quiet for him to tolerate.

"Do you want to make teddy bears with the rice?" Hitoshi asks, his voice strained but he goes cold for a different reason after he asks. Because he asks.

"Yeah!" Eri agrees, and he feels it. He has to close his eyes, he has to hold the handle of the pan and the edge of the stove, he has to feel it but not take it. Not until the moment passes, not until he can will it away. "Twenny?"

He nods, opening his eyes slowly. There's still an itch at the back of his skull, but he won't tempt it. At least he has a chance to feel it with Eri there. "Let's pick the bowls."

He can't control his quirk. He hasn't been able to control his quirk since the mask was taken away from him the first time, since the raid, and now he knows why that is, but ever since it was taken off the second time, at UA, it's been worse.

His questions warp with Nemoto's quirk, becoming what he didn't want to ask and what other people can't help from answering, and he can't stop from taking control of them after that. But now it's worse, now he can take control of others without asking questions like he did to Mirio yesterday. Which means he needs to be careful about who he talks to, what he can say.

Nothing has changed about that, but it still feels worse than it did before. Just knowing that it's because he has become a monster, with that piece of Nemoto stuck under his skin in a way he can't shake.

If there was a way to become quirkless, to just get rid of that complication, he would do it. If Mirio thinks his quirk is still so heroic, he could have it.

He has no idea what speaking freely would feel like, and he imagines that he never will now.

Hitoshi is so distracted helping Eri mold the rice into spheres to place inside the bowl to resemble teddy bears, that he almost burns the vegetables, but he doesn't. Yamada would say they're 'seared,' and he knows that the somewhat burnt edges can be uniquely flavorful. He sets them aside to cook the fish, and he knows that Yamada is capable of cooking the meat and vegetables in the same pan without pausing or 'searing' them, but this is the best he can do.

His stomach turns at the thought that this will push Yamada over the edge. He wasted this food, picked something Yamada won't like to start with, fucked it up, Brainwashed Mirio, manipulated Eri into using her quirk, made Aizawa upset-

He might have told Quirk Thief that he's an annoying filth-licker obsessed with giving Hitoshi reasons to commit murder and suicide at the same time, and if he shows his ugly face again, Hitoshi will pickle his fingers and eat them and leave the rest for the maggots. But Yamada was only opposed to telling Quirk Thief to 'die in a fire.'

As far as he knows. Vaguer threats should be fine.

Hitoshi hears the door close down the hall and nearly swears under his breath at the relief he finds when the fish has cooked enough for the final steps of the curry. He throws the vegetables that he had set aside in the bowl in, so Yamada doesn't have to know he fucked up that part, and starts pouring in the coconut milk by the time Yamada grabs Eri's attention. "Yama! We're making the spicy fish soup!"

Curry is a correction that catches on his tongue for two reasons. He shouldn't correct what Eri says when she's already upset at him, and he shouldn't just talk to Yamada right now. Even if Aizawa is right about his hearing aids, it's for similar reasons as Eri. "Smells like it's coming along great! I was planning to help, but it looks like two of the most fantastic chefs in the world have already got it covered!"

Hitoshi can't look up from the pan, breaking the curry mix bricks apart and stirring. He knows that if he looks at Yamada right now, the fragile tension that's keeping him from falling apart before the curry is even done will be shattered. If he sees a clue that Yamada is lying to him with a smile, or if it's worse than that, if Yamada looks as angry as Aizawa did, if this is the end for him.

If the last meal he eats at UA will be fish curry, hot chocolate, and apple bunnies. Without Aizawa even there.

As much as Yamada said they 'got it covered,' he still steps beside Hitoshi and only pauses for a moment that feels longer than it is, before he starts adding the hot chocolate mix to the milk and putting it on another burner. Hitoshi could have thought to do that himself, if he wasn't stupid.

And while the hot chocolate warms up, Yamada fixes the apple bunnies. Eri already set aside some small plates for that, and Hitoshi glances over when he's sure that Yamada is distracted, to see how Yamada arranges each bunny on the edge of the plate, fanning out in a circle. Perfectly symmetrical.

While he's just dumping curry on top of the rice teddy bears that Eri basically made herself. "Shou's missing out on it while it's fresh, and I bet he'll be jealous when he sees how great it is left over!"

The worst part about cooking is that Yamada always showers anything that Hitoshi cooks with compliments before he tastes it, before reality sets in. Hitoshi stares at the teddy bear staring back at him when he sits down at the table, hot chocolate in one of his favorite cat mugs. The cat face on the mug is also accusing him.

He has to pull the facemask down to eat, and he has to eat it himself to know how bad it turned out. It doesn't look as watery as that time he made the mistake of misreading the instructions on the curry package, but it might be too gritty like it was with the tofu curry. He was sure that he stirred it enough this time.

Hitoshi pulls down the facemask under his chin, to at least hide the cuts from the razor, and takes a bite with a carrot he knows he 'seared' but basically burned.

And it's actually not bad.

He knows it's not as good as it would be if Yamada cooked it, but it's not gritty, not watery. The sear kind of does add a flavor that he likes, even if he's not sure if he just learned to like it due to the frequency. He made the curry by himself, and it's not horrible enough to cry over.

He makes the mistake of glancing up at Yamada, regretting it and looking away as soon as he does, as soon as he realizes he can't tolerate looking at Yamada when he feels so raw and weird. But he feels a hand too big to be Eri's fall over his arm. "Hitoshi, this is great. You made this all by yourself too! The fish is cooked perfectly, the veggies are perfectly soft and not mush, and it's just... I'm really proud of you, kiddo!"

Does he always overcook the vegetables until they're mush? Is that why Yamada is so excited, because he didn't fuck that up for once? He knows there are at least a few times that he didn't cook them well enough, they were still too crunchy, and at least he didn't do that again with this curry.

Hitoshi glances up again, and he doesn't see what he was sure would break him. Just Yamada's sincere smile, sincere pride. He didn't mess it up.

The words almost pass over his tongue before he remembers himself in that moment, he feels so warm with just Yamada's sincerity and the praise he knows that this time he earned, but he does remember and sets his chopsticks aside. 'Thank you.'

Yamada nods, and pulls his hand away to keep eating. Hitoshi doesn't know if he's imagining the ghost of warmth that departs when he does. How much he misses it. If there's another reason Yamada pulled away. "Twenny, it's really good!"

Hitoshi has to duck his head, because now it's uncomfortable. He just managed to not fuck up a meal for the first time, and everyone is surprised. Eri was the one who picked it, after all.

He tries the hot chocolate, which works well to water down the mild spiciness even if it feels weird on his tongue when he goes back to the curry. It's not unpleasant, but just a little weird. Maybe this is what Bakugo was talking about when he said Kirishima combines foods that shouldn't go together.

Hitoshi nearly drops his next bite when he hears the door close again, and he knows that there's no other reason to explain why that sound rings out. Aizawa was supposed to eat it later, not with them, not now. Not when it's fresh, as good as it'll ever be, not when Yamada might brag about it to him.

Aizawa's hair is messed up on one side, like he tried to fall asleep, and despite standing up, his eyes are almost closed enough to be convincing that he is still asleep. That only fares better for Hitoshi. "Well, I guess you heard us singing the praises of this delicious curry Hitoshi made! Sit down, I'll grab you a bite."

'Before you fall over,' is something that Yamada mutters under his breath, and it still seems like Aizawa falls in a barely controlled way as he sits down, his eyes still barely open as he rubs them. He looks at Eri with a tired smile, which falls away when he glances at Hitoshi before Hitoshi looks away.

This is worse than he thought.

He hears Yamada set the bowl down, the red and black bowl that Eri picked for him. The teddy bear that Eri made, and Hitoshi is glad that he resisted the urge to mess up the eyebrows when he was cutting the seaweed for them. He hears the quiet clack of Aizawa's chopsticks as he picks them up, and realizes he hasn't eaten a bite or breathed since he realized Aizawa was going to eat it. Soon.

He hears a hum. A hum can go either way.

"It's very good," Aizawa says, his voice gravely and almost exhausted. The way it isn't exhausted is worse than those words, that sincerity and honesty and he actually thinks that the curry isn't just 'decent' or 'edible,' he thinks it's good. Very good.

Hitoshi doesn't know if he's going to cry if he looks up, so he pointedly doesn't. He keeps his eyes on his food, too concerned with making sure he has the perfect balance of curry and rice in every bite. He hears Eri and Yamada talking about the plans they made together for her birthday. The hero students were all invited, which was another reason for giving away those plushies with cards attached. But they're invited to a 'pre-game' party at their own dorm, which ensures that they all need to give Eri presents. Then, Eri's friends are coming to this dorm, to play hide and seek, dress up, musical chairs 'like at Zawa's birthday.'

Neither of them talk about 'pin-the-hair-on-All-Might,' so Ashi probably doesn't know how to celebrate a real '6 year old's birthday,' despite her insistence on throwing him a fake one.

After Hitoshi finishes the apple bunnies, he still feels like he could eat a smaller portion of curry, but he doesn't get up to get it when that would mean looking up. When he can just sip on his hot chocolate instead, intentionally slowly.

And he knows it's coming when Yamada takes his plates from under him, dropping them and the others in the sink. He knows it's bad when Yamada claps, he sits back down without washing the dishes. This is bad. "So, since we're all together and awake and stuff, we can have a little brainstorming sesh about 'The Rules of The House.'"

Rules. Yamada sets down a notebook and has a pen in hand, to lay out all the rules that Hitoshi needs to keep track of now. Rules that are more defined than 'If you make Aizawa angry, he's going to talk to you about it.' Rules that are more defined than 'If you make Bug, Memory, Chisaki, or Hari mad, they're going to do whatever they want to you to even the score.'

Rules, written down and explained explicitly, is an interesting idea. "So, without naming names or placing any blame, because the ink wasn't dry on this little social contract, we've had a few instances where some unwritten rules were broken - and since they weren't written, that's perfectly understandable. So we're going to write them up and agree to them from now on!"

It was him. Hitoshi doesn't know what Yamada means by 'recently,' he's pretty sure that he's broken every single rule that wasn't written down, and several that were. In law books. He checked himself when he borrowed Ashi's book.

"So, me and Shou have some ideas for some rules, but that doesn't mean that we're the only ones who get to decide them. If you guys have some rules too, some stuff that you want me and Shou to not do, then you can bring them up to and they can be made into rules for us! Everyone has to agree to the house rules, within reason,” Yamada explains, and Hitoshi watches his hands while he twirls around the pen. Eri could make rules too? “So unfortunately, apple bunnies with every meal wouldn’t quite be a rule, but it’s definitely a goal that we’ll try to meet. Just gotta throw in some wiggle room in case we run out of apples.”

Eri huffs, half complaint and half thoughtful about the concept, but Yamada clearly knows her well.

“And speaking of wiggle room, the first proposed rule is supposed to have a lot of wiggle room,” Yamada says, raising a finger with both hands still framing the notepad. “‘No hurting people intentionally, including people who don’t live with us, with mean words or hitting or any other kind of violence, or quirks.’ The ‘intentionally’ part is where there’s a lot of wiggle room, because sometimes we can say something that we don’t mean to be hurtful, and we can sometimes accidentally hurt someone when we’re learning to control our quirks. Like with the little ‘Rewind’ we had. Eri, I know you didn’t do that to hurt Hitoshi, so you’re double-not-in-trouble, because we hadn’t agreed on that rule and you didn’t know it was going to happen. So, it wasn’t ‘intentional.’”

Of course Eri didn’t mean to ‘hurt’ him, as little as having those fresh wounds on his face ‘hurt.’ Hitoshi glances over at Eri, seeing her staring at the table with a sullen look, nodding instead of agreeing verbally.

These rules are making Eri feel bad, so they’re stupid. Yamada shouldn’t make more of them. “So, can we all agree on that one from now on?”

Eri nods again, looking up at Yamada, and Hitoshi glances up when he realizes that the pause is waiting for his agreement too. He knows that three out of four, or 75% is a majority, they don’t need his agreement if this is like passing a law. But he nods, because it doesn’t matter. He knows that’s only going to be a rule that will cause issues for him.

“The rule passes, which means that it’s a rule for me and Shou too! If you think that anyone is breaking that rule, if me and Shou are saying something hurtful or doing something hurtful, we’re going to call a meeting to talk about it,” Yamada says, as though that’s something that makes sense. Something that would happen. Calling for punishment on Yamada or Aizawa for breaking that rule, or any rule?

But then again, if this is a rule similar to a law, that means it supposedly affects everyone. A majority vote would convict them, supposedly with an impartial jury. The way that Ms. Joke talked to Aizawa when Hitoshi said that he was responsible for breaking his leg seemed to mean that Ms. Joke would have taken it out on Aizawa. And the way Aizawa responded seemed to mean that he was afraid of that coming to pass.

“And the next one is a smaller one, but definitely an important one to put in place before someone’s big special day,” Yamada says, introducing a rule that will affect Eri’s birthday party. “No saying bad words around younger kids, like Mizuno or Satsuki or Kota, or even kids we haven’t met yet! Even if those kids know them, or say them, we can’t say bad words like ‘Fuck’ around younger kids like that, because sometimes their parents aren’t too happy about it, and it’s not usually polite. And Shou already kind of introduced a rule about ‘not saying bad words when we’re not at UA,’ but we both decided that it’s okay to do that as long as there aren’t innocent ears around.”

“What if Ugo breaks that rule?” Eri asks, a question that Hitoshi has himself, even if he can’t voice it.

“Bakugo would be in a lot of trouble if he did that,” Aizawa answers, lifting his mug of hot chocolate. “The students are subject to different rules, but as their teacher, it’s my responsibility to enforce them. Bakugo already knows that rule very well.”

And Bakugo still breaks it, where Eri is concerned. But Hitoshi and Eri still nod their agreement to that rule, passing it again. He knows that he definitely won’t have trouble avoiding breaking it.

“Which brings us to property damage,” Yamada says, something that Hitoshi is almost sure he hasn’t done, unless ingredients and food count as property. “Accidents happen, but intentionally breaking something to hurt someone’s feelings is a no-go. If I got mad at Shou and decided to break his favorite mug, that means I would get in trouble, but if I accidentally dropped it, that’s perfectly fine.”

That rule passes too, even if Hitoshi still wonders if it applies to food, and how intention is discerned. He hasn’t gotten in trouble for messing up meals before, but then again, it was an ‘unwritten rule.’

“Which brings us to the last rule, ‘no leaving the dorm without letting someone know.’ This is the only rule that kind of means different things for me and Shou and you guys, because Shou and I might leave to do something related to our jobs or something important like that, and have to leave in a hurry, but we’ll always tell each other at least, so you guys know where we are by asking who’s here,” Yamada says, because of course there are rules that affect them differently.

It’s still weird that Yamada seems to think that they should be held to any rules at all, or enforce them on each other.

“And it gets a little stricter due to safety for you guys, because you have to let us know for one, but me and Shou reserve the right to tell you that you can’t leave sometimes, or tell you that you have to wait, or have to be back at a certain time, yadda yadda. But, even if it’s a ‘no,’ we’re always going to have a goal for ‘soft no’s where we can work out a good time and good circumstances where we’re all in agreement about going out,” Yamada says, and that’s a rule that Hitoshi knows he’s broken. And Aizawa has gotten angry about.

The ‘soft no’ is probably just another way of saying that Hitoshi can’t go out unescorted, which is not new. He couldn’t go out on his own at the 8 Precepts either, he was always followed but usually at a distance.

Aizawa isn’t nice enough to give him that distance though, especially with his weird preoccupation with carrying Hitoshi on his back. “So, all in favor for that rule?”

Hitoshi nods, since it’s not like he really has a choice in the matter. Yamada makes it sound reasonable enough, less like the cage that it is. That Aizawa wants.

“Then, let’s open up the floor for some more rules, because Shou and I aren’t the only ones who can propose rules, but we all have to be in agreement on them,” Yamada says, and Hitoshi looks to Eri to see if she has anything to add. Anything he can throw his support behind immediately.

Eri looks at him, tilting her head before she glances back at the table. Yamada shouldn’t have taken the apple bunnies off the table before this started. “It’s a rule that we gotta eat together every day from now on, like this!”

For the most part, they do. Even if Aizawa rarely wakes up in time to eat breakfast on school days, he’s there at least for coffee, and they eat lunch together, and dinner most of the time. Lunch is usually the only time they’re all together on the weekends, when Aizawa’s dorm shifts and Yamada's patrols and radio show make things seem busier. "I think that's a great rule! At least once every day, and if Shou or I or anyone else has to cancel on that, we just have to make it up with extra meals together. Sound like a plan?"

Hitoshi nods, and he doesn't overlook that the main selling point of that rule is the addition that Yamada made. 'Make it up,' a debt that has to be paid. A debt that Aizawa would rack up easily.

And be forced to pay back, if these rules really do affect all of them. "Alright, anything else? If there's something that bothers you, or makes you feel uncomfortable, we can get it written down in stone to avoid it."

Hitoshi sees Eri hesitate, before she shakes her head, and Yamada looks at him before Hitoshi takes another sip of hot chocolate he doesn't really need, just to avoid the overbearing weight of Yamada's gaze. But it lingers long enough that Hitoshi has to cast his vote, shake his head. He doesn't have any rules that he wants to enforce with them.

"Alright, we can leave the floor open for additions at any point, but the next part of the rule making is the consequences for breaking rules," Yamada says, and Hitoshi is far too interested in what he has to say next, every nerve on edge for whatever surprise it holds, however unbelievable it sounds. Apparently, making him run last night was supposed to be a punishment for several broken rules, from leaving without telling Yamada to saying hurtful things to Mirio, possibly fighting him too. Hitoshi didn't have the 'intention' to harm Mirio, for the most part. "So, when someone breaks a rule, we're going to talk about it to see if it was an accident or not, and why it happened. Then we're going to talk about how to avoid it in the future, and show how breaking that rule was bad."

Last night, Aizawa laid out his own deduction for why Hitoshi left the dorm without permission and why he used Eri's quirk to heal himself. His understanding of the situation was mostly accurate, and then he wanted to 'show' how breaking the unwritten rule about healing himself with Eri's quirk, which still isn't a written rule, was wrong by making him run. To show that he doesn't know the limits of his own body.

And despite how confusing all of that was, they didn't 'talk about how to avoid it in the future.' "So, a lot of times we might do things that are bad when we're upset, so the first order of business is to calm down so we can talk about these things, and work together to make them right. For example, if I'm just super upset at Shou and I throw his coffee mug on the ground to break it, because I'm mad and I want to make him feel bad too, then Shou is going to help me calm down, and then we can talk about why I got so mad in the first place."

Mirio was the one to explain for the most part why Hitoshi used Eri's quirk, but not entirely why he left the dorm. Hitoshi was calm for the most part when they were discussing that.

"Then, we can talk about how to avoid getting so mad. Maybe I should have told Shou that I woke up kind of grumpy that morning, and I've been getting irritated because he always moves my conditioner when he takes a shower, and I have to look around to find it. And then he said something to me that made me feel really mad, so I felt like I had to break his coffee mug to make him understand how I felt. But! I should have told him about being grumpy, so I could get a few more minutes in bed, and Shou could bring me coffee in bed to turn that grump around. I could tell Shou to stop moving my stuff, that way I'm not angry about hunting for my conditioner. And when Shou says something to make me mad, I don't have that built-up mad already, and I can take some deep breaths and tell him that he's breaking the rule about hurting my feelings, and we can talk about how he shouldn't say things like that," Yamada says, talking about having to talk a lot over such a small issue like breaking a coffee mug. Hitoshi knows for a fact that they have 38 coffee mugs already. “And after we’ve talked things out, I’ll probably have to apologize and fix Shou’s coffee mug, so I can understand that breaking it means that the coffee mug won’t look the same way ever again, and it won’t work as well. And after I fix it, Shou and I can talk and know that we both still care about each other the same way, and since I made up for breaking the mug out of anger.”

Then, the running was supposed to show he wasn’t supposed to use Eri’s quirk, and being kept at the 1-A dorm was the consequence of leaving without letting Yamada know. Both of those seem stupid, and Hitoshi hasn’t had to apologize or talk about how he ‘still cares about’ Yamada.

“And there are other ways to help everyone understand that breaking the rules is not okay too! Like, if I wasn’t calming down with Shou, then I might have to sit in time out for a while, one minute for every year I’ve been alive. Or maybe if I can’t talk about why I broke the mug, I’d have to write an essay about why I broke it, and if the mug can’t be fixed at all, I’d have to write lines like ‘I won’t break other people’s things because that will hurt them’ over and over. But, if Shou tried to make me do something that really made me upset, because maybe I had to do it in the past with the intention to hurt me, then I can tell Shou that it would make me too upset, and we could work out another way of learning the consequence of my actions,” Yamada says, which explains why Aizawa apologized when he thought that Bug made Hitoshi run laps as a punishment.

Which is hilarious. The idea of Bug or Chisaki or anyone doing something as simple as that to punish him is absolutely hilarious. These ‘punishments’ are convoluted, when they could be simple, but they took the simplicity away when they agreed that Yamada and Aizawa can’t intentionally harm them.

Yamada asks for agreement again, and again the motion passes. That seems to be the end of it, just in time for Hitoshi to run out of the excuse of having hot chocolate to drink when he swallows the glob of marshmallows on top.

With Aizawa awake and here, Hitoshi expected that it would be time to go back to looking for The Miasma’s warehouse again, something he didn’t make much progress on before Aizawa decided it was time to go back to this dorm, but Yamada has other plans. Hitoshi knows that they’re important plans, he knows that he should feel like helping.

But when he’s sitting at the kotatsu with Eri and Yamada, when he’s supposed to be ‘helping’ Eri pick decorations and themes for her birthday party as Yamada shows off pictures on his phone and rambles about ideas that Eri is excited about, he feels the silence more heavily around his jaw. He feels like it has a purpose, that he shouldn’t be wasting his time with this when this is something between Eri and Yamada. His opinion isn’t important here, Eri’s is, and Yamada is the one who will provide whatever streamers or favors Eri picks.

He’s especially unimportant with this, because Eri will have to get used to his absence for her next birthday. Even if it doesn’t make sense, even if this is the only birthday he’ll see for her, he doesn’t want to be involved in this.

But Hitoshi feigns interest well enough, at least looking at the phone and looking at whoever is talking while they discuss it, how pink and purple streamers would work with hero themed plates or Sailor Moon plates. Things that Eri’s friends would like as party favors, something that Aizawa didn’t provide for his birthday, but apparently these small tokens are supposed to thank Eri’s friends for attending. Eri wants to make sure there are enough for the hero students too.

When Aizawa leaves the bedroom again, after he went back to it when the matter of the House Rules was discussed, he walks towards the door with a jacket on and starts putting on his shoes. Seeking to leave the dorm.

Without saying anything to Yamada.

This is the first test as to whether those ‘rules’ really apply to all of them.

Hitoshi can’t say anything, but he looks at Eri, and when she doesn’t look away from Yamada’s phone with all the options for party favors displayed in a list, he leans closer to the kotatsu, barely holding back the urge to strike the top of it to get her attention. Eri does feel the weight of his gaze, looking up at him just to tilt his head, like she doesn’t know what he wants, and he jerks his head towards Aizawa putting on his last shoe. And luckily, Eri gets it. “Zawa! Did you tell Yama that you’re leaving?”

Hitoshi has to bite his lip to contain his smirk when Aizawa seems to flinch with that, when Yamada’s expression darkens to give a reason for it. “Sure looks like he didn’t, little bean. We’ve got our first infraction of the rules here!”

Aizawa sighs and turns around, his back to the door, and his arms folded as though he doesn’t want to submit himself to this. Hitoshi is too curious about how much of it he will be forced to endure, to care that Aizawa might be late for something, probably the 1-A training exercise.

“Shou, it looks like you were trying to leave without telling anyone where you were going, and that’s against the rules we agreed to. Why did you want to do that?” Yamada asks, folding his hands on top of the kotatsu, acting oddly calm as he asked his husband that question.

“I forgot,” Aizawa answers, before he sighs. “I forgot because I haven’t slept well, and I’m tired. I haven’t left yet, so I haven’t broken the rule, but I’ll try to remember going forward.”

“And I think that taking a nap when you get back, and making sure to sleep better will help us avoid this in the future!” Yamada adds, raising a finger in the air as though those consequences are really punitive. Aizawa likes taking naps. “And I forgive you for making a mistake, because we all make mistakes, but we can all work together to avoid them in the future.”

“Right, I apologize for my behavior and accept the consequences of my actions,” Aizawa says, robotically enough to show that he’s a poor actor, and hardly sorry. But Aizawa looks at Hitoshi, probably catching his hard stare. Probably catching an accusation that Hitoshi wanted to throw, but he’s not entirely sure he wanted Aizawa to catch. “I’m going to watch my students train with Toshinori, and I should be back in a few hours. It depends on how much I need to interact with my students. Because this is a training exercise for my students’ benefit. So I’ll be working closely with my students.”

Hitoshi makes it a point not to blink, even when Aizawa is saying everything except denial to him. Aizawa thinks that his students are ‘dealing with enough’ without him there, but Hitoshi still wants to be there. He needs to be there, with Aizawa, to remind him where his priorities lie. They need to focus on finding The Miasma, now that Aizawa has found the means for it.

Aizawa blinks first. “Would you like to come with me?”

Hitoshi stands up as his answer, going to his room to get his jacket and scarf with his ears straining for the evidence that Aizawa will leave while he’s getting ready. He wants to go, needs to go, and Aizawa was forced to invite him which means that Aizawa is aware that he’s leaving, and Yamada being in the same room means that he’s aware too.

And when Hitoshi re-enters the living room and sees that Eri has moved right next to Yamada’s side, still scrolling through his phone, he also sees that Yamada might not be entirely happy with that. He seems less happy than Eri.

But of course, his words don't reflect the strain in his smile at all. "Well, you two have fun! Watching the herolets train and all, very exciting!"

Hitoshi nods, following close behind Aizawa after he shoves on his shoes. Despite the warmth of the dorm, the slight chill of the hallway is refreshing.

"Saying things intentionally hurtful still applies to my students," Aizawa says, like a threat. Like a warning.

Like something that Hitoshi wants to do, half as much as getting away from the dorm for a while. "I know."

Hitoshi answers with a threat, with a warning, and with an honest voice he decides to trust with Aizawa for now. If he slips, it'll be an 'accident' after all, quirks are hard to control, like Yamada said.

And if his voice is a threat, it's one he wants to aim solely at Aizawa, or any of the students that want to bother him with their idiocy.

Predictably Bad, With Natural Consequences

Chapter Summary

The training exercise with 1-A turns disastrous as Midoriya tries to reach out to Shinsou, leading to questions on Midoriya's part about what friendship should really entail. Shinsou focuses on the investigation, dragging Aizawa into confronting his issues with it, leading to a late night discussion that benefits all parties involved.

Chapter Notes

Trigger warnings: Aizawa reflecting on Shiori's death in both of his POVs, Self-victim-blaming in Midoriya's POV, vague mention of cannibalism, 50 mention in Aizawa's second POV, Bug mentions in Aizawa's second and third POV

Previously on Wards of UA: Last chapter, Yamada, Aizawa, Eri, and Shinsou agreed to a few rules that would affect all of them, such as not intentionally hurting other people physically or emotionally and not leaving without permission. Shinsou pressured Aizawa to invite him to go to 1-A's training exercise, and Aizawa's plan to find The Miasma is to have Shinsou look at warehouse districts on Google Maps. Aizawa and Shinsou stayed with Aizawa's grandfather in the mountains the previous weekend after UA's security was compromised by the UA traitor, Hagakure, who is currently expelled from UA and awaiting transfer to Ms. Joke as a ward, and Aizawa believes that Shiori is dead from the fallout of that reveal. When Shinsou threatened 1-A to not interact with him, he specifically said that he would cut out Asui's tongue the next time she tried to rescue him. Midoriya was the only one who heard 127, AKA the Chameleon quirk villain, threatening all of Shinsou's friends and specifically Eri for trying to escape him. Aizawa refused to take Shinsou to Recovery Girl to heal his sprained ankle injury, which led to Shinsou asking Eri to use Rewind to heal him. When Aizawa tried to discipline Shinsou for sneaking out of the dorm without letting Yamada know and instigating Eri using her quirk on him without supervision, he told Shinsou to run laps. Shinsou was previously unable to use his quirk without asking a question, for anyone other than Eri, but now he is able to do so. Todoroki possibly believes that Shinsou is part cat, and should be treated as such. Aizawa might be 1-A's homeroom teacher for the entirety of their time at UA if Principal Nezu reinstates 'the duckling model' for homeroom teachers. 50 was identified as Furokage Mizuki, and Shinsou stole her autopsy report after Aizawa made that connection. Aizawa has told himself that after he smokes the last cigarette in his and Yamada's 'Stress Stash,' he needs to get over Shiori's death to focus on the investigation, including the contributions she made to it. Shinsou got drunk at Aizawa's grandfather's shack. Aizawa showed Shinsou the security camera picture of Bug from when she attempted to kill Shinsou in the hospital when he was trying to avoid a forced interview.

Aizawa leans against the railing on the balcony overlooking his students' exercises. After the warm up and subsequent free time for quirk-focused training, Toshinori introduced possibly one of the stupidest rescue exercises he's ever heard of. Hidden throughout the concrete obstacle course that Cementoss engineered on half of Gym Gamma's floor are 20 numbered balloons that will pop if handled too roughly. Supposedly, this is supposed to help his students train to rescue civilians in disaster zones quickly and efficiently. And gently. While removing the greatest obstacle to that, which is the usual panic that civilians have and the vocal and physical abuse they're likely to hurl when suddenly grabbed like his students are being trained to do.

Basically, this is just an egg hunt that Toshinori wants to call training.

This is also an exercise that benefits his favorites like Midoriya and Bakugo pointedly. While they have to be careful about using their quirks for mobility, lest they damage an unseen balloon, other students like Jirou or Shoji won't have any benefit to using their quirks to detect where the balloons are placed. Aoyama pops three balloons when he attempts to use his laser quirk to jump from one concrete peak to the next, and completes the exercise with poor results completely quirkless otherwise. The same is so for the majority of his class.

Toshinori keeps glancing at him, practically begging for his opinion on this exercise, even if he'll disguise it by asking how he thinks his students are doing.

Toshinori doesn't want to hear Aizawa's opinion, and Aizawa doesn't feel that he can speak frankly without 'intentionally hurting Toshinori's feelings,' a heinous crime now that Hizashi feels they need to model these stricter behaviors.

And if Hitoshi would focus on self-study, instead of scrolling through the Google Maps application he practically insisted to be installed on his phone, then Aizawa wouldn't have to worry about being a good model. Or if Hitoshi had decided to stay at the dorm, and just wanted to be invited to prove a point, but ultimately reject the offer. But Hitoshi wanted to come here, to apparently sit on the ground with his back against the wall and his eyes focused on his phone, half of his face buried in his knitted scarf.

Aizawa doesn't know if this is a gesture pointedly made to prove that if Hitoshi can't be allowed to go out unescorted, that the teenager will make every effort to ensure that Aizawa isn't allowed that freedom either. But it certainly doesn't feel like Hitoshi just wanted to spend time with him, for any reason.

"You seem a bit quiet today, young Aizawa," Toshinori notes quietly, after loudly congratulating Tokoyami's perfect performance in the exercise, which was already tilted in his favor with a quirk allowing him mobility and range to grab all of the balloons. "I suppose that mountain trip wasn't very relaxing for you?"

Aizawa makes the effort to look at Toshinori out of the corner of his eye. He makes a pointed effort to remind himself that he can't say something 'intentionally hurtful.' "Nothing over the past few days, months, or year has been relaxing, Toshinori. Especially what happened while I was 'relaxing in the mountains.'"

Toshinori looks scolded enough, like the student missing from this exercise was something he overlooked. Honestly, that would be a fair accusation, given how Hagakure would have fared in this exercise that wouldn't have given her any opportunity for her quirk to make a difference. "Of course, I didn't forget that."

He might have, and Aizawa envies that. Given that Aizawa has forgotten how to drop into a dead sleep when the opportunity presents itself, and forgotten how to stay awake when he wants to, perhaps that will be next. Forgetting that Hagakure is currently in a mental hospital awaiting transfer to Ms. Joke's custody for a wardship placement that will solidly derail her career as a hero, and forgetting that Shiori, an informant with personal circumstances made more painful to know about after her pointless death, is dead.

Aizawa looks away from Toshinori to see Hitoshi standing beside him, offering his phone again for another warehouse location to look through. Aizawa picks another off the top of his head, and can't bring himself to remember if it's one on the coastline, or one he hasn't given Hitoshi before.

But Hitoshi lingers at his side, glancing at Yaoyorozu scaling a concrete precipice to get to a tunnel, before he looks back at Aizawa with a comment or question that hopefully won't be phrased that simply, given how Hitoshi's questions seem to turn.

Instead, it's silent, a tug on his own knitted scarf with a pointed look at Aizawa's. A request that Aizawa sighs and complies with, gathering the capture scarf in his hands and placing it in the purple haired teenager's. "Don't wear it around your neck."

That warning is one that accidentally proves a point, when Hitoshi has to curl his hands around the capture scarf tightly as it tries to flare out and escape him. Even with the face mask and most of the scarf hiding Hitoshi's face, he can see the corner of his jaw move in an answer, but it isn't given. Just a half-hearted glare conveys all the malice that Aizawa has apparently deserved.

He could use a 'relaxing weekend,' honestly. Aizawa is aware that at this point, he's only good for offering half-measures twice as pointless for the attempt, but a weariness stops him short of a decent effort. He doesn't know how long it will last, but no escape seems logical to believe in. At some point, he'll have to get over the changes he came back to, but for now it seems unlikely.

He should just resign, if he can't be the teacher that his students need. Certainly, he's not one that would have been able to stop Hagakure before she committed to the things that she did, however culpable she was to them. "Perhaps, you should take tonight off, young Aizawa. I certainly don't have plans, and you seem like you could use the rest. More than usual."

Aizawa just hums, physically watching Yaoyorozu emerging from a tunnel with a bag slung over her shoulder to carry those 'precious, sensitive' civilians. He doesn't know if that's an efficient rescue model that he should start using when he's allowed to return to his hero work, after the investigation into Miasma is done.

He wants to be done with it, for selfish reasons. To kill off the parts stained with Shiori's hands on it, and he can't quite blame himself for that desire when he can hope that Hitoshi will still be with them after that organization's demise. Miasma and the League of Villains seem so intrinsically linked, but he doesn't believe in the assumption that bringing down Miasma will be the anchor that pulls the League down and into the open.

It will handicap them, at the very least, but as long as the League of Villains is still operating, Hitoshi will still need protective custody in a wardship. And seeing Hitoshi move further in his progress knowing that the greatest threat against his life has been nullified is something that Aizawa wants for himself. Somewhat selfishly.

When Yaoyorozu completes the exercise, taking one of the longest lengths of time to be certain that she had rescued every civilian balloon, Toshinori calls out for the last leg of this exercise. Sparring exercises, one on one, with the goal for offensive type quirks to be paired up against non-offensive quirks. Aoyama against Asui, Ashido against Shoji. While Asui and Shoji do have offensive movesets, they will be forced to try to mitigate the outright destruction in Aoyama and Ashido's quirks, while Aoyama and Ashido will have to exercise restraint.

Aizawa notices that Toshinori skips over Midoriya, predictably, and isn't surprised at all that he's paired with Tokoyami. Tokoyami is the very definition of a balanced hero, but Aizawa honestly doesn't doubt that part of the reason that Toshinori picked him to go against his favorite is to try to get a breakthrough with Black Whip. Aizawa chose to supervise this exercise knowing full well that Midoriya would want to take that opportunity, given that the Problem Child is expressly forbidden from using that quirk without his supervision.

But it seems like a waste of Tokoyami's time, when while he's a balanced hero, he still hasn't had much opportunity to train in an offensive manner. "Sensei."

Aizawa hardly keeps himself from raising his eyebrows when Tokoyami approaches the railing he and Toshinori have been supervising from, almost wondering if his student is going to call Toshinori out on favoritism for him.

But with an arm curled around his midsection, almost like an afterthought of a poor actor, which Tokoyami admittedly is, that seems to not be the case. "I'm loathe to waste this training opportunity, but I am feeling unwell, and uncertain of my abilities to continue in this state."

Tokoyami probably is loathe to ask to be dismissed, given that he never does, but Aizawa doubts the implication of a simple tummyache is the reason for Tokoyami to ask. But he does have concerns that the issue comes from around that region, given the plethora of negative energy that Dark Shadow might have been soaking up the past few days. "Recovery Girl can see you at the staff dorm, if it's necessary. Otherwise, you're free to go back to your dorm."

Tokoyami nods acknowledgement from Aizawa's dismissal, and he's one student that Aizawa doesn't worry about being left alone at the dorm. The Problem Child, however, seems to have some gears turning in his brain that Aizawa would rather he didn't.

Especially with that glance behind Aizawa, at Hitoshi, who is currently hissing at the capture scarf for doing something that Aizawa can't see when he needs to focus on the sparring matches in front of him. Keeping his focus divided between eight matches, waiting for Toshinori to make a decision before Midoriya puts forth an idea that Aizawa would rather he didn't. "Aizawa-sensei, would it be okay if-"

"No," Aizawa interrupts flatly, because they should all be used to the odd-man-out matches given that the attendance sheet only recently became an even number. Even if Aizawa knows that his students have gone up against his ward, training or otherwise, with his agreement given by not stopping it or without his knowledge. This is absolutely not the time to set a violent ward loose on one of his students.

Toshinori looks at him, and Toshinori is wrong. About whatever his favoritism has led him to think is appropriate for this situation. And the Problem Child probably catches that, and thinks that he might have Aizawa outnumbered, but training exercises are not a democracy. "I was just thinking, that Black Whip might be similar to how the capture scarf works, and since Shinsou is learning how to use the capture scarf-"

"No," Aizawa interrupts again, and can barely convey how much that cannot happen. Hitoshi is nowhere close to being capable enough with the capture scarf to use it against a living person. Negligent double homicide, on both his and Toshinori's heads. "He isn't a student, and this isn't a mandatory training exercise. Either find a match to wait out your turn, or go back to the dorm."

Midoriya clearly won't give up the training opportunity, and he starts to turn away to find a pair to attach himself to. Until Aizawa hears footsteps behind him, and a teenager whose attention he didn't want drawn to this at his side, the capture scarf slung over his shoulder loosely. 'I want to leave. To fight problem child.'

The first opportunity to take advantage of the goal of soft no's. While on its face, Hitoshi's signed request makes no sense at all, trying to frame this request as a request to 'leave' means that he's trying to cage Aizawa into an agreement with additional conditions, but agreement all the same, all but promised with those soft no's. If Hitoshi were asking to leave Gym Gamma, Aizawa would have to tell him to wait until the training exercise is over or until Yamada can walk over to escort him back, which is the purpose of a soft no. Not at all like this.

Aizawa has never seen a more promising lawyer than the one staring blankly at him, half of his face hidden and all the now-common animosity tucked away because Hitoshi wants him to agree to this.

"No." That should be the end of it. Hitoshi has threatened to maim his students in recent memory if they 'invite his attention,' and until his ward sorts out these issues with interpersonal communication, he cannot be given the opportunity to follow through with that, or make a statement out of Midoriya's clear invitation.

Hitoshi still has his mouth covered, and Aizawa can still see his frown through it. He can hear the gears turning in Toshinori's head, without even looking at him. He'd rather have his co-teacher focused on how Ashido is getting a bit more reckless with her aim, as her attempts to cage in Shoji's maneuvers have been going poorly. "Even though young Shinsou isn't a student, perhaps a friendly sparring match without quirks would be-"

"Toshinori," Aizawa says, still looking dead ahead but he can't ignore the weight of Hitoshi's gaze right now, how he moves just incrementally closer like that's not an insultingly basic pressure tactic. He doesn't need Toshinori's input where his ward is concerned, a man who continues to think that quirkless sparring matches are friendly.

They might be, with his ward. Recently demonstrated with the scuffle between Hitoshi and Mirio, when Aizawa came out of the Brainwash trance with Hitoshi hiding close behind Mirio, incredibly close given his usual boundaries.

Aizawa knows that Hitoshi likely wants to do this as a test, and a statement. He probably wants to have the excuse to injure his student, to very predictably test what happens when he breaks a rule right in front of Aizawa's eyes, and to further show the rest of his students that he doesn't want anything to do with them. But there is just a chance, however illogical, that Hitoshi also wants to fight Midoriya because that's apparently a friend-making method for both of them.

Which only means that Aizawa has more cause to worry about how exactly the Problem Child was raised, and how Mrs. Midoriya must not have been involved at all with this pile of reckless teenager who has forged strong bonds with his friends by beating it into them.

"A friendly, quirkless sparring match without the capture scarf and without injuries," Aizawa adds, searing each word into Hitoshi with his stare, waiting for any indication that he's right about the majority of his assumption for Hitoshi's reason to want to fight Midoriya. He almost says 'intentional injuries,' but he knows if the Problem Child comes out of this fight with any injuries, it will be intentional.

There's just a nod in answer, nothing to read into there, and Aizawa illogically feels that's all the more incriminating. But he gets the capture scarf returned to him, as Hitoshi makes quick work of taking off his jacket and scarf, the facemask remaining on. There is clear evidence of excitement in some way, as he stretches to warm up on his way down the stairs to meet with Midoriya on the ground floor.

The Problem Child looks excited too, and that much is enough for Aizawa to know that however this turns out, it will be good practice for him.

He'll either learn that he can't make friends with whoever he sets his mind to, or he'll learn the devastating consequences of a training match that Toshinori hasn't set up in his favor.

*

Hitoshi rolls his eyes once he's out of Aizawa's sight on the staircase, but just the half-hearted and most basic stretches make him feel like something is finally falling into place. This is what he's needed all day. A fight. Training.

Mirio might have reminded him what it's like, what Hitoshi is meant for. Even if he's not Dog, even if he's not a Number under The Miasma's thumb, this is where he breathes easier. This is where he feels at peace, staring down an opponent and planning to take them apart.

Midoriya waves at him, all smiles, and it just makes him look stupid. But Hitoshi can forgive him for that, because he needs something to take this frustration out on.

Everything is frustrating, and it's been a splinter under his skin all day. Particularly Aizawa's clear interest in the investigation, given that he's been trying to ignore that and Hitoshi since they descended the mountain after being trapped together for three days. Predictable, but it's still irritating.

Even if Yamada isn't here, thinking about him makes Hitoshi want to scream. Everything that he liked about him before is too much, every time that Yamada goes quiet is almost a demand to make him speak. And with Eri, she's irritated with him over every small slight, and to a degree he deserves it. Maybe it's better to have her anger delivered in piecemeal, since he ran away from the backlash of her quirk, rather than getting it over with within a few hours, but the birthday planning especially frustrates him.

And then there's the idiots gathered here, Midoriya being one of them. All of them being stupid, being distracting, forcing him to think about them because they're here. Even if he made sure he was invited to come to this training exercise.

He has more important business, and they're in the way of that, for the most part. Sparring with Midoriya means nothing more than a way to clear his mind from these distractions.

Midoriya takes a loose stance, in a sparring square as far from the other matches as they can get, close to the weird mess of concrete but blissfully far away from Aizawa. Hitoshi knows he'll be focused on the more dangerous matches going on. "So, I know you only really want to fight me, and you probably don't want to talk. But since you're not checking your messages on LNE, this is kind of the only way I could talk to you about what you said at the dorm, when I wasn't there."

Hitoshi waits, long enough to realize that Midoriya wasn't going to strike. Midoriya has no intention of sparring with him, his priority is to talk to him, probably frustrated by how often Hitoshi has made it a point not to look at their chat to irritate Midoriya. This is probably a punishment for that, a natural repercussion.

Hitoshi glares, because he hates doing this. It feels unnatural to strike first, he's always hated when Bug forced him to during training, when she spotted that weakness out of the many that he needed to correct, but that hatred moves him.

Midoriya isn't allowed to do whatever he wants to him, he's not allowed to punish him at his leisure like that. And not expect consequences in turn.

Midoriya looks surprised when Hitoshi rushes forward with a wide, predictable fist crossing between them, something Midoriya easily turns to the side to avoid. Hitoshi honestly didn't intend for it to connect, just to start the fight if Midoriya wouldn't start it, and Hitoshi grins when he sees Midoriya's weight shift further back before he tries to kick out Hitoshi's legs.

That should be one way to shut him up, to make him less annoying, but as Hitoshi turns to avoid the blow and ducks lower into his usual routine, dodging and trying to find that opportunity to pin Midoriya down, Midoriya finds enough space to keep rambling.

"I don't know why-" Midoriya's voice gets a bit higher pitched when Hitoshi tries to rattle how apparently relaxed he is to be so conversational with an open palm jab to his face, that Midoriya jumps back from. "Why you never check our chat, or maybe you're feeling left out since the group chat was deleted? Not everyone agreed with that, but after you threatened to hurt Tsuyu-"

Hitoshi throws an elbow against Midoriya's stomach, catching the back of his knee with one hand to try to bring him down, but Midoriya catches himself with his palms slapping on the floor before he flips backwards, nearly kneeing Hitoshi's face in the process before he backs away. When Midoriya's back on his feet, his outstretched palms are placating, instead of defensive. Like he still doesn't understand this is a fight, not a conversation.

Like he thinks the hero students could be redeemed that easily, with explanation. That's hilarious enough to nearly make him laugh, like they were threatened by what he said, and took action accordingly to cut him off.

The moment he stopped acting weak and submissive and sniveling towards whatever they wanted from him, when he told them what he wants plainly and didn't let them argue, they washed their hands of him. Despite whatever they've convinced themselves of, they wanted to be friends with Dog. They wanted to be the clients that rented 27.

Hitoshi has arguments and threats, and a will that won't submit to them any longer. That's why they're done with him. "But I know that's not why you said that. You didn't mean it."

Hitoshi almost wishes he had a knife, so that he could show that he means it. Not to hurt Midoriya, because he wouldn't need to, but to make him understand that Hitoshi isn't confused or stupid. He knows what he said, and he doesn't regret it.

Midoriya grabs Hitoshi's arm at the elbow and shoulder when Hitoshi meant to topple him for kicking too high, then he twists to become too much weight on top of Hitoshi when he's falling, his shoulders hit the floor. Midoriya still holds onto his elbow, but doesn't pull it over Hitoshi's chest to secure any type of pin, his other hand bracing himself on the floor to keep from crushing Hitoshi.

Midoriya is short and tiny but entirely too much muscle, and Hitoshi still feels the weight of that from where his leg is still crossed over one of Hitoshi's. It's unfair, that he has that much weight to put on Hitoshi, and he's still not taking this fight seriously enough to at least try pinning him properly.

"I know that you're just trying to push us away, because you're scared," Midoriya says, too close to him. Practically laying on top of him, his face too close to Hitoshi's, his green eyes too close. "You don't want us to get hurt for being friends with you, like that Chameleon quirk villain said-"

Hitoshi grunts at the effort, but he manages to pull his leg from under Midoriya's and pull his arm up where Midoriya was still holding his elbow, to twist in the brief hesitation from Midoriya's confusion and roll with his free arm braced over Midoriya's throat. He kneels on Midoriya's thighs with his legs crossed to distribute his weight evenly, but even with one of Midoriya's hands coming under Hitoshi's arm to make sure he doesn't hurt him, that grip on his elbow doesn't loosen.

"And the wardship being over," Midoriya keeps talking, even when he doesn't have the proper leverage to fight this arm crossed over his throat, every ounce of pressure Hitoshi tries to add to silence him only meets his scarred palm. They've all been hiding their strength from him, because they thought he was weak. "You don't have to act like that, just because you're scared-"

"I'm scared," Hitoshi says, pulling away to kneel on Midoriya's legs when he sees exactly what he predicted. As soon as he spoke, he saw it. Just the briefest glimpse of fear crossing Midoriya's eyes, repulsion. Midoriya just wants him under his thumb more than the others.

"But, anyone would be scared if they went through-"

Midoriya's pointless grip on his elbow loosens just enough, for Hitoshi grab his wrist, pulling his arm straight into a proper arm bar and twisting the green haired hero with a hand on his shoulder so that he's facing the floor properly. With the painful pressure on his stomach, his legs and hips still pinned down by how Hitoshi is sitting, Midoriya scrambles with his free arm to find the leverage to break the hold.

Hitoshi is focused on other things, like how much it would hurt to twist Midoriya's finger just so, to dig into a pressure point under his arm now that the hand on his shoulder is close enough, and he wouldn't lose much leverage from that. Something that Nemoto helpfully pointed out and demonstrated on him. "Okay, that kind of hurts, Shinsou-"

"Oh, anyone would be hurt if they went through this," Hitoshi comments, almost laughing about how little he's hurting Midoriya right now, and the precious little egg can't take it. To think he stood up against Chisaki and came away the victor, Hitoshi would love to see how he'd do if he were truly under Chisaki's thumb. If it was him in those fighting pits, that version of Quirk Training with the 8 Expendables, being Unmade and Remade, all at Chisaki's leisure.

With that mask.

"And anyone would be scared if they were in your shoes," Hitoshi says, in ways he means and he doesn't. As many thoughts run through his head, his hands don't move to take them, as much as he feels that string beginning to thrum in his mind, he doesn't take it. But he wants Midoriya to fear it, to fear him, to fear the knife he doesn't have or to fear pain that won't come.

Midoriya is lucky. Too lucky, that Hitoshi is weak, and won't go further. But he wants him to be scared, and convinced that he will.

He sees Midoriya grit his teeth, before the world becomes a weightless blur. Midoriya's legs bent upwards, something that Hitoshi realizes after he's being swung over Midoriya's head by the wrist he's still holding, an anchor that does him no favors when his skull hits the concrete first with a sound he recognizes before the pain blooms, before he realizes that it's dark just because his eyes are closed.

"Shinsou!" That name is too loud, Midoriya doesn't have to yell when he's that close. Hitoshi forces his eyes open, ignoring the pain becoming a storm of sharp agony and blurry perception, Midoriya looks blurry and Hitoshi doesn't know where his own limbs are placed yet. "Shinsou, I'm sorry, I didn't mean to- just, don't move right now, that sounded really bad."

Hitoshi huffs, blinks enough to remember where his body is, to feel that storm inside his skull become tinged with something else. Midoriya might have tried his best to break his skull, but better opponents have tried harder. And those hands coming to pin down his shoulders when he tries to sit up are just insulting. “Fuck off.”

“I ca-” Blissful silence.

With a price of course, that Hitoshi remembers when the thrumming of the string seems to stir up all the agony that hadn’t settled yet into something he could ignore, could fight through. He pulls himself up to sit without those troublesome hands, stopping short of pulling himself to stand. When he orders his limbs to respond, he can’t feel his arms and legs enough yet.

But he can order someone else’s limbs around. Those irritating green eyes replaced with white, those arms slack where Midoriya is kneeling beside him. All the heroes are dressed in their costumes, and even if he didn’t see ‘Deku’ during the raid, when he fought Chisaki, probably pummeling Hitoshi without restraint at the time when he was battling the fusion. But right now, he’s certainly looking at Deku.

Useless. Weak, to any order that Hitoshi gives. He’s already broken the rule about quirkless fighting anyway. “Stand up, and run into the wall.”

Hitoshi does have to pull himself to kneel before Midoriya gets to his feet, because he told him to run, and Midoriya took that order to heart when he starts sprinting. Hitoshi braces himself too much on one knee, trying to convince himself that his weight will be supported if he stands, when everything is pain and dizziness, but he hears a nice thwack in short order, before he remembers.

That mess of concrete was only a few meters away from the sparring court, so Midoriya didn’t have to run far to find a wall to run himself into.

Everything is still blurry after he blinks, but it’s fading quickly enough, and he can see Midoriya holding his own wrist. His hand must have made first impact, and made that impact well enough that the pain broke him out of his control.

But it’s not the gritted-teeth whining from Midoriya that brings the pain in his skull to a new crescendo, it’s the sound of heavy footsteps falling in quick step. It’s the hand on his shoulder falling too familiarly, pulling him by the shirt to standing.

It’s Aizawa, glaring at him, clearly and predictably angry to the point that his eyes are still glowing red, his hair floating gently, as though he thinks his quirk is necessary when it would hardly be useful against him. “Midoriya.”

“I’m fine!” Midoriya replies, too high pitched and too strained, still holding that wrist too tight. He looks over his shoulder and Hitoshi’s head swims when he decides to look away, before he really decided. Just wanting to avoid whatever look of agony Midoriya was wearing.

Maybe, he didn’t want to hurt him. He just wanted Midoriya to run into a wall. Maybe he thought it was funny at the time.

It doesn’t seem funny, when Aizawa is dragging him to follow across the gym floor, and he doesn’t hear the sounds of the other matches in the background.

*

‘Step One, do not react out of anger. Take the time to make sure that you’re calm before confronting the child for their actions.’

Aizawa has failed Step One.

‘Step Two, make sure that the child is not injured, and if upset, take measures to calm them down before discussing the issue.’

Looking at the teenager he just dragged outside of Gym Gamma, who reached behind himself blindly until he found a wall to lean against, his body loose and eyes hardly focused in a way that reeks of a concussion, Aizawa has solidly failed Step Two.

And honestly, intends to keep failing Step Two, because he’s not going to wait however long it takes for Hitoshi to recover from a concussion when he predictably used his quirk on Aizawa’s student to injure him. “How badly are you hurt?”

This is Aizawa’s Step One - triage - for the student-related incidents that necessitate it. He finds it easier to be calm when he confronts a reckless charge, if only by a small degree, than with Hitoshi. And when Hitoshi rolls his eyes despite how Aizawa knows how difficult that is to do with any manner of head injury, he knows it’s probably safe to proceed in failing Steps One through Two. Because they were written for children who are not Hitoshi. “M’ fine. I’ve had worse and I’ll get worse.”

Not from him, but that’s a silent reminder that cools Aizawa’s blood just enough. He sighs, he reminds himself that this was his fault, what he allowed to happen despite knowing better, and knowing that Toshinori and Midoriya were idiots. “You’re concussed. We can either have this discussion now, or after you see Recovery Girl-”

Hitoshi snorts a laugh, curling away from the wall to cover his mouth before he rights himself. “Right, because I can see Recovery Girl whenever I want. Whenever I’m injured.”

“That’s another discussion we’ll have, after this one, to sort out any confusion on the matter,” Aizawa says, crossing his arms and knowing full well there’s not any confusion. Hitoshi has just adapted that well to the usual tactics of a teenager trapped within the consequences of their own mistakes, and trying to lash out and distract him in the same measure. But he won’t avoid the most pressing issue.

Hitoshi shakes his head, barely, holding his arms out before he drops them back to his side. For all appearances, giving up, which Aizawa will have to extrapolate to mean that he’s ready to talk about it.

There was a bullet-pointed example under Step Two where Aizawa is supposed to explicitly ask if Hitoshi is ‘ready to talk about it,’ but given that example came within parentheses to explain that the child would likely be set off by that question, he skips it. “Why did you intentionally hurt Midoriya?”

Hitoshi shakes his head again, staring at the ground, before he crosses one ankle over the other and shrugs. All distracting movements meant as casual apathy, made too tensely and too sharp because Hitoshi is anything but apathetic to what he did. “Who knows, who cares. This is stupid, and we can just skip to the part where you make me run or something else that’s stupid.”

The gratuitous use of the word ‘stupid,’ a clear sign of a teenager on the ropes. “I care, because I know you had a reason for acting that way, and I want to work with you to avoid that situation in the future.”

It almost makes Aizawa’s skin crawl, how his mouth drops open but all of those websites’ advice falls out in a condensed and unnatural form. While Aizawa could argue that the ‘natural consequence’ of Hitoshi avoiding the conversation and inviting Aizawa to make him run instead, would be making the teenager run, that’s apparently poor discipline.

Aizawa, to a point, knows that his disciplinary methods with his class are not always standard, but it works to a great degree. But he knows quite well Hitoshi needs other methods.

Aizawa would just like evidence to prove this method's efficacy, before he can really commit to it.

"You injured my student, and used your quirk to do so, and both of those things are out of character for you," Aizawa says, because those actions do fall neatly into the label of a 'warning sign,' two things he wished he could have been aware of before Midoriya started running, while Aizawa was running to see why Midoriya was acting like Hitoshi had a debilitating head injury. "You might have been feeling overwhelmed in the moment, out of anger or fear--"

"I'm not scared!" Hitoshi yells, his wince becoming a glare, but even with a hand coming to cup the side of his head, the pain doesn't stop him from laughing, rolling his eyes and continuing on. "Oh, but everyone thinks I'm scared, I'm just so scared, like 127 isn't someone I know better than any of you. Like I was really stupid enough to believe that I was safe here, or you would keep me safe, or I should just have friends, but they're not fucking friends if all they want is for me to play nice and let them do whatever they want. But the minute I'm not like that, all of them decide they're done with me. And fuck them, I'm done with them!"

Hitoshi sweeps a hand out to punctuate that statement, and Aizawa wishes he could feel something other than confusion and pity. It can truly never be simple with Hitoshi. Ever.

"Midoriya just kept talking, just talking to me about how I'm scared, and I should just-just, whatever he wanted to do to me, but I talk back to him and then he's scared, because he's full of shit, but you don't care about that! Nope, he's your student, but I'm the one in trouble, because that's how it fucking is, I talk, I get in trouble," Hitoshi says, the fight somewhat draining out of him when his arms clap against his sides again, and he glares at Aizawa over the top of his face mask. "So now we're here. I talked, I made him run into a wall, and you get to do whatever you want to even the score."

Aizawa will mark all of that down as 'acting out of anger,' and the management techniques for that probably should have been introduced beforehand. But there are several points to answer to in that long-winded, still not a technical explanation of the events, and Aizawa raises a finger for the first one even if he's not sure if he can remember all of them. "You are allowed to talk. You are not in trouble for talking, or even using your quirk. You are in trouble for intentionally causing harm to another person, which violated the rules that we all agreed to."

Hitoshi looks away, crossing his arms over his chest which reminds Aizawa that he's not presenting the calmest body language to mirror, but he feels like he'll be too unsettled himself if he changes it.

"It seems like you were getting frustrated before you broke that rule, and in the future, I would appreciate you removing yourself from the situation before you act out that way. If you realized that Midoriya talking to you was making you upset, you could either tell him to stop, walk away from the situation, or find me, with no consequences for those actions," Aizawa says, as Hitoshi's head rolls to the side from the force of that eye roll, one that Aizawa honestly feels because the words coming out of his mouth still taste like pamphlets. "You also seem to be frustrated with my students as a whole, for 'deciding they're done with you,' which might be due to you telling them explicitly to 'fuck off,' under the threat of bodily harm or invasively using your quirk against them."

"I don't care," Hitoshi mumbles, in the exact surly tone of a teenager who does care, and doesn't want to. "I didn't mean any of that. I don't care about them, and I want them to leave me alone, so that's fine. That's exactly what I want."

That's probably what Hitoshi wants to want, but he doesn't agree with himself in full. Which is already a frustrating situation. "Outside of the rules that we agreed to, I don't have authority over any way you act around my students. I'm not forcing you to make amends, or be friends with them, anymore than I would force them to be friends with you. If you want them to leave you alone, that's how they'll probably act with you."

Aizawa doesn't have expectations for many of them to cross that line to try to make peace with Hitoshi, especially with how Midoriya's friendly hand was nearly broken against a concrete wall. But he will be keeping an eye on Bakugo, who might be a kettle close to boiling over at this point, and who has social skills nearly on the same level as his ward. Which would not be a good mix.

"Because you hurt Midoriya, you're going to have to apologize to him for your actions, and offer to escort him to Recovery Girl then to his dorm, and accommodate any reasonable request he makes and can't do himself due to his injury." Hitoshi narrows his eyes, fury burning in violet that flashes but Aizawa decides to see if interrupting him will work before his quirk can barb his words with Confession. "And if he declines your help, you'll be writing lines as your punishment."

Hitoshi's head rolls with his eyes again, staring at the ground, defeated apparently, which is really the best outcome that can be expected. Very few students will accept punishment with glee, which Aizawa counts as a measure that his discipline is effective, and being further set off might indicate that Aizawa is being too harsh here.

The natural consequence of hurting another person is making an effort to make amends, which might indeed be a skill that Hitoshi will need when he realizes that he's not as dead-set on not having friends as he likes to believe.

'I can't. Right now,' Hitoshi signs, possibly a sign that this is overwhelming for him, possibly an attempt to withdraw a bit from Aizawa with the very idea of punishment making the situation uncomfortable for him. 'Doesn't know enough sign.'

"Apologizing and making amends, or writing lines. Those are your only options," Aizawa repeats, and sees that it won't be necessary to venture back into Gym Gamma to make that apology when Midoriya is exiting the same side door they used. With Hitoshi's discarded jacket and scarf over his arm, and the ends of his hair scorched on one side as evidence that Bakugo was upset about something after they left.

And with Todoroki as an escort, which complicates the matter. "Shinsou, are you okay?"

Aizawa truly wonders what the Problem Child is made of, to make sure to gather Hitoshi's clothes and ask if he's okay with a hand that looks like it's shaking. Hitoshi looks up at Aizawa first, as though he really needs the explicit confirmation that he does need to address Midoriya, before he sighs. "I'm fine. I'm sorry I made you run into a wall. That was stupid."

Despite how quietly that apology was offered, and how deadpan Hitoshi's tone almost is, there is a thread of real regret that makes his words sincere. And the way that Midoriya takes that as completely sincere, grinning and waving him off with the uninjured hand, is honestly worrying. "It's okay! I know that--"

Midoriya's arms drop, his eyes glazing over, and his apparently designated bodyguard Todoroki flinches from behind him, putting a hand on his shoulder to try to shake Midoriya out of it. Hitoshi curls forward with his eyes shut tight, apparently in pain after taking control of Midoriya without asking him a question.

But more startling is Midoriya breaking out of the control, somewhat alarmed. Not at all to do with Todoroki still wobbling him back and forth on his feet. “Shinsou, are you okay? You’re probably not-”

“Not able to control my own damn quirk right now, you’re right,” Hitoshi hisses, glaring at Aizawa when he opens his eyes. “I told you-”

“You did not,” Aizawa reminds, because none of this was mentioned at all. Hitoshi dropping to sign instead of talking was not explained, at all, and certainly not his quirk changing again like this to not necessitate a question.

This has become something Aizawa hopes isn’t a sign of things to come, Hitoshi’s quirk continuing to mutate into something stronger than he could ever hope to control.

This has become something he doesn’t want his students involved with or to know about, but Midoriya looks at Hitoshi with wide and pleading eyes, before he holds up his injured hand to him. “Can you do that again? Just, one more time? I know you probably don’t like it, and it’s probably- well, it is really weird when your quirk starts changing like that, and-”

Midoriya’s eyes glaze over again, his arms dropping, and Todoroki’s hand hovers over him, frozen because Midoriya did ask for this. Todoroki honestly doesn’t look like he’s blinking as the seconds tick by, but Hitoshi pulls himself up to stand properly, glancing at Midoriya with an odd look, half hidden by the face mask, before he ends the control on his own again. Something he must have mastered quickly.

“Wow,” Midoriya marvels, holding up that injured hand, which isn’t shaking anymore. “That really is relaxing- I mean, on a physical level, I guess all the muscles that aren’t required to stand just relax under your control until you give someone instructions? My hand feels fine now, and I was worried that I twisted or pulled something, but it’s completely fine now. That could be useful for so many situations-”

“That felt gross,” Hitoshi says, his tone really the biggest indicator that he was wrinkling his nose in disgust under the facemask. “Don’t do that again. Ever.”

“What? What did I do?” Midoriya asks, shockingly more concerned about how he could have offended the sensibilities of a fellow teenager who made him run into a wall. “Oh, is it because I wanted to be Brainwashed? Can you feel the difference if someone is willing to be under your control or not? I guess there really aren’t a lot of people who ask to be Brainwashed, so it probably does feel weird, if you can feel it, but I didn’t notice anything weird. Maybe, it was similar to using your quirk on Er-”

There’s probably some side effects to repeatedly using Hitoshi’s quirk on a person in such quick succession, and the way that Hitoshi looks at him when Midoriya goes limp again, seems to imply that wasn’t quite a quirk slip. But the way that the corner of Hitoshi’s eyes squint a bit, making that similarly disgusted face, seems to imply that the control is warping in some way that Hitoshi doesn’t like to feel.

Hitoshi probably wants to take Midoriya’s interest in his quirk as a sign that the apology has been accepted, and leave it at that. But Aizawa spitefully considers a third option to the punishment, to involve sating Midoriya’s curiosity, and probably sating his own in the process.

“You’re not done,” Aizawa reminds, because an accepted apology and Midoriya’s injury possibly being fixed to some degree doesn’t mean that Hitoshi can escape the explicit instructions in his punishment. Even if it’s not necessary, Aizawa can’t afford to go back on his word.

Probably. The websites that Hizashi pulled up weren't explicit about that, but they were about not backing down once discipline is laid out, as long as it isn't psychologically harmful for the child to complete it.

Hitoshi half-rolls his eyes, and Midoriya snaps out of the control again. He blinks a few times, like there is some kind of disorienting side effect at play, before he raises his hands, flexing his fingers a few times. "Uh, sorry, I guess that talking to you after you talk is enough for you to lose control of your quirk, but I don't know enough JSL to carry a conversation. And I guess you probably don't want to talk about your quirk either right now, since it's frustrating to lose control like that."

Hitoshi stares at Midoriya, not reacting on the surface. Probably frustrated if Midoriya is right about Hitoshi's lack of control, which Aizawa thinks is a bit overestimated, but would make his attempts to offer to escort Midoriya to Recovery Girl or his dorm room difficult.

"But, even if it's frustrating, or you feel sc- you don't feel like you should be around us, I still think that you should make sure that's what you really want. And if you change your mind, I still have my chat with you, and Ashido does too. And Bakugo, even if he's a little... weird right now," Midoriya says, a solid pitch for making amends with two students who might be able to receive Hitoshi's no-doubt fumbling attempts towards that, with a warning about Bakugo that is honestly underwhelming.

It might be an overlooked benefit that Bakugo isn't influencing Hitoshi at all when his ward is quite successfully destroying his life and relationships all on his own. And more evidence to that is Hitoshi's narrowed eyes, taking some offense to that gesture.

Something that Todoroki seems completely oblivious to, just like the Problem Child still smiling expectantly to be offered a renewed friendship. "I think if you want to make amends though, you should start by not imitating me so much. Injuring Midoriya's hand, stating that you're 'not here to make friends.' I'm not flattered."

There's a slow tilt of Hitoshi's head, in confusion, that Aizawa fights not to mirror. That truly can't be the sum of Todoroki's grievances here.

But it looks like it is. "Aizawa-sensei, I don't mean to cast judgement," Todoroki continues on, and Aizawa is wholly too interested in whatever unpredictable wisdom his student wants to impart. "But, aggression often comes from a lack of stimulating activities, and physical exercise, as well as a lack of discipline. I have a few cat wands, if you don't have any on hand."

When Aizawa reflects on all the reasons to fear being this class' homeroom teacher for the next two years, for some reason, Todoroki is never one of them. "Cat wands, for a cat that I'm completely unaware of. I'll keep that in mind."

Todoroki nods, and Midoriya lets out a half-nervous laugh that sounds like the first gasp of air he's taken in since Todoroki started talking. "Um, I'm glad you're okay, Shinsou, and uh-"

Midoriya pats at his arm before he realizes that he dropped Hitoshi's scarf and jacket a few Brainwashes ago, scrambling to pick them up, shake the snow off, and hand them over to him.

"I'll see you around? Talk to you, maybe, if that's okay? But, uh, bye!" Midoriya sputters, making the cause of his nervousness known as he turns to shove Todoroki towards the dorms, apparently deciding against a Recovery Girl visit, and wanting to make sure that Todoroki doesn't say anything else that the Problem Child deems embarrassing.

Unfortunately, claiming another victim, who is still staring at the jacket and scarf in his hands without realizing that he failed. “100 lines, after your concussion is evaluated-”

“He didn’t need-” Hitoshi tries to argue, glaring at Aizawa in the futile attempt, before he sighs, his head dropping forward with the effort. “The Problem Child is weird. Weird, insane, I hate him. I hope his hand falls off.”

“If you said that while Midoriya was in earshot, that would be a violation of ‘saying something intentionally hurtful,’” Aizawa reminds, as an informative example. Not at all to do with spurring Hitoshi’s irritability into a seething growl.

After all, there will be many incidents to be expected as Hitoshi and Eri both learn the fundamental rules of society, enforced by adult caretakers for the first time. It’s important to know the rules, and know how a healthy consequence will be enforced.

But Todoroki might be right about the lack of stimulating activity.

*

Midoriya sits on the couch, trying to pay attention to the movie that Todoroki wanted to watch. Trying not to feel weird about this, but it is a little weird right now, even if he’s sure that he’s making it weird by feeling weird about it.

His hand did feel a lot better after Shinsou Brainwashed him, but it kept swelling anyway, and Recovery Girl would probably say that he injured the already fragile tendons in his hands and arms. Which, Shinsou does kind of have a habit of doing. But, it’s happened often enough over smaller things that Midoriya knows how to take care of it, to take some pain killers, elevate his hand, switch from heating and cooling it.

Which is the reason that Todoroki is holding his hand, on top of the pillow between them on the couch. And it’s not weird, because it’s medical treatment, and Todoroki has enough control over his quirk to slightly elevate or cool his body temperature on the respective sides of his body, and the only reason that his hand feels so sweaty is because Todoroki is using his left hand to hold his.

Or, he was before he switched hands? But Midoriya’s hand is still sweating, because it must have gotten hotter before he alternated.

This is fine.

This would be fine if Kacchan had taken Kirishima up on one of the many offers to go sparring or running, to get him out of the kitchen where Kacchan has spent most of his time the past four days. But now, Kacchan is glaring at him with a snack-sized serving of kimchi fried rice that looks blood red. “Oi, can’t you take that shit to a room instead of pulling this shit in public, IcyHot bastard?”

Midoriya pulls his lips tight, like trying to swallow them might save himself some pain when Kacchan shoves the kimchi fried rice closer to his face, making it clear that Midoriya is supposed to eat it. Midoriya is pretty sure that fried rice isn’t supposed to have so much sauce that it looks like soup. “I’m not acting. Aoyama told me that I don’t have a stage presence.”

Midoriya turns to look at Todoroki, once again trying to figure out if Todoroki was making a joke. He knows it’s futile, but he always tries. And Todoroki hardly ever looks at him to confirm if he is.

Kacchan is not the best person to joke around with at the best of times, and there hasn’t been anything close to a good time for that in a while.

“Fuck off! You’re always saying the dumbest fucking shit I’ve ever heard in my fucking life, do you have braincells in that strawberry swirl ass head? Is it just ice cubes and daddy issues with you? Eh?” Kacchan demands, bending to yell into Todoroki’s face, but Todoroki just takes the kimchi fried rice from his hand, setting it down in his lap.

Before he takes the chopsticks, and starts eating it.

“I didn’t make that shit for you, dumb fuck-” Kacchan yells, grabbing the fried rice with one hand but the other is raised, curled open with a palm facing Todoroki’s scar, and Midoriya stands up to shove him away.

“Kacchan, stop—” Midoriya sucks in a breath, grimacing at the twinge in his hand when he pulls it away from Kacchan’s shoulder, when he might have to go to Recovery Girl after all if it’s not better by tomorrow. He didn’t use One For All against that wall, he wasn’t running that fast, but ever since the temperature dropped every little ache and pain has gotten worse in his arms.

“Right you’re fine, you’re so damn fine after that corpse-faced shithead did that to you, you just need to cuddle with your boyfriend and then you’ll just be perfectly fucking fine,” Kacchan says in a low voice, almost bubbling with something that isn’t a laugh, but close to it, before he shoves Midoriya with a hand on his chest. “And you’re not going to tell Shitsei that he fucked you up, like you don’t want to rat out some abusive asshole because you just care so much about Shitsou’s feelings—”

“Because I didn’t say anything about you,” Midoriya interrupts, reminding Kacchan about what they’ve already talked about. What Kacchan refuses to listen to. “I didn’t give up on being friends with you, because I knew you needed a good friend. No matter what you did, I was still there for you, and Shinsou still needs a friend. So I’m not giving up on him.”

Kacchan sneers and turns on his heel to stalk away, his shoulders pulled tight as he stomps up to the staircase. Kacchan is giving up on Shinsou, and that’s honestly the worst part about it. He can’t even stand to talk about Shinsou anymore, even when it seemed like Kacchan was his closest friend.

Even when Midoriya told him what Shinsou said to Aizawa that night, it didn’t change his mind. Bastard can fuck right off then, get fucking lost. Who gives a shit where he goes after that investigation bullshit is done? I don’t give a shit, Deku.

Even if Kacchan doesn’t give a shit, someone should.

“I think you should break up with him,” Todoroki says, and Midoriya almost pulls his hand away from where Todoroki is gently holding it, because that’s not how things are between himself and Kacchan. “You shouldn’t forgive someone who doesn’t feel sorry for hurting you. That is abusive. And no one has the right to hurt someone else without repercussions, no matter what they’re going through.”

Midoriya wants to argue that he still doesn’t let the things Kacchan does slide, he usually tells him off, and he knows that Shinsou is sorry for hurting him. But all of those thoughts short out into sensation when Todoroki pulls Midoriya’s hand to his mouth and blows on it. Just the softest feeling of Todoroki’s breath ghosting over the back of his hand, it feels weird, it feels tingly.

It kind of feels like what Midnight-sensei described as a sign of sexual attraction, but Midoriya knows it’s not that. Maybe, maybe, maybe Todoroki can just make his breath cold too? Maybe he’s learning to do that?

Todoroki looks up at him, still holding Midoriya's hand, and Midoriya realizes he probably looks weirded out right now.

"Does it feel warmer? I still feel like my mouth is burning," Todoroki says, with the same blank expression he always wears, something that either feels completely honest of him and still like a lie sometimes, and despite the confusion, there's still a part of Midoriya that hopes that never changes.

"I-it doesn't, I don't think it works like that. But I'll get some water," Midoriya says, pulling away his hand to run into the newly vacated kitchen, dropping the kimchi fried rice onto the counter, and he stares too long at the sink before he figures out he needs a glass.

Kacchan has hardly ever been a friend that deserves Midoriya's friendship, but Midoriya knows that he tries sometimes. He tries more often now, now that things have changed so much at UA, now that Midoriya has a quirk and deserves respect from Kacchan-

Well, that's not really what it is.

It's not just Midoriya's quirk that makes Kacchan respect him, it's Midoriya standing up to Kacchan when he goes too far. There is a line, he's sure, when Kacchan might go too far and Midoriya will reject him, just like Kacchan did so many times over so many years, but Midoriya always tries to see the best in people. It's hard with Kacchan, because he makes it hard to see the good sometimes, but he knows for the most part, even the things Kacchan says or does that are hurtful are done with a reason behind it. Kacchan bullied him so much so that he could look better for his friends, or because he was stressed out from school, and maybe he destroyed his hero journals because he was worried about his own chances of getting into UA and what would happen if he didn't. Kacchan told him to jump off the roof and hope that he was reborn with a quirk in the next life because-

Because Kacchan was trying to help him, he's sure. Kacchan never believed he could be a hero without a quirk, and honestly All Might didn't either, so he wanted to make sure that Midoriya wouldn't get hurt continuing to pursue that dream, but not give up on achieving it in the next life. Right?

Midoriya didn't do it, so it doesn't matter. He didn't really think about doing it either, so it's fine. And things are okay now, so he's past it. It's fine.

He already forgave Shinsou before he apologized.

What Shinsou did was so small, really. He just said some things that were taunting, that were trying to make Midoriya feel scared, but he wasn't. Midoriya wouldn't even call it threatening. And then Shinsou told him to run into a wall, which is hardly the worst thing he can do with his quirk, and Midoriya only hurt his hand because of the way he was running. Shinsou probably meant for him to hit his face instead, and neither would really hurt if it was someone else, someone who hadn't injured themselves in a long-term way like Midoriya had.

Shinsou didn't really have to apologize, because Midoriya understood that he was upset, and Midoriya didn't do a good job of making him less upset. He just made him more upset, and he should expect there would be a chance that Shinsou would lash out, since he's dealing with a lot-

"Are you waiting for the 'good water?'" Todoroki asks, standing behind him, and Midoriya jolts, nearly dropping the glass that he still hadn't put under the running faucet. Midoriya starts filling up the glass, but he can't help but ask.

"What do you mean by 'good water?'" Midoriya just can't sort that one out on his own, but he knows that it's very rare that Todoroki is any clearer about his answer than his question.

But Todoroki reaches over him to shut off the faucet, as Midoriya realizes that the water is running over the glass and his hand. He just didn't feel it. "When you turn on the faucet after washing dishes with hot water, sometimes it's warmer, so you have to wait until the water turns cold again. That's the 'good water.'"

Todoroki also takes the glass, and Midoriya watches him drink a lot of it at once. He only had a small bite of that kimchi fried rice, but Midoriya feels all the more grateful that he didn't try it first.

"But, you don't have to have a hand under the water to wait for it. You can wait until after the steam goes away, or you can wait until someone else says that it's 'good water.' Or you can get a soda instead of water," Todoroki says, and Midoriya feels like he's either talking about something else, or he's really passionate about water. Then, Todoroki's eyes narrow a little bit. "Or you can kill it. Even if it's illegal, a slow murder by destroying its hopes and dreams, and draining all of its money can be even more cruel."

Then it's definitely not about water.

And Midoriya isn't sure how hot the water would get if he asked Kacchan to apologize.

*

Hitoshi refused Recovery Girl's offer to heal his concussion, which thankfully wasn't severe, and seemed to take the excuse that he needed to rest to recover as a means of avoiding Hizashi and Eri both when they returned to the dorm. Even when Hizashi checked on him for dinner, his husband said that Hitoshi 'wasn't hungry,' but he took long enough that it was a predictable inevitability that Hitoshi probably tried to feign sleep as long as possible to avoid answering him.

And still not answering him verbally, which is made even less understandable when Hitoshi's quirk has apparently become less controllable with fewer restrictions in its use.

Eri needed to be reminded that Hitoshi wasn't breaking the rule about 'one meal where everyone is gathered together every day,' given that he was present at lunch, but she still didn't seem pleased that Hitoshi seemed to be willfully ignoring this meal. Aizawa and Hizashi both made the effort to take her mind off the matter, and Aizawa knows for himself that he attempted to follow the plot and characters to Sailor Moon with more effort than any viewing before, in a marathon that Eri insisted on and Hizashi encouraged as 'research' for her birthday.

He thinks his favorite is Pluto, as she seems to be the most mature and rational of all the Sailor Scouts.

Eri seems to have a preference for the titular character Sailor Moon, and even with all the Sailor wands that she's collected from Monoma, she seems disheartened that she doesn't have a wand for that character. Despite the fact that she has a mirror compact and a cat-themed doll for that specific character. But, if Aizawa's recollection is correct, the mirror compact is a lesser vessel for Sailor Moon's powers, and the wand is the upgraded version. And he's willing to bet money that Monoma will give her that wand on either her birthday, or Christmas.

Aizawa has heard the common complaint that having a birthday close to Christmas usually results in worse presents for either holiday, and he doubts that Eri will have that problem. In all honesty, it's hard to find a gift that wouldn't be given to Eri for either holiday, given that he's aware of Monoma's current ritual, his students' plans, Mirio, Amajiki, and Hadou though he wouldn't count out 3-A in its entirety either, given that the Class President had emailed him to make sure of the date.

And that doesn't begin to take into account the UA staff, given that there's an email chain that's been leaked to him with a long and concerning back-and-forth between Principal Nezu and Powerloader about a 'refreshingly cute' personal security system for Eri.

He wants to tell them not to do it. He also heavily considered requesting one for Hitoshi. In the end, he said nothing, because he knows there's very little he can say in the face of one of Principal Nezu's machinations.

There's honestly very little that Eri wants for either holiday, because despite this small desire for a wand toy for her favorite television show, Eri neither has the usual greed of a small child or much opportunity to develop it. She'll have plenty of things.

But things aren't at all what she wants for her birthday. And when Eri falls asleep between them, her arms wrapped loosely around one of his own and her legs curled against Hizashi's, there's a private moment between them that feels surreal, when he looks up and sees that Hizashi was watching her sleep too. Neither of them really wanting to move her, to risk disturbing her peaceful sleep.

After bringing himself to discuss it with Hizashi weeks ago, he hasn't thought of it much. At times, he marvels at how different it feels now, to decide that Eri was their child. Their daughter. Unofficially still, but it's easy to forget that now. Now, marveling at the wisps of Eri's hair, every twitch of her eyelids in sleep, her warm weight against his chest when they both work gently, gently to move her to bed. He can't imagine it any differently, except for the terrifying-yet-not idea that she'll grow out of this eventually. He'll still be with her, to see her grow through the years, and there will be one day that he carries her to bed, and it will be the last, only because she's outgrown the need for it.

That day won't come for a long time, and it's illogical to be upset about the idea of something so distant. Especially when Eri still likes to be carried around instead of walking on campus at times.

Hizashi still trades some looks at him as they get ready for bed, as though he can feel that warmth still smoldering in his chest at all of these illogical thoughts. He tries to keep his mind off of it, for argument's sake, because he does need to sleep well tonight to truly take advantage of Toshinori's offer to cover the nightly dorm shift that Aizawa had volunteered for throughout winter break. It was the least desirable shift, but he was one of few heroes on staff who worked primarily at night.

But when Hizashi finally falls into bed beside him, offering an open arm that Aizawa takes advantage of to rest on his chest, those thoughts were apparently not the only ones that Hizashi had on his mind. "Has Hitoshi talked to you about me? About what's going on right now?"

Aizawa doesn't bother to open his eyes, because he's sure he has the perfect mental picture of worry written on his husband's face just from the sound of his voice. "He hasn't said anything. It's probably just what it means now. The test that he's worried about."

A test Hitoshi will pass, which makes it all the more illogical to avoid Hizashi. His husband clearly isn't fond of giving his ward distance when it's needed, and especially not now. "It seems like more than that, Shou. With the threats, running out on us, getting rid of his friends and his stash.... Running after you to spend more time together...."

Aizawa snorts and has to look up at his husband with his chin on his chest, trying to figure out how on earth Hizashi could mean that. "He sat against the wall refusing to talk to me, and only showed an interest after being invited to fight one of my students. That's not 'trying to spend time with me.”

“Shou,” Hizashi sighs, and he looks oddly defeated as though Aizawa is wrong about the situation on every level, even when he knows he’s not. “How does Eri spend time with you?”

“Watching TV, napping, helping me grade papers,” Aizawa lists, even if the last one nearly burns him to admit it. “The... missing cat investigations.”

“Our kids just,” Hizashi hesitates, raising a hand almost as though he’ll retract the way that ‘our kids’ sounds, but as Aizawa is too tired to call it an argument, he takes that as a reason to continue. “They only know how to read the room, and put out what you put out. You’re pretty ‘low energy,’ so the napping works swell, and that’s probably what Hitoshi was reading. If you’re not going to invite him to do anything with you, he’s just going to sit in his sad little corner and call that sad little time ‘quality time together.’”

Aizawa is still completely unconvinced that was Hitoshi’s reasoning for going to the training exercise. There had to be more spite involved. “And he wanted to fight Midoriya to get attention from me, because I was paying attention to my students, like I told him I would before we left.”

Hizashi shrugs, moving Aizawa’s chin with the motion, but that’s still not a gesture completely sold on the hypothesis his husband is trying to sell. “Bad attention is better than no attention, when you don’t know how to get good attention. So, if you’re going to be spiriting away my ward again, maybe try to have a good time? See how it goes at least, so maybe there can be a few less head injuries.”

Arguing at this point would only mean hours lost that could have been slept through, so Aizawa concedes the point with little thought to how to accomplish that. Hizashi seems jealous for the most inane reasons possible, solely due to Hitoshi’s frigid avoidance of him. Finding the reasoning behind that, if there is any, seems like a better use of Aizawa’s time than trying to plan ‘quality time’ with him, given that Hitoshi’s sincerest interests tend to be on a more violent side compared to Eri’s.

Hizashi already showed him how to make coffee, and Aizawa doesn’t think that sharing a coffee shop order qualifies as an activity. Hitoshi’s interest in the capture scarf is rare, and offering to train him with its use seems like a poor idea when Hitoshi still seems to struggle with basic ‘start and stop’ motions. There were a few things he noticed when his fight with Midoriya first started, that he could offer to sort out. If he wanted an even more capably violent ward.

Stay awake. Don’t blink. It can crush your head but don’t close your eyes, not now, not Asui-

“You really are cool. Eraserhead.”

Aizawa jolts with a hand over his mouth, sweating too much when he pulls away from Hizashi’s embrace, shaking with a terror that isn’t new to him.

He sits on the side of the bed to fumble in the dark for his phone, just to check the time. Just to stare at it long enough that the numbers made sense again. Five hours.

Five hours of sleep, with a nightmare to wake him. The same one, the usual USJ nightmare, and he wishes he could take solace in the thought that the nightmares are receding again into lesser horrors. He can’t right now, and he can’t think of laying down again as anything less than submission to claws ripping through his scalp and his limbs useless until they’re broken.

So Aizawa makes his usual course to the kitchen, to make himself some tea. To take the time to remember who he is, where he is, and where he's not. He's past USJ. He has bigger issues.

He has a question as to who brewed a pot of coffee and seems to have gone through half of it, but the answer to that is likely already known to him, and the idea of confronting Hitoshi about that poor decision seems like pointlessly kicking a hornet's nest.

Staying awake all night is a poor decision that can't be prohibited by a rule, given how unenforceable it would be for the majority of the occupants of this dorm. But if Hitoshi is trying to pursue that dream that almost became a reality for Aizawa to become nocturnal and avoid most human interaction, that's a dream already dead in the water by the 'one meal eaten together every day' rule.

Aizawa stares at the temptation of the coffee pot for too long, even while he waits for his chamomile tea to brew. Curiosity eventually gets the better of him, when he takes his mug and walks quietly down the hallway, first seeing that Eri was undisturbed in her slumber, safe in the pink net canopy over her bed, then seeing that Hitoshi's door was open.

And that Hitoshi wasn't in his room.

Aizawa checks the bathroom, because he doesn't want to jump to conclusions, but when the door is open and the lights are off there, he brings himself to check the laundry room just in case. Because Hitoshi could not be that reckless.

He wouldn't drink half a pot of coffee to just wander off, the slimmest possibility that he went to the 1-A dorm, a slightly more reasonable suspicion that he invited Mirio to take a walk with him due to some frustrations and issues that he didn't want to share with Hizashi or himself. The possibility that Hitoshi isn't on campus at all is nigh impossible, but Aizawa neither wants to scour the grounds or ask that The Commission track him down with that tracker implanted in his ankle, though Aizawa truly thinks he should request access to it in the future.

Aizawa nearly drops his mug when he sees a door opening, a door he didn't think to check, as it's always locked. Locked to keep Hitoshi out of it.

But Hitoshi has proven he can pick locks, and he seems nonplussed about getting caught after the fact when he sees Aizawa as he exits the office, and holds the mug in his own hand a little higher. Almost a greeting, almost pointing out the similarity that they're both awake at 4 AM holding mugs in the hallway.

Completely unapologetic about invading a space that he's not supposed to be in, at an hour he really shouldn't be awake, given that he should be resting to recover from his concussion.

It's late, Aizawa hasn't indulged in a cup of coffee like Hitoshi has, and the silence of the hallway only holds Aizawa's tongue further. He doesn't say anything, but he follows Hitoshi to the kitchen at a distance, watching the teenager pour another cup for himself. Aizawa can only hope that this is the only pot of coffee that Hitoshi has brewed.

"You're supposed to be resting," Aizawa whispers, his elbows on the counter after he submits to the argument that he's still exhausted himself, and sits down accordingly. Hitoshi just shrugs his shoulders, his back turned before he takes a sip, then turns around with his back braced on the counter beside the machine. The warming light for the coffee machine is off, and there's no steam for his cup, meaning that the coffee is probably cold at this point.

Hitoshi, despite willfully staying up this late, looks exhausted with the rings under his eyes. He's forgone the facemask too, and Aizawa notes with some concern that the scabs within his scars have edges bleeding fresher, as though he were picking at them. “You’re supposed to care about the investigation.”

The accusation there drops like a lead weight into Aizawa’s stomach, because it is somewhat deserved. He hasn’t chased the lead with his usual vigor, and he knows exactly why. He has an assumption as to why Hitoshi is so focused on it now, the recent attempt on his life would force him to either extreme - to shut down out of fear of further attempts to silence him, or fight harder to bring down his former captors. Aizawa should feel that same fire that Hitoshi has chosen.

He doesn’t. And he knows exactly why.

And he knows he needs to push past it. “Let’s see where you are, then,” Aizawa fumbles, raising his mug of tea that he only barely thinks of exchanging for coffee. If this is an early morning for him, five hours of sleep is still a rare gift, and Aizawa imagines that Hitoshi needs some guidance as to what he’s working on. He may have gotten frustrated at the lack of warehouse addresses given to him and just started virtually pacing the coastline of Japan on Google Maps’ street view, something that might actually be calming if it wasn’t for Hitoshi’s intentions with it.

Aizawa follows him through the unlocked office door, and still keeps the admonishment to himself, before he sees the absolute mess of paper scattered like an explosion over his desk, debris filtering out onto Hizashi’s.

Frustration about the lack of addresses spiraled into darker territory, as Aizawa identifies several investigation files he never wanted Hitoshi to see. And the teenager simply takes his place in Aizawa’s chair. Without the facemask, the corner of his lip twitches up almost into a smirk that reads more proud than what he should be. “The lines you wanted me to write are over there.”

Aizawa glances at Hizashi’s desk, and buried beneath Hitoshi’s wardship paperwork which seems mostly untouched, if out of order as though he’s been reading through it in full, a cat-shaped notebook is flipped open and a pen with a cat’s head on the cap discarded above it. ‘I won’t intentionally tell Midoriya to run into a wall,’ written repeatedly on the first page, but when Aizawa flips through the next few pages, idly wondering if it added up to 100 lines, he sees the lines change to ‘I won’t intentionally hurt other people with my quirk.’

Aizawa doesn’t count, but it seems to surpass the 100 lines that Aizawa did intend to tell him to write, but after he had fully recovered from the concussion. “You didn’t tell me what to write, so I guessed. 100 for both guesses.”

Left alone, Hitoshi took it upon himself to submit to the discipline and double it. “That wasn’t necessary. Next time, I’ll tell you what to write, and you only have to complete 100.”

This exhaustion threaded through Hitoshi’s loose limbs, this odd and oddly companionable silence that answers him, devoid of a criticism or barb, seems to suggest that there won’t really be a next time. As terrifying as the prospect of introducing punishments and discipline to two children who had faced horrific abuse described as that, Hitoshi’s enthusiasm for exceeding what was required almost seemed like an admission in itself. That apologies and writing lines were so beneath what he expected as a ‘punishment,’ and he was possibly taking to the very idea of defined rules and expectations with enthusiasm.

Hitoshi eventually rolls his eyes, over some hesitation perceived, and takes another drink of coffee, which prompts Aizawa to look through the rest of the storm that’s blown through his investigation files in the past five hours. Without Hitoshi being a guide, he’ll see what Hitoshi has been at work with, similarly without guidance.

Autopsy reports. On the edge of his desk, Hizashi's only containing those lines and that the wardship paperwork, the autopsy reports for 44, 61, 102, Numbers that were recovered dead or in pieces, are described as they were in life with bright yellow sticky notes borrowed from Hizashi's desk. '44, Explosion quirk like Bakugo but only activated by punching, Rank filler and fighter, rented to Suma Gang. Good at math too.'

Neither gang's members arrested at the scene would claim the young woman on the cusp of adulthood, neither would say why her body was there. Suma was disbanded after enough arrests were made, if Aizawa's memory is correct, but he's not sure if Naomasa has talked to them in regard to the Miasma ties.

He's not sure how close Hitoshi was to this woman, if he wanted to note something about her life on her autopsy report, how she was 'good at math.' If that was a meaningful relationship that led Hitoshi closer to Bakugo in the first place.

61's is shorter. '61, Witness quirk, can memorize every detail observed in short spurts, Information gathering. Probably got run over on purpose after getting caught.'

The young man with that number tattooed over his ribs was indeed killed by the car tires crushing his abdomen, something thought to be a tragic accident. The driver was charged as they were already evading the police, only manslaughter in the second degree as it looked like the young man was trying to exit the speeding car on his own. No clear ties to organized crime syndicates were made at the time, they got away with the defense that they were panicked when they were speeding and pursued by police.

102, only recovered by a disembodied foot. '102, loyal to Miasma. Never learned his quirk. Might have been chummed.'

Aizawa wanted to get up to speed first, but that word 'chummed' has implications he wants to be sure of. "Chummed?"

"Usual disposal," Hitoshi explains in a clipped tone, staring at the computer when Aizawa looks at him. "A Tiger Shark quirk swims around the compound. Whenever a Number needs to be disposed of...."

Hitoshi trails off, but the implication has been made clear enough. Tiger sharks are maneaters, the animal can attack humans and in certain circumstances, eat them. Whatever the specific changes that quirk comes with, Aizawa can safely assume that's an ability that carried over.

But Miasma has found other ways of 'disposal,' recently, and Aizawa wonders how exactly this unnamed Tiger Shark Number found themselves 'unemployed.'

The last autopsy report makes his blood run cold. Furokage Mizuki's.

There's no sticky note on the first page, but Aizawa still flips through it. He knows that Hitoshi has stolen this before, and he doesn't want to find that a page has gone missing. Instead, he sees a note added, on one of many photographs documenting the scars on the young woman's body, circling a small scar on her wrist. 'My fault. In training.'

A training accident, a wound made unintentionally that Hitoshi wanted to point out as his doing. Out of the many, the worse injuries made record by scars, the intentional ones, Hitoshi wants his younger self to be blamed for the smallest of them. "That's not your fault. You shouldn't have been in that situation--"

“It doesn’t matter,” Hitoshi interrupts, seemingly irritated by Aizawa trying to talk about something other than the investigation. “I didn’t know what else to write.”

Hitoshi wanted to make a note on Furokage Mizuki’s record. On her autopsy report, after going through the others. As if he didn’t want her to be left out.

The Nomus with number tattoos are next. After the bulk of those Nomus were restrained and captured alive during the Kamino incident, they were sickeningly identified by other numbers, issued by the Hero Commission after observation and testing tried to suss out which quirks they were built from. What people they used to be.

Hitoshi has identified them by their original numbers, using the bulleted list of quirks. ‘388 = 88, Strength Enhancement quirk with bleeding eyes when active. A dick.’

Not exactly a fond way to refer to a man who was used as a component of an abomination. And the common assumption about the presence of the number ‘3’ is proven on a sticky note on top of the stack of reports. ‘The only three-digit numbers assigned are the 100 series. Memory must have added the 3 to their number before they were sold off.’

Memory, the poisoner, part of the assumed administration, and someone who was present when Hitoshi was sold by his mother, also coordinates outward sales and rentals. And she seems to be the tattooist for all Numbers.

She put that tattoo on Hitoshi’s arm as well. Naming him ‘27.’

Aizawa feels his stomach twist when he thinks of ‘327,’ and moves on to the next scattered pile, this one even more messy. He regrets it immediately.

The reviews. Hitoshi’s reviews, 127’s reviews, all of the Number reviews that Shiori handed over to the police before her demise, a heavy stack perfectly organized with a cover page for the traits that Shiori had pulled from the contents, about that Number’s specialties, their quirks, their appearances. When they became active according to the evidence of the reviews and when they might have gone silent, been disposed of or ‘chummed,’ an undeniably useful wealth of information already half-sorted at the start. Hitoshi’s insights here are probably the most valuable addition they could ask for.

Aizawa pulls his hand away instead, taking a step backwards because he can’t bring himself to touch them. When he feels this itching under his skin, the unsettlement burning behind his eyes and almost making them water.

He pauses to take a drink of bitter tea, almost cold at this point, and tries not to see the similarity in the rings of exhaustion highlighted in the glow of the computer monitor on Hitoshi’s face, when a ghost looks familiar. “Wherever you got that, that’s almost everyone, as far as I know. They might have gotten more Numbers after I was sold. Most of them I know are dead-”

“The warehouses?” Aizawa asks, afterwards realizing that’s the most difficult part for Hitoshi to complete on his own, but he wants to talk about anything else. Just for now.

He’s not brave enough to face it yet. “I went through this list,” Hitoshi says, holding up a notepad next to the keyboard, his eyes growing cold and narrowing to show that he’s not pleased with the results of that measure, one he was unaware of and must have been Hizashi’s work. “I didn’t find The Miasma, but I was rented to a few of them. Put down as many names as I could remember. Some of them are in those reviews.”

Aizawa doesn't want to talk about the reviews. Not with this exhaustion doubling, this tension in his chest nearly making his breath stutter. Shiori could have given him this when he first asked, but she didn't. I'm not going to 404 my servers for you, Eraserhead.

And then she did. "Got a lot more complaints than I thought I would-"

"I need to take a walk," Aizawa interrupts, because he needs to get outside. He needs a break, he has one last cigarette. It seems fitting, now that Hitoshi is making the effort to make sure he can't avoid the issue now.

He feels like a coward, when Hitoshi looks at him with all the accusation of not taking his efforts to help as such, as being so devoid of praise for the hours Hitoshi spent, helpful efforts that Aizawa knows were painful for him to make. That he did on his own. But Aizawa finds it hard to compliment this dig into his own wounds. He just needs a break to clear his mind.

"It's cold outside," he offers as warning, when Hitoshi says nothing, but his eyes still seem to express the same request that they did before the training exercise.

Why didn't you ask me to go to the 1-A dorm? While Hitoshi's Confession quirk often warps from under his control, Aizawa is starting to suspect that question was honest on the asker's part. A request for quality time together, if Hizashi is to be believed.

Aizawa is all the more fearful that once again, his husband is right, when Hitoshi stands up and walks over to the closet where their spare hero costumes are stored, to grab a spiked leather jacket from Present Mic's image.

Hitoshi isn't much shorter than either of them, but he still seems too small when the jacket can be wrapped around his torso so loosely, and the sleeves hide his hands for being too long.

Aizawa knows full well that if his husband saw this, their ward would die of mortification while Hizashi would probably be shocked into silence. Before he found a phone to take a picture of it.

Aizawa stops before he reaches the door, to pull a discarded scarf from the back of the couch and offer it to Hitoshi. He can face the freezing cold with the black long sleeved shirt and sweatpants he went to bed in, for a short and uncomfortable amount of time, but Hitoshi should be better prepared.

He only notes after he hands it over that the scarf is Eri's, the soft pink color not incriminating enough, but the cat faces drawn on the ends of the scarf, that Hitoshi picks at after winding it around his neck, are the most identifiable features.

Hitoshi tilts his head at Aizawa's hesitation, before Aizawa remembers which pocket he placed the 'stress stash' in while he was in the office. He has to flip the box open to check that the lighter was still there, the last cigarette still there, given that there was a teenager who had broken into that office who had already found a fondness for sake when the opportunity was available. He still knows that smoking in front of an impressionable teenager is a bad habit.

But just once, Aizawa is willing to let it slide.

Hitoshi continues to follow him close, no more than two steps away, angled a bit to his left side while they exit the staff dorm and Aizawa finds the bench distant enough from the building, with only a fine dusting of snow. Hitoshi following him like that, almost like a trained bodyguard, is a habit more often seen with Eri or Hizashi, but Aizawa assumed there would be side effects for Hitoshi digging into his painful past alone like that.

Aizawa should be more ashamed, when he sits down and pulls the cigarette to his mouth, and lights it. When Hitoshi sits beside him, on the very edge of the bench to maintain the distance he seems comfortable with, Aizawa does have to offer the barest warning. “This is a horrible habit. You shouldn’t pick it up.”

Hitoshi just stares, cocking his head at that. Even if his face is blank, even if he’s silent, there’s too many wordless accusations there. ‘If it’s a horrible habit, why are you doing it? Why is it horrible? What gives you the right to tell me what to do? Why is this more important than making headway in the investigation?’

Given how Hitoshi has a new reason to avoid asking questions when Confession can warp them and force an ugly answer, Aizawa appreciates that they’re silent. Looking instead at the sky, how the barest hints of dawn are rising in the gray sky, he can appreciate his surroundings. This used to be the time that he would end his patrols if they were uneventful.

When he was able to work as a hero, before Hitoshi’s wardship necessitated that he stop to focus on his safety. “Why do you care about her now, when you didn’t before?”

“I cared, but I didn’t know how bad it was. I feel guilty because I could have stopped it,” Aizawa is forced to answer, his mind wrapping in too familiar static with only an unnatural will to answer that question remaining in his body. But too soon, the static disappears, and Aizawa turns to the sound of Hitoshi coughing.

With a stolen cigarette in his hand, that Aizawa leans across the bench to take back from him.

“Do we need to make a rule about smoking and drinking?” Aizawa asks, bitterly brushing his thumb over the filter before he flicks the ash away. At least it wasn’t wet.

“No,” Hitoshi argues between coughs, turning to glare at Aizawa with watering eyes. “That’s horrible. It’s just smoke.”

Aizawa nods, as that was his own first impression, and he might be able to lie for better results. “It’s not enjoyable until you turn 20, after your brain develops enough to recognize the nicotine.”

It’s not enjoyable the first time, especially with just the first taste, but after the addiction forms well enough, the nicotine buzz can be soothing. Aizawa’s first few attempts to find the appeal were similar failures, and he can blame the compulsion on Hizashi for starting the habit first. After they graduated, possibly shy of the legal age. By a few years. “Her.”

Aizawa knows that’s a question Hitoshi is trying to ask, but he doesn’t have answers he wants to give. He looks at the student dorms in the distance instead, at how there isn’t a soul stirring on campus yet. But he’s sure that at least a few of his own students are early risers.

“You feel guilty about someone,” Hitoshi continues to pry, with a gravely voice not entirely recovered from the smoke he probably took too deep into his lungs. “You’ve been weird ever since we got back to UA.”

Aizawa doesn’t have a clue what Hitoshi was originally trying to ask, as he doesn’t know anything about Shiori. Confession spawned the question that Aizawa was forced to answer, giving him this hint that Aizawa didn’t want him to find. And he doubts that the honest answer is one that Hitoshi wants to find. “Someone I worked with died. I didn’t find out until we returned. If I had....”

Aizawa stops himself short of saying ‘if I had been there,’ because it likely makes no difference. He would have been there for Hagakure, he wouldn’t have wanted to be on the escort taking Shiori to prison. He would have wanted to wash his hands of it. Everything would have still fallen to the same ruin.

He doesn't want Hitoshi to think that being with him in the mountains was a mistake that Aizawa would take back. "If I had known what she was doing, I would have been able to save her life. She was working with criminals, in ways I didn't know about. She had issues that drew her on that dangerous path."

'Shiori' isn't her real name, and Aizawa has assumed that beforehand. He knew some of the crimes she had participated in, to a degree he had asked her to commit more, lesser crimes to a degree. He knew that she had committed to the path below the straight and narrow, she didn't want to change her ways and past sins barred her from that to a degree. He thought he was doing his best to help her.

In the beginning, he thought if he pushed, she would just push further away. She needed the offer of escape and help that he thought he made clear, but she didn't take it, when she needed to. When she got involved with the League.

He could have been a better friend, to avoid all of this. "Talking to her might help," Hitoshi says, his tone careless enough with his shrug and averted eyes for Aizawa to know this is hardly something Hitoshi doesn't care about. Something that hits on something vulnerable enough that he makes such a brittle shield. "Apologizing, or... saying what was left unsaid."

Hitoshi trying to comfort him, trying to tell him how to mourn Shiori after receiving that advice for Furokage Mizuki's fate not long ago, still rattles Aizawa enough despite Hitoshi's attempts to play it off casually. As though this isn't a sensitive and painful topic for them both.

Hitoshi has no idea that the reviews for the Numbers he went through came at the expense of Shiori's life, in a small way. It wasn't the reason that she died, she was killed by the League to silence her from leaking more of their secrets, if she hadn't already. All the information she had to offer wasn't worth a human life.

Aizawa looks at the cigarette, flicking the ash again even though he hasn't taken another drag. The incense that Ojiro lit, and treated as funeral incense for Hagakure still catches in his mind. "She was an idiot."

Aizawa doesn't want to face the sight of the dorms again and pretend that he's speaking to Shiori, because right now, he feels like what he would have to say is too harsh for his ward's ears. It would probably lower Hitoshi's opinion of him.

"She was stubborn, she refused to get help time and time again, and her death is on her own hands," Aizawa says, and wants to say more on it. How much Shiori caused Hagakure's suffering, how that in his opinion is the worst of her crimes. A 'mentor,' Aizawa assumed, that Shiori agreed with before her passing, and a shitty one at that.

If Aizawa could have known before, he would have seen the disaster those two would have been drawn into, because Shiori shouldn't have been trusted with the admiration of a younger person like that. "You're just mad that she's not here to say these things to. You're still sad that she's gone."

Hitoshi isn't someone that should take that mentoring role to guide Aizawa in mourning, in forgetting Shiori, when he was only days old or not yet born when Aizawa experienced that loss for the first time. With Shirakumo.

But Hitoshi has experienced that loss, all the same. And he seems to think that makes them kindred souls in that way. When Aizawa looks at him, Hitoshi just shrugs, again careless with vulnerable words hidden beneath that. “I don’t know who ‘she’ is, but even if she did something to make you upset, you can still feel like she shouldn’t have died. Chisaki, 127... Almost everyone I knew at The Miasma is dead or they’re... like that.”

Aizawa never wanted Hitoshi to see those files. To know what Nomus are. To experience the horror of connecting faces to those twisted things.

Aizawa never thought that Hitoshi talking about Numbers would bring about a similar grief. These were the people he grew up with, this is his history. Even if they hurt him in the past, even if they deserved their end, it’s an end hurtful in the finality. There is no place for words left unsaid.

Just the attachment remains.

“I didn’t know them. I didn’t talk to them, obviously,” Hitoshi says, his hand raising but falling short of his face, still gesturing to a mask that isn’t there. That was still a painful piece of this history. “I listened to them talk, sometimes. I didn’t really want to know anyone, back then, especially some of them. 88, he...”

Hitoshi’s breath catches, and Aizawa doesn’t want him to continue. Continue to feel it, have to reveal it, whatever that monster did before he became a monster.

“Busted me up, a lot during training. He was one of the worst,” Hitoshi says, and Aizawa can imagine. He doesn’t know when combat training started for Hitoshi, and Hitoshi likely doesn’t either, but 12 is still too young. He knows that was the end, that was when Hitoshi was sold to the 8 Precepts, and there were years of ‘training’ before that. “And he liked listening to jazz music. He was good enough that when he was being taken to a job, he could listen to it. He liked protection jobs, and he was friends with 98.”

Aizawa knows that each Number is a person. Almost every Nomu is an amalgamation of people.

He wouldn’t know 388 like that, without knowing him like Hitoshi did. “98 took me to my first Bug session, and he was the one who told me that 50 died. I wouldn’t have known if he didn’t tell me, I would have kept waiting. I wouldn’t be able to ask.”

Monsters, who are people. Far harder to mourn than someone like 50 to Hitoshi.

Hard to forgive, an obstacle to forgetting them. And the pain that follows.

“People hurt people,” Aizawa says, a statement more profound than it seems on its face, something he’s had to remind himself of in his hero work when there are criminals sympathetic enough to lend strictness but not hopelessness. “There are things too horrific to forgive, that doesn’t take away the fact that they were done by a person, who has flaws and reasons for acting the way they do, their own tragedies. But forgiveness doesn’t have to mean redemption, or ‘trying again,’ or thinking fondly of them from now on. Forgiveness can just be... severance. Freedom from thinking about them, and what they’ve done.”

Every time he sees a trace of Shiori left to haunt him, her presence seems to grow like a weight on his shoulders. His class, missing one student. The growth in investigative leads. The scabs on Hitoshi’s face, when he was forced to wear that mask and fear for his life, after 127 gained entrance by Shiori taking down the security system.

He wants to feel hate, instead of pity and guilt, but none of these serve him. Shiori is dead, she’s just a hindrance to him now, and he wants to be done with her. If he could take the sum of his feelings about it, his anger and sorrow might cancel each other out. He just needs time for each of them to work themselves out.

And his time has run out, judging by the ash clinging only to the filter of his cigarette. The ward who needs his time and attention, and the investigation that only needs a greater push to reach results. Those reviews are the greatest key to knowing Miasma's manpower, who they will face during the raid, and which heroes need to be called to combat them. "I apologized. And wrote the lines. And helped with the investigation."

Aizawa looks at Hitoshi, who is picking at the end of his scarf again. Talking to Aizawa, even when he refuses to look at him.

"We're... fine. After that," Hitoshi asks, the hesitation making it a question, and Aizawa feels his breath catch because it shouldn't be. If Hitoshi was forcing himself to make progress in the investigation, putting his mental wellbeing willfully at risk, because he thought he needed to 'make things up' to Aizawa after that little fight.

"Of course we are," Aizawa reassures, when he struggles to know exactly how to frame it. He remembers the steps, the words to say, but like he expected Hitoshi doesn't need something that simple. "You went beyond what you were supposed to, and I know that you regret your actions. We'll work together on avoiding that, but... You should not have broken into the office to do that. The investigation will never be a punishment--"

"That's not--" Hitoshi cuts himself off, dropping the scarf as his hands fall to the bench in frustration, curling around the edges of it. "I want to find them, and I want to stop them. I thought you wanted that too."

Out of all the horrible 'quality time' activities Aizawa had considered, working on the investigation was probably worse than the whole of them. "I do. But I don't want you to get hurt in the process. Your wellbeing is more important to me than the success of the investigation."

Hitoshi folds his arms, his bare hands likely uncomfortably cold from holding the bench for that short time, before he rolls his head lazily to look at Aizawa like he's said something stupid. "My 'wellbeing' is tied to the investigation. They're going to try to kill me again, or kidnap me. And I'd like to take them down first, if you don't mind. There's not a lot of friendly faces waiting for me at 'home.'"

Aizawa knows that the end of the investigation is tied into Hitoshi's wellbeing, probably more than Hitoshi does. Adequate care and support for his issues being one of the bigger needs predicated on the end of the wardship.

Aizawa knows well that he's not adequate care or support, when he can't manage to make amends with the teenager at the conclusion of the disciplinary process.

"I'll look through your notes," Aizawa says, rising from the bench and feels the back of his thighs frozen and protesting the cold as much as the shivering beginning to set in. He doubts that Hitoshi is much warmer in just a scarf and leather jacket. "But there's something I want to do first."

*

Hitoshi follows Aizawa half-blind with his eyes closed, back to the dorm and into the office, wishing that the exhaustion pulling at his limbs could make up its mind. He's tired, now, but he's sure if he tries to fall asleep, he'll feel the same frustration when he can't. It's just one of those nights, and he might as well be productive with the extra time. He might as well make the decision for his body with another cup of coffee.

But when Aizawa reaches into the top of the closet in the office and pulls out that giant speaker contraption that Yamada wears when he's in costume, Hitoshi feels like everything was a mistake.

Everything. Staying awake, working on the investigation, talking to Aizawa.

Giving in to the stupidest idea he's ever had, a curiosity about what it feels like to wear Yamada's jacket like this.

Aizawa won't even betray how mocking the gesture is when he holds the speakers out to Hitoshi, his blank face betrays nothing and Hitoshi struggles to do the same. "I'm not wearing that."

Hitoshi should have taken the jacket off by this point, but he still feels cold from going outside. It still feels comfortable. Aizawa doesn't give in that easily. "It's the second-best method of testing this that we have, unless you want me to wake up Hizashi."

Because Yamada's hearing aids are like tiny speakers. Because his quirk didn't work over the HAM radio. Because Aizawa is an asshole. "Fine."

Hitoshi takes the speakers, and struggles not to show how insanely heavy they are. It's a wonder that Yamada can act like he does when he wears them, his shoulders must hurt all the time.

But when Hitoshi slides the bulky collar over his head, there's padding around every space that comes into contact with him. Not that thin layer of foam that was worn through shortly after Chisaki gave him another mask, after he was sold, but thick padding that makes the speakers feel like they're nearly weightless on his shoulders.

Even the front piece that rests lower on his chest and the part where Yamada must rest his chin for his mouth to reach the microphone is padded, but the chin rest is a little too high for him. Yamada must have a stupidly long neck that he hasn't noticed before.

Hitoshi still finds himself pressing down at the top of the device, testing how effective the padding is, how oddly soothing it feels to have a pressure around his shoulders like this. It doesn't hurt. Aizawa pulls his chair in front of Hitoshi's and starts adjusting the dials on the front panel, probably turning it down so Hitoshi won't blow out the windows if he talks.

Aizawa's eyes look a little too wide, there's just a crack in the blankness that's almost confusingly irritating while he works, and as soon as he's apparently done, not that Hitoshi can see what he even did, he lowers a hand towards the dials just to see if Aizawa will catch it. "Don't."

Aizawa narrows his eyes in warning, a look similar to the ones he gives to his students when they irritate him, but he's a bit too tired to pull it off. Hitoshi lets that hand drop to his lap, the other still comfortably resting on top of this hunk of metal that he knows is heavier than it feels.

Aizawa's expectation with this feels heavy enough.

"Does it work?" Hitoshi asks, purposefully asking a question. There's no flash of blindness, his words are his own words, but he waits for Aizawa to answer him because that's the real test at play.

There's a twitch at the corner of Aizawa's mouth that doesn't fully relax, remaining in that soft almost-smile. "Perfectly. Does it feel different for you?"

It does, in a way that Hitoshi can't even decide if he likes. He can hear how his voice warps just slightly, the soft echo from the speakers at either side of his neck. When he asked the question, it felt like he was talking to Eri instead of Aizawa, and he hardly noticed that there was a difference there before he tried it. But after Aizawa answered him, he felt nothing. No tug, no string, just words. As though he was quirkless.

But he could still speak.

"Not really. Just that I can't take control," Hitoshi answers, because Aizawa stares long enough for him to know he wants an answer. It still feels weird, to talk like this and know there's no way he could slip, but not entirely weird in a bad way. It feels too much like relief, after having to watch himself after he took control of Mirio like that. It feels like control, but just over himself.

The mask has never felt anything like this. "It will probably feel the same when you talk to Hizashi," Aizawa says, leaning back in his chair and slumping forward, like he always does. That weird half-smile is gone, but there's still too much that Aizawa's eyes betray before he says it. "But you haven't tried that yet. You seem like you're avoiding him."

"I'm not," Hitoshi argues, because that's insulting to think that he would. Even if he is avoiding Yamada. He presses a hand to the speaker on his right side, wondering why something so simple, so small makes all the difference with his quirk. "It's only for the test... right?"

Hitoshi's teeth find the inside of his lip after those words slip out, too small and too weak and too weird with the echo he can feel on his fingertips. Speaking freely like this, his chin and his mouth hidden from Aizawa's sight. If he dips his chin a little lower, his nose would be hidden too.

It's too loose to be the mask, it will never fit properly around his face, but it feels different from that. Trying to trust that if he says something that crosses an invisible line, Aizawa will tell him.

"It can be," Aizawa says, as though he can speak for Yamada. Somehow, his tone lightens oddly, his words are almost words that Yamada might say to him anyway. "Hizashi wouldn't force you to talk to him at all, if it was his choice. I think he understands how it might feel like a big change between you two. Something that can seem frightening."

"It's not—" Hitoshi's hands curl around the speakers, trying to find an edge to dig into, but none feel sharp enough. He knows fear. "It's not something I want. I'm not trying to make this difficult, or just..."

Aizawa's head tipping to the side, just the sight of that snaps something in Hitoshi's chest, because it's stupid. It's a mess. He can't explain it and he doesn't want to share it.

"Yamada said that when he couldn't talk... he was afraid that something bad would happen if he did. He would lose control of his quirk and hurt someone," Hitoshi says, and he feels more frustrated now remembering that than he did when he heard it, when he felt hopeless because Yamada didn't know it wasn't like that. He was more messed up than Yamada assumed he was. "It just felt like I couldn't, before. I wasn't afraid, I just couldn't speak."

Aizawa still just stares at him, still attentive it seems to whatever mess Hitoshi is failing to describe, but he can't bring himself to admit it. That it is like that now, but only with Yamada. And that feeling gets worse every time he looks at him, it just feels like he needs to run before he's torn apart from the inside. He can't stand to be around Yamada anymore.

He hates it.

“The test is on Friday afternoon. After you see the quirk specialist, the Commission representative will want you to try to use your quirk on Hizashi. To test it,” Aizawa says, and no one said that to him. It’s Wednesday- Thursday morning right now, tomorrow he has to test it, and that’s not enough time. “If you can’t, it will just be rescheduled. No one can make you speak. It’s fine-”

“It’s not,” Hitoshi argues, because this is stupid. He’s just an idiot who still can’t talk, and he’s surrounded by idiots who blindly see through that without seeing how stupid it is that he’s like this. It doesn’t make any sense. “Yamada isn’t going to be mad, or hurt me, and I know that. It’s just stupid-”

“It’s not,” Aizawa says, his hand rubbing the back of his neck as he leans forward, his elbow resting on his thigh. Looking closer, Hitoshi can see he looks tired, he hasn’t slept well. He probably wanted to go to sleep before now, before being pulled into Hitoshi’s stupid mess. “Fear, anger, sadness. They follow their own logic rather than our own. They control us more often than we’d like.”

Hitoshi knows that, and he’s tired of it. He shouldn’t be afraid in a place like this, when he’s tasted real terror. Yamada is nothing like Chisaki, nothing like Bug. Nothing like anyone he’s ever met before.

And it’s stupid. “Try not to avoid him tomorrow, as much as you’re comfortable with. You can talk to him, messaging him might be an easier option. There’s a difference between knowing logically, and knowing after confirmation. Hizashi won’t be upset with you.”

Messaging Yamada... what? That he still wants to be around him even when it feels like his skin is on fire? That he can speak to anyone but him, and expect Yamada not to take that as an insult? That he misses him, even worse than when he was stuck in that shack for three days, even when they’re in the same room?

“And he misses spending time with you,” Aizawa says, the perfect words to make Hitoshi feel like shit. Like less than shit, because even shit has a meaningful purpose, but Hitoshi truly has no purpose other than hurting anyone he cares about. “To the point that he seems to think that you like me better than him, which makes me worry that he’s losing his mind.”

That’s....

Not true.

But it’s more true than Hitoshi would like it to be.

He doesn’t like Aizawa. Aizawa is still a dick, a lot of the time. He has never been honest with his intentions or his goals, he’s never been easy to read, and every time that Hitoshi thinks he’s figured him out, he just changes to spite his efforts. Aizawa was supposed to be simple to understand, Hitoshi only had to help him with the investigation to make him happy, he only had to behave better than the students, but then Aizawa changes and says that he doesn’t need his help with the investigation, then he does, then he doesn’t care. He told his students to stay away from him, then he wanted him to be friends with them, then he didn’t want them to know he was at the dorm, then he wants him to make amends with them.

Aizawa is complicated and frustrating too much of the time.

But sometimes, he’s not horrible. Which is just worse.

And the way Aizawa’s eyebrow raises up, like that silence was telling when it’s only a sign of how exhausted Hitoshi is, it's probably the worst thing Aizawa's ever done to him. "Fine. I'll talk to him. But probably not, so don't get your hopes up."

Aizawa holds a hand out, and Hitoshi struggles to figure out what he wants, because Aizawa won't tell him that simply, before he feels the weight of the speakers again. Aizawa probably wants to put them up, since they don't belong to Hitoshi. They're probably important.

Hitoshi doesn't want to give them back, but he does, and misses the feeling of that heavy padding, that control beyond his own, as soon as he hands them over. He feels bare without it.

Hitoshi stands up just to pull Aizawa's chair back to his desk and sit down, it's the place he's been in for most of the night, and it's where his coffee cup is. If Aizawa has more addresses to look up, after going through his notes, they might be closer to finishing this.

"That's probably cold," Aizawa says, looking at Hitoshi's coffee. It is cold, but he's not going to be wasteful. "I'll start a fresh pot."

Well, if Aizawa is going to be wasteful, he might as well help him. And when Aizawa gathers up the rest of the files in his hand, the notepad and those weird compliment and complaint cards, before taking his still-full cup of tea, Hitoshi knows it shouldn't be time wasted at least.

He can get Aizawa up to speed, on everything that Hitoshi can tell him about The Miasma for now. Until he finds the warehouse with a black gate, and gray paint chipped away to red on the left side, on the edge of the coastline.

Until they find the address for the place where '27' grew up, his childhood home. Then, he can know exactly when he has to leave this one.

*

Hitoshi seemed to be dragging himself, the slight pause in caffeine intake taking its toll, and Aizawa noticed that he chose to sit on the couch instead of at the counter while Aizawa took to making a fresh pot of coffee. Without the regular schedule for school, or his patrols, Aizawa's only obligations today will be another training exercise for his class that he isn't required to supervise, but will, and the dorm shift tonight.

That leaves enough time to offer his assistance to Naomasa and Sansa to follow these new leads, and as Aizawa flips through the stack of reviews, he sees more and more reasons to.

In the right corner of each cover page, in Hitoshi's scrawl, the fate of each Number that had reviews is written. 'Dead,' 'Nomu,' 'I don't know.'

The unconfirmed are few and far between, and draw his interest more than in terms of raid strategies. These are the people that Hitoshi grew up with. People that might be victims, that might have victimized others, committed crimes before they found themselves marked with that number that replaced their names, that are still trapped in that organization with no escape.

The last pages, before the notepad, are the people responsible for every Number.

The sketch of Boss that Chisaki supplied, now with the full details of his quirk written on the side. 'Recall - Needs a vial of blood to pull a person back to him. Has timers in his office to keep track of when jobs are done. Might like the cold, just a rumor.'

Glitzzy's barest description of Memory, with the details of her quirk added later, now has a large messy scribble that might have been Hitoshi's attempt to sketch the woman himself, before he marked it out. 'Handles everything, clients and recruitment.' Sales as well, but Aizawa nearly forgets the urge to add that crime to these notes.

The frame from the hospital's surveillance footage, the best depiction of the woman who attempted to kill Hitoshi there, has a name at last. 'Bug - Maggot quirk. Trains everyone. Don't underestimate.'

The shortest notes, every character written more shakily, is evidence of one of the bravest acts Aizawa has ever seen. This woman has tortured Hitoshi, several times. Four times in the gruesome way he recounts, in the worst of his scars.

And he showed this picture to Hitoshi once. He did so blindly, and Hitoshi reacted so horribly, curling his fingers into his wrist hard enough to break skin and bleed, and Aizawa had no idea at the time. If he had.

He doesn't want this picture in his possession anymore. He doesn't want any of this in the same building that Hitoshi sleeps, that he finds safety. He doesn't want to look at it himself a moment longer.

Because he's already committed her face to memory, and he will remember her during the raid.

Aizawa glances at the first page on the notebook as the coffee pot chimes, finishing the brew cycle. A list of 'clients,' some names familiar. There's one that's not, on the first line, and it's not elaborated on like the others. "Hitoshi?"

Aizawa calls softly, still reading the dissimilarities between this line and every other. But there's only silence that answers him. Silence, Aizawa notes, that's not.

Hitoshi has fallen asleep, his head fallen on the armrest where his wild purple hair fans out like an offended fern, his arms curled in front of his chest and almost burrowed inside Hizashi's jacket. His feet are still planted on the floor, if he sleeps like that, his back will hurt from the uncomfortable angle.

Aizawa walks over to slowly gather the teenager's legs, and guide him to at least lay on the couch properly. Hitoshi stirs with a mix of a snort or sigh, his eyes barely opening just to close. To adjust himself and curl deeper inside the jacket, as though the dim light from the kitchen stove is offensive now.

Even if the couch is a poor substitute for a bed, Aizawa gathers the blanket on the back of the couch to fashion it into a slightly better one, laying it over the teenager gently. He might wake up if Aizawa tried to carry him to his own bed, and sleep is a precious enough thing for Hitoshi to seek tonight, after laying bare so many nightmares.

Aizawa goes back to the kitchen to tuck the paperwork under his arm, an empty coffee mug that once held tea in one hand, the entire pot of coffee in the other. Hitoshi has made a vast effort tonight, and Aizawa owes it in kind. To send all of this over to Naomasa and Sansa, compiling every note into the shared record, highlighting the aspects that weren't explored, especially the new names Hitoshi submitted.

Five hours of sleep, and plenty of paperwork to do, seems like an adequate punishment for neglecting his ward so far.

1 Year Wardsversary Special Chapter

Chapter Summary

October 13th marks the one year anniversary since Wards was first published! In celebration of that, we have an outtake chat section, picking up where Chapter 79 left off, where Shinsou logs into a chatroom filled with past versions of himself, to see how far he's come, as well as a glimpse into the future.

This chapter is not canon to Wards, and while I usually put special chapters like these in the Scrap Bin to prevent any confusion, I didn't want to lose the comments on it this time. <3

But the events in this chapter do not actually happen in the Wards timeline!

Hitoshi stared at the ceiling above him, Yamada's leather jacket warm against his skin, his legs still tangled in the blanket but he can't bring himself to move yet. Still holding out hope that he can fall back to sleep.

Nope, not that kind of night.

He turns his head to look at the pet fish again, knowing he should probably go back to his own bed. He should see if Aizawa made another pot of coffee, and if it's still warm. He shouldn't just keep staring, wasting his time, acting as though he's pinned down by the fabric wrapped around him or the exhaustion in his bones that won't let him sleep.

But all of that falls sharply away when he feels his phone vibrating, a message from a chat. Maybe it's Midoriya, telling him that he was putting on an act in front of Aizawa but he's not going to take what he did so lightly. Maybe it's Bakugo or Ashi, or the group chat coming back and his phone has just been messed up the past few days.

Instead, it's a new chat, from someone named 'Shinny.' Only Ashi calls him 'Shinny,' maybe she doesn't want to use the one that she has with him, but wants to talk to him on this one.

Hitoshi: Ashi?

Shinny: ashi!

Shinny: o yuor not ashi

Hitoshi: You're not Ashi either. Kaminari? Are you drunk?

Shinny: no im shinny. im 4 and ashi my bets frend

What the fuck? Ashido had to be playing some kind of game with him, just to make him feel bad. Lying to him, and it's just fucked up.

Hitoshi: You can be pissed off about what I did, but this is fucking bullshit. You're an asshole.

Shinny: :o BAD WORD. lendladi sed heros dont say bad word like butts or that stuff, yuor bad!

Hitoshi: Sure, I'm bad. I'm not a hero, and you can't be a hero either. Neither can Bakugo. Because you're all assholes.

Shinny: STOP SEYIN BAD WORD its my mommys phone im spose to talk to ASHI GO AWAY :(
:(

Hitoshi: Seriously, fuck off. Fuck you. Rules or no rules, the next time I see you you're fucking dead and Aizawa won't stop me. I hope you're having fun because this is such fucking 27 has entered the chat.

Hitoshi: Nice, we're going there? Bakugo, you are a villain, and you're the reason that the Symbol of Peace is just a withered old man who's fucking stupid, and you're a bigger idiot for having all of his merch that you're embarrassed by. Ashido, you're still dead, and I'm going to feed you your own fingers.

27: I don't know who you are, or what class you're in.

Hitoshi: What?

Shinny: I wanna talk to ashi :(
:(

27: If you're on this phone, you go to UA, but I don't know anyone named 'Hitoshi.' Or 'Shinny.' You know Ashido.

Shinny: YA that ashi!!!! where ashi i wanna sen faces tu her!!!

Hitoshi: Stop hiding behind those fake names and tell me who the fuck you are, you're going to pay for this.

27: This is the name I've used more often than the others. I'll tell you my name if you tell me how you know me.

Shinny: im in miss yoshis class!!! with ashi!!! my whole name shinsuo hitoshi my mommy n lendladi call me hitoshi n ashi call me shinny

Hitoshi: You know what? Fine. I'll play along. @27, why didn't any heroes save you if they're so great?

27: They saved Eri, that's all that matters.

Shinny: y not me?

Dog has entered the chat.

Dog: I don't have much time the 8 precepts of death are hurting a little girl named Eri, she's 3 years old, they're in Shibuya I'm not joking please help me

Hitoshi: what the fuck? What the fuck is happening????

Shinny: :o DOG YUO NEED HEROS CALL 111

Dog: I can't this is the only thing on the screen on Rikiya's phone please call them please please

27: What the fuck

Hitoshi: SERIOUSLY THIS IS FUCKED UP YOU NEED TO STOP DOING THIS SHIT OR I WILL STOP YOU PERMANENTLY. I'm going to show this to Aizawa if you don't fuck RIGHT off.

27: No no no please don't I was doing what Yamada said don't do that

Dog: JUST CALL THE POLICE THEY'RE MAKING BULLETS TO ERASE QUIRKS

Shinny: hitoshi STOP BENG MEAN UR SCARn Dog n 27!!!! Im gong tu tell my mommy!!!!

Hitoshi: Tell me the name of the gray stuffed cat you had to prove that this is real.

27: Tell me who you are first.

Dog: Mocha, NOW CALL THE POLICE

Shinny: :o i have mocha tu!!!!!!

Hitoshi: Okay.

Hitoshi: Okay.

Hitoshi: Fuck.

27: TELL ME WHO YOU ARE ALL OF YOU.

Hitoshi: This is.... A really weird dream. Where you're all me. Just at different times. And it's fucked up.

Hitoshi: But 'Dog,' I never took Rikiya's phone, you don't really exist. But stop worrying, the heroes are going to save you and Eri. You don't have to die. Also, Chisaki dies, so look forward to that.

27: He WHAT.

Hitoshi: '27,' Yamada doesn't actually want you to spy on people on the phone, I think he just wanted you to talk to people. Chisaki does die pretty soon and.... It's okay to cry on Yamada. He's fine with it, and it actually feels pretty nice to cry on someone.

Dog: Chisaki dies, and I don't have to have this name, and... I get a phone? Does Eri have a phone?

Hitoshi: Eri doesn't really need a phone, she can use anyone's phone. She's going to be really happy. I don't think this changes anything, but @Dog run towards the hero with the red cape during the raid when you see him. Don't let Chisaki grab you. It will solve A LOT of our problems.

27: What problems. And Eri can have this phone. And you're me, but you're going by that name.

Hitoshi: @27 You're pretty much only mute because the fusion made you into a Nomu, and you get Nemoto's quirk, and it's going to make you really sick. You're not broken, Chisaki just fucked us up one more time from beyond the grave, because he's that much of a dick. When you see him, put the knife somewhere that commission lady won't see it, you won't have to kill him but you're going to thank me later.

Shinny: your me but old??? AM I ASHIS WIFE YET???

Dog: I just have to get Eri to the hero with the red cape, right?

Hitoshi: Yes, you need to get Eri AND YOU to the hero with the red cape, his name is Mirio. He has permeability, he can hold off Chisaki while you both run. BOTH of you.

27: Shinny how old are you.

Shinny: 4! :)

Hitoshi: @Shinny, you need to tell Miss Yoshi or Ashi's parents that your mom is having problems taking care of you. Your dad used his quirk on her, it put worms inside her head that make it hard for her to make good decisions, and you need to do that soon.

27: Shinny, stop using your quirk, RIGHT NOW. It's hurting people, it's hurting your mom, even if your head itches just scratch your head and don't use it!

Dog: What are you talking about??? No, Shinny, use your quirk. Some messed up things are going to happen, but it's fine, because Eri needs you. Don't listen to them. And when you're bought by a man named Chisaki, don't stutter in front of him.

Hitoshi: 27, our quirk is.... It's fine to use sometimes. Not all the time, but sometimes.

Dog: What do you mean not all the time??? Am I hurting Eri?!

27: YES YOU ARE

Hitoshi: NO WE'RE NOT. 27, Eri is fine, our mom's problems are not our fault and there's nothing we can do about it. Don't try to see her, she's not going to fix you because she can't. Your name is 'Hitoshi,' it means 'person,' and you're a person.

27: No, Eri is a person. I'm a Number.

Dog: Right, Eri is a person. Who's Yamada? What's their quirk? Are they coming to save Eri?

Shinny: is eri our frend?

Dog: Eri is more than a friend. She's.... The best person you're ever going to meet.

27: Yamada.... Seems nice. Not as nice as Eri, but I think he's predictable. @Dog, get on Aizawa's good side sooner and stay there. Don't ruin this.

Hitoshi: 27, Yamada is great, stop being scared of him because he's never going to hurt you. Also, Aizawa is kind of a dick, but he's not your owner, he doesn't even have any power over you really, Yamada is in charge. Cook with him more often, and maybe I'll be better at it.

27: Look, I know you're saying you're me from the future, but Yamada could SCREAM and KILL ME. He's nice so far but I'm not taking any chances.

Dog: HE CAN??? And I get sold again??? Am I still with Eri?

Hitoshi: @27, Yamada COULD but he literally never would. He cares a lot about you. Also, if you haven't figured it out yet, you're going to have to talk to Chisaki for the investigation, but Aizawa LITERALLY doesn't know anything. Tell him that Miasma is in a warehouse by the sea

Hitoshi: Shit no wait, go along with it, stab Chisaki, 127 is going to finish him off. THEN tell Aizawa everything you know.

27: Okay. I'm going to stab Chisaki. I can do that, easy.

Dog: NO WE CAN'T??? Did I go completely insane with the 'Nomu' or whatever?

27: Yamada cuts our hair! It feels great, and the cough goes away too! AND THERE'S SO MUCH FOOD Dog this really is a huge step up for us.

Hitoshi: Dog, don't drink the death coffee. Don't eat Toshinori's cookies (also, don't be afraid of him, he's quirkless and pretty nice. And kind of stupid). Also, don't look at Midoriya, or Izuku. Green haired guy with a lot of scars on his arms, don't. Look. At. Him. Ignore him, he's absolutely insane.

27: Izuku seems fine. What happens to that.

Hitoshi: He seems fine, he seems nice even. It's because he's insane. He's insanely nice. You can throw him into a wall and he still wants to be friends with you.

Dog: Sounds like a great friend, I don't see what the problem is.

27: YOU THREW HIM INTO A WALL???? Aizawa probably killed you, you're trying to get me killed sooner!

Hitoshi: Aizawa can't kill us, stop worrying about it. He literally can't even hurt us, not beating or torturing or anything.

Dog: You're telling me... That the heroes save Eri, and she's happy, and she has a lot of phones. And we live in a place with a lot of food, a nice guy named Yamada who cuts our hair, and our new owner.... Doesn't hurt us? At all? Not even a beating if we hurt some guy named 'Izuku'?

Hitoshi: Basically, but he doesn't own us. After the rescue, we're.... Not free, but we're a person. We're going to bring down The Miasma and make Bug and everyone pay for what they did.

27: No we're not!!! I'm not getting myself killed like that! You KNOW what's going to happen if I talk!

Hitoshi: Yeah, I do. Because I'm you from the future. And guess what? Miasma is going to try to silence us anyway, and we're fine! 127 tried to kill me AGAIN and he's probably dead now because he failed. And that's because I DIDN'T tell Aizawa anything, so if you start on this before that coffee interrogation, they probably won't be able to do that.

Dog: The Miasma tries to kill us after the heroes rescue Eri.... What if I stay with Chisaki? She'll be safer that way, right?

Hitoshi: There's no chance of that happening, but Eri needs us at UA, so don't try it. @Dog, what you need to do is tell Sir Nighteye at the bookstore where Eri is, stop skipping meals, Brainwash Nemoto and Deidoro and maybe a few others if you can, follow Chisaki until the hero with the red cape shows up, and RUN BEHIND HIM WITH ERI. Mirio can probably tell you where to take her to keep her safe, he'll deal with Chisaki, and maybe this time Eri won't be scared at all because you'll be there from the start.

27: Yes, do that. Also, there's a guy who will come up to you on the first day of school, his name is 'Monoma' I think. Don't. Mess. With. Him. Ignore him completely, don't let Eri talk to him. He's up to no good, he wants to steal our quirk and kill people.

Hitoshi: Good advice, but he's not trying to kill people with our quirk, he's just weird. Everyone at UA is pretty weird, but some of them are nice, and no one is trying to kill you. @27, literally no one is trying to kill us, trust me.

Dog: How many people are weird? I don't think Eri should be around people that are weird.

27: 'Hitoshi,' I don't know how you could possibly know that, or how you could forget everything, but there is a point where they could decide we're not worth it. We're only here for the investigation, but if we play our cards right, it could be more. I have a plan.

Hitoshi: Oh fuck, that plan. It's not going to work, just let that go now and save yourself a lot of trouble. Yamada wants you to stay, Aizawa doesn't, nothing is going to change that. They're not going to kill or hurt you for anything, but don't get your hopes up. Just stick to my plan, go with the Chisaki interview, stab him there but don't kill him, tell Aizawa everything after that. Remember that our mother isn't going to fix us, but stop worrying about it. The pork culet bowl that Mrs. Midoriya made was probably pretty great, don't start crying over it.

Shinny: why don yuo like my mommy nemore?

27: She sold us because of our quirk, because YOU wouldn't stop using it.

Hitoshi: Don't tell him

Hitoshi: Don't tell us that! @Shinny, I know you still like our mother because you don't realize what's going on or what's going to happen, maybe she's still a good person but she's going to make some big mistakes and you don't deserve them. Ashi's parents will probably treat us better. Maybe you can call Yamada's radio show and still meet him. Does Present Mic still have a radio show?

Shinny: :o MICCI YEAH. Im micci my dad love presem mic! I liek KKP and presem mic kinda, i got voice changr fer birthday!!!!

Hitoshi: Cool.... You can also talk through that voice changer, and you won't be able to use your quirk. You should do that when you're having trouble controlling it. And Present Mic is really nice, I hope you can still meet him. And Eri. Tell him about Eri when you're.... 13 years old, I think. That she's at the 8 Precepts of Death, and she needs to be rescued.

Dog: Is that how old I am? 13? I feel older. But yes, RESCUE ERI. That's the only thing you need to remember, Shinny.

27: Just a voice changer stops it, right. Not a muzzle.

Hitoshi: Yeah, Bug is also an asshole for not figuring that out, not that she wanted to. If Shinny fails, @Dog, remember what I said. Take care of yourself more, so you can be there for Eri. She needs you. You feel older because you're kind of dying constantly, you'll feel WAY better after this.

27: You really want to avoid everything, The Miasma and everything. Even 50.

Hitoshi: Right, @Shinny, there's a bad group of villains that are called 'The Miasma,' they're in a big warehouse by the sea, you can call Present Mic and tell him about that, and how they're going to kidnap a lady named 'Furokage Mizuki,' she has a shadow projection quirk. She's very nice, and she needs to get rescued by a hero before you turn 9.

27: How old am I.

Hitoshi: 16, but Bakugo is going to tell you that anyway. Also, Bakugo is a dick, you can treat him more like a dick. But, he also has some issues that you do, and he can help you deal with your issues. Don't tell him that he's a friend like Rikiya was, because he's a WAY better friend than that, and he's going to get offended. And don't eat the hot peppers or drink the milk, you'll know what I mean when it happens.

Shinny: AM I STILL ASHIS WIFE OR NOT?????

27: Ashido.... Really knows me? That was me before everything happened.

Hitoshi: Yes, the missing child poster, the video, that's you. @Shinny, I still know Ashi but.... We're not married right now. I'm... kind of an idiot, and if you do things right, maybe I won't be one.

Dog: Things are going to get complicated, aren't they?

27: You have no idea. Sometimes, I miss being you.

Hitoshi: That's fucked up, but yeah. Things are going to get complicated, but you definitely won't miss it for long, 27. It's also going to get better than you can even imagine right now, you have no idea how great things can turn out.

Dog has left the chat.

Shinny: by dog!!!

27: Is Dog okay, am I okay, did everything just get ruined what if I die what if you killed me by killing dog

Hitoshi: He just left, or I just left??? This is just a really weird dream, I'm fine so you're fine. Stop worrying all the time, I know you don't trust the heroes or anything, but they're stupider than you think and they're not going to hurt you. They actually want to keep you safe because they're nice people, and you've never really met that many people with good intentions before so it's hard to believe it. But they are nice, I've actually been able to avoid the investigation for about a month and they didn't kill me. I tried to choke out Aizawa and he didn't kill me. So stop worrying, and please fuck with them more. They deserve it.

27: Why do they deserve it if they're nice, if they're like 50.

Hitoshi: Not everyone that's nice is like 50, even if they kind of are. It's confusing, but seriously, you can get away with a lot of stuff so try it out. Have fun with it.

27 has left the chat.

Shinny: by 27!!! i hop yuo hab fun!!!

Hitoshi: Hey, Shinny? Some bad stuff might still happen to us. I'm sorry about that, but try not to blame yourself. You're a pretty decent kid, you don't deserve it. Never stop trying to get out, because you'll be proud of that. You probably won't remember that, but try to. When everything gets dark, tell yourself you don't deserve this.

Shinny: k yuor kinda nice no. N yuor me n old. i bets frend with ashi??? n oder pepl??? N presem mic???? Mandlay??

Hitoshi: Mandalay is nice, we do meet her. And Present Mic. And we are good friends with Ashi and Bakugo, and other people. Until I kind of get stupid. So I hope you don't turn into me.

Shinny: :(don b stubid! ashi the bets!!!! Tell ashi yuor sorry n eat all redhis n hold hand!!!

Hitoshi: I did something too stupid for that already, but remember what I said. It's not your fault, don't believe the things they want you to believe, even if you have to act like you do.

Hitoshi: Hug Ashi for me if you can.

Shinny: ok!!!

Shinny has left the chat.

Shinsou has entered the chat.

Hitoshi: Cool, hey asshole? Our mom isn't going to fix shit, don't bother lying to Toshinori, your name is 'Hitoshi' and that means person and Yamada and Aizawa are fine with calling you that. Eri does it sometimes too, and it's great. And we love her, that's the word for it.

Shinsou: Oh, huh. Wow.

Shinsou: Yeah, I... got that already? It's just easier to go by 'Shinsou' in some cases, less confusing. You're 16 right now, right?

Hitoshi:How old are you?

Shinsou: 27, lol. It's a weird year, you can probably imagine why. So, you met mom for the first time, I imagine you're still a ward? No therapy yet?

Hitoshi:holy fuck.

Hitoshi: Yes, and... I just gave Aizawa everything I know about the Numbers, I still haven't found the warehouse. I haven't had the test with Yamada, Eri's birthday is this Sunday. What should I get her? When do I have to leave?

Shinsou: Oh no, you just threw Midoriya into a wall for the first time, didn't you? Oh that's not a fun time. Ohhhh you're in for some rough times, but you'll get through it.

Hitoshi: ??? Explain??? First time???? What is going to happen to me???

Shinsou: Stop worrying so much about Eri's birthday, she's going to have a great time and she's going to love your present. You're going to have a great time too. Stop worrying about your quirk so much, it's not going to affect Yamada AT ALL. Actually, you're just a huge ball of worry at this point, try to stop?

Shinsou: Oh no, this is the first 'I hate Aizawa' phase, isn't it? Just remembering it makes me want to send him some more cupcakes. I guess... It's actually pretty good for you, or us, with this whole 'angry' thing, but try to just accept it? You can be pissed off sometimes and still come back from it, you're not a 'monster,' you're just feeling things for the first time and you're finally realizing that you don't want to be treated like literal shit. Nut up and apologize to everyone, they're basically going to be cool with you. You're in for.... Some TIMES, but try not to be so stupid? Please? I'm still suffering from some dumb shit you pulled.

Hitoshi: What DUMB SHIT? Maybe we can avoid it.

Shinsou: Probably not, but.... Actually? I take that back, I'm not telling. Even if I'm embarrassed by some of the stuff you pulled, I'm at peace with it. I wouldn't take it back.

Hitoshi: Fine, but seriously, tell me when this is over. When I have to leave UA. That's the only thing I want to know, so I can stop worrying about it.

Shinsou:Nah, it's better if you don't know. It'll take a few years for you to realize this, but the journey is worth it. Plenty of stories to tell now, and I am so boring, now that I realize it. Oh, you still hate the facial hair right now, don't you? A soul patch looks great, don't let Eri tell you any different. Actually, CHERISH these years, Eri is.... Ohhhh she's going to change. She's going to be a terror when she hits preteen, please don't blame yourself to the point that we have a mental breakdown, this is all hormones and none of our fault.

Hitoshi: We still know Eri when she's that age?

Shinsou: Yep! Yeah, that's actually one thing that will probably help you, stop worrying about never seeing Eri again. Worry that she's going to become too powerful, because now she is. She's going to replace the Hero Ranking Billboard at this point.

Hitoshi: Good.

Shinsou: NOT good. You.... I know you can't wrap your mind around this yet, but Eri can actually be a little mean??? She bullies me so much on Twitter now. OH, but we have so many cats now! You still haven't gone to a cat cafe yet, but try not to cry. Also, it's totally okay to cry every time you feel happy, we're still getting used to feeling those horrible 'emotions' and stuff.

Hitoshi: But we get over it?

Shinsou: Yeah, we're going to pull through! I'm actually a pretty functional member of society at this point, so chin up! Stop worrying.

Shinsou: Actually, feel free to 'chin tuck,' I guess. Just try to be comfortable whenever you can? Yeah, we're... going to face some consequences later on. You still can't feel how bad your neck has been messed up, and I am so jealous right now. But not really, you've still got a lot of shit to go through.

Hitoshi: And you're not going to help me with that shit at all, nice. Very nice.

Shinsou:You do realize you're calling yourself an asshole, even if you don't say it.

Hitoshi: I don't have to say that I'm the stupidest asshole I know when I already know it, you're just the more experienced asshole.

Shinsou: I'm a dumb bitch with terrible taste, I will never change, I will never improve, that is a promise.

Hitoshi: That's a meme, right?

Shinsou:OH BOY.

Shinsou: Oh, the physical pain you've caused me.

Hitoshi: WE HAVE BIGGER CONCERNS RIGHT NOW

Shinsou: You're right, you're right. It's a meme, congrats. You've only been in the real world for a couple months, and I am proud of you. You're going to make me pretty squishy, but yeah, I'm proud of pretty much everything that you've done so far, because it is rough going right now.

Hitoshi: You're proud of me for being a dick to everyone and literally having no friends?

Shinsou: Yep! Gold star for you, for being the tiny little trauma baby falling out of your crib and landing on your head, but trying to assert boundaries and stuff for the first time, and believing you can tell other people what to do and how to treat you. You fucked up so hard, but you tried, so gold star.

Shinsou: Tap to download 22kB

Hitoshi: I know that meme too.

Shinsou: I know, you're so smart and talented.

Hitoshi: You're an asshole.

Shinsou: Take a deep breath, breathe this in. Believe it, even if you're physically allergic to this kind of thing right now: I AM proud of you, because you are pretty great, you're doing swell even if you are fucking up, but you're the best at fucking up and if YOU don't fuck up, you won't learn from it, and you'll never get to be me.

Shinsou: Me, the fantastic dumpster fire who recently passed the 10 year mark on therapy, has tried pretty much every psychiatric medication in stock (MAOIs don't work too great, just a heads up!), still hasn't successfully worked full time at any job and I'm still terrified that I'm not in the right career, and I'm also scared that this relationship isn't going to work out because I am still a trash human being with more baggage than an airport can handle.

Shinsou: But, we have 5 cats! And less to deal with! Eventually!

Hitoshi:I still can't really believe I live that long. Or that Eri doesn't hate me. What's the name of our stuffed cat?

Shinsou: Mocha, still sitting pretty in the middle of my bed. You probably can't believe it, but yeah. We're alive, not... for lack of trying to do the opposite sometimes, but we're alive. So you're going to be alive. And you should try to enjoy this life, stop worrying so much, trust Aizawa and Yamada know what they're doing and that they care about you. Eri loves you, even if you worry that you've messed her up for life. Seriously, have you ever considered what would have happened if you weren't there? Chisaki, raising Eri? Gold star right there, you raised a kid while you were still a kid dealing with so many issues and the constant threat of death, and sometimes dying, so GOLD. FUCKING. STAR. Aizawa, Yamada, and Nezu are to blame for what happened to her afterwards.

Hitoshi: What happened afterwards???

Shinsou: She realized her power. That's what happened. She realized she has all these heroes at her bidding, she realized she had Nezu wrapped around her finger. She got a Twitter account, it's verified and everything. She's too powerful now.

Shinsou: Aaaaand she wants me to bring her chocolate, even though it's 2 AM on a school night. Even though I'm in a different city. Even though I JUST got ready for bed.

Shinsou: So, duty calls. So remember, you're doing fantastic because even though you're a completely embarrassing disaster, you're going through some SHIT that most people would turn tail and run away from, and thanks for doing that. You're not 'stupid,' just delete that word from your vocabulary, because you're actually pretty close to genius levels?? Do you even realize that going from elementary school to high school level education in a matter of months is INSANE? You are a beast, never forget that.

Shinsou: Also, dropkick Bakugo for me. He works too much for me to do it, but he called Frappachino ratty. And if you're still afraid of Midoriya, never forget that fear. He IS insane, powered by a fusion cell of friendship. But, you'll learn to love him for it.

Shinsou: Love you, you dumb bitch baby full of trauma <3

Shinsou has left the chat.

Hitoshi waited, just to see if there was another horrifying version of himself that would enter this chat. But it just disappeared from his phone, showing all the other ones he can't bring himself to open.

Just a weird dream, he knows, a dream that changes nothing.

But the idea that he'll start talking like Kaminari when he's older is horrifying enough to be a nightmare.

*

'27'

Delete.

'He didn't know'

Delete.

The writer sighs, staring at a once again blank Google Doc page, with just a working title now, '8 Precepts of Death AU.' She knows this is just going to be a little project for herself, just to get the ideas out of her head and have something to read instead of just imagining all the time. Even if she has big plans, she's also pretty sure this will turn out worse than the Kamisama Kiss Rewrite AU. Maybe she can keep herself from spinning off the rails until chapter five this time. She has a plot outline and everything.

She just has to start writing it, just write that first sentence. But she can't figure out anything that isn't stupid.

"You've been sitting here for an hour, you know." An irritatingly high pitched voice makes her jump, and apparently she's been sitting here long enough to have a full blown psychotic episode, because she sees herself with longer hair that's mostly blonde. Like she dyed her hair blonde, then let her roots grow way too far out before she got a pixie cut, but it kind of looks nice. "What?"

"I'm looking at myself, so I'm either having a completely new form of a mental breakdown, or this is some weirdly self-indulgent method of breaking the fourth wall down to the foundation and then getting a super-powered laser to drill through to the molten center of the earth to make sure that no wall could ever be built in its place again," the struggling writer says, not yet aware that this is an almost horrifying piece of self-indulgence and fourth wall breaking, almost like her one-year-old self is trying to top the April Fool's Day chapter. "Why is your-my. Hair long. Why?"

"Well, we're still working that office job, still part time which sucks, but I'm kind of okay with it? I can just wear a ponytail, and Grace did a great job on this balayage," the older writer says, finally explaining to a very uncultured younger version of herself why her hair was only partially blonde, and that it was on purpose. "So, I could tell you The Fuckening that is 2020, if we're really going to play this situation for straight instead of giggles, but I kind of feel like we could break way more walls than just four, and I kind of intend to keep this piece pretty short anyway. A little poetic."

"Uh-huh, cool. Cool. I should probably tell my girlfriend that I'm having a psychotic episode right now, but I can't afford to take off work to go inpatient. Kevin would have to take over all of my accounts-"

"Oh god," the older writer says, shaking her head with her hands covering her face. "You're still working as a janitor too, oh boy. As crazy as this might sound, you can actually live only working part time, instead of 60 hours a week. And it is still absolutely insane that you want to write this fic while you're working so much, but-"

"One, you're crazy, I have to work two jobs just to scrape by so I'd appreciate it if you could just-leave or something, I can't afford to hallucinate right now," the struggling writer says, looking back to her computer. "Oh god, this is a mistake, this is stressing me out already so I should just give up on this-"

"Whoa, do not!" the older writer says, waving her hands back and forth. "Dude, I just got another message about how your fic impacted and resonated with a reader, you seriously have no idea what this is going to turn into."

"What?" the struggling writer asks, eyebrows furrowing. "I'm not... I'm not publishing this for anyone to read, I know how it is with me. I know I'm not even going to finish this, I've never finished a multi-chapter anything. Not original, not fanfiction, I just... I'm not really a writer."

"Oh jeez," the older writer sighs. "You kind of are a writer, because you write things, even if we.... Still haven't finished a single multi-chapter project. But, this one, we're definitely finishing, even if it's taken over a year and pretty much the majority of that year is spent writing."

"A year?!?" the struggling writer asks, and probably shouldn't yell when she's trying to hide this apparent break from reality from her girlfriend who's playing Overwatch downstairs. "A year and I'm not done with this? How long is this really going to take?"

“Well, probably less than a year and a half? I’ve got a goal for a million words, you’re not quite crazy enough to commit to that right now, but you see that outline? Yeah, you’re not getting all that done for any less than a million,” the older writer says, patting the struggling writer’s shoulder. “And, you actually are going to publish this, Soba is going to be extremely nice and give you permission, you’re going to be a validation addict, and it’s... it’s a whole ride, I could go on about it, but this story is going to make people cry-”

“I don’t want to make people cry,” the struggling writer protests, too much honestly. “I just... I have this idea, I can’t stop thinking about it. And I want to read it for myself, and maybe... maybe it can be kind of meaningful for me. But if I publish it, then people are going to be disappointed when I don’t finish it. Because I never finish anything.”

“You never try to finish anything, because you don’t believe in yourself,” the older writer says, struggling not to make a Naruto reference that would only barely make them cringe more than the really lame emotional spiel she’s already started. “Look, we’ve been through the recovery process, this was kind of just a nice way of showing off how powerful those anniversary ‘check-in’s can be. It’s been a year since I first published Wards- which, is the shorthand for the title you’re going to settle on in a panic, even if it’s not clever or poetic, but you’re going to thank yourself because that weird ‘Aizawa’s angsty teenage poem, The Love of Broken Children is a Throttling Weed’ thing isn’t going to work out. But anyway, you don’t believe in yourself as a writer, but right before you publish the first chapter of this fic, you’re going to make yourself a deal.”

“What deal?” the struggling writer asks, mostly because paragraph breaks are a great way of drawing emphasis to something that’s poignant and needs to stand out.

“You’re going to tell yourself, ‘If I finish this, I’m a writer. I’ll have finished one work, and then nothing can ever stop me after that. I’ll always have this to look back on, and tell myself that I can do it,’” the older writer says, unable to keep a wry smile off her face. “But, that’s luckily kinda bullshit. I think I’m a writer now, even if I haven’t finished Wards yet. And I’m actually confident enough to pull this kind of self-indulgent hijink off, even if I have to keep checking the page count to know how long this is going on, because I don’t want to be too self indulgent and I have to keep reminding myself that if people get bored, they don’t have to read it.”

“People... are really going to read this?” the struggling writer asks, because it’s insanely hard to believe. “I mean... I think it would be good to get a more realistic depiction of trauma recovery out there, and I like the idea of my story. And the idea of people reading it. But I’m so going to fuck this up, I can’t finish anything.”

“Funny enough, readers have said they like your unfinished stories too. And you like reading your unfinished works, you like reading other unfinished works. Unfinished is okay.... Even if we’re going to finish Wards even if it kills us,” the older writer says, making an oath and swearing it once again, practically in blood. “Some amazing people will read your fic, and... not to be terribly emotional about it, but you’re actually going to make friends? Amazing friends, amazing people, like I said before, this is an amazing ride and you wouldn’t want to give it up for the world. There’s not even really words that can convey how much it means to have people who connect with you through Wards, even if you always drop that ‘Thanks for reading and enjoying’ in every comment, it means so much more than that.”

The struggling writer takes note of that signature, to thank every single comment for being made, for letting her know that there are actually people who read her work, and enjoy it. How grateful she is to know that.

The older writer just nods to herself, knowing that she’s a blatant validation addict who’s still awed that people read her work, who enjoy it, and is still so grateful to receive those comments. “But, what’s that Lord of The Rings quote? ‘The journey of a million miles begins with the first step?’”

“I’m not going to look it up, but it sounds right,” says the struggling writer, who should know it after reading the books twice and watching the extended cut movies hundreds of times. “One small step, just the first sentence. Just something that.... Isn’t ‘It was a dark and stormy night.’”

“Nah, just put that down,” the older writer says, leaning over to look at the screen. “Type it out, ‘It was a dark and stormy night,’ and keep going. You’re in Google Doc, you’re not publishing yet.”

“Okay,” the struggling writer says, rolling her eyes.

‘It was a dark and stormy night.’

Should she begin at The Miasma? She should probably explain what The Miasma is, but she doesn’t want to cover too much of what Soba already wrote, so it needs to start at the 8 Precepts. But still explain why Shinsou is there, how he meets Eri. How to write that scene.

It’s probably not the best idea to go right into dialogue without setting the scene, but she kind of did set the scene with the dark and stormy night.

It’s not like anyone is going to read this anyway, it’s just the rough draft. No one’s really going to read this, she’s just hallucinating a severe fourth wall break.

“Well, little brother, I hope you make a good first impression,” 127 says, his scaly arms draped over the passenger seat. “Very few get sold, and very few get sold so quick.”

“That kind of sounds like 127 is already staring at Shinsou, like he’s turned around and staring at him the whole time. And maybe I should keep some of 127’s physical attributes hidden?” the struggling writer asks, but the older writer shrugs.

“This is just the rough draft, you’re going to edit this part a lot. Too much, honestly, even if it turns out basically the same. Baby words, you.... Don’t know yet, but you will,” the older writer says, tapping the chair before she goes back to writing Chapter 84, dedicated to not spending too much time on this little anniversary oneshot.

Besides, it’s not like anyone is going to read this anyway.

How to Vent: Badly

Chapter Summary

Monoma tries once again to befriend Shinsou, to devastating consequences coming with a startling revelation for Shinsou. Shinsou has new concerns about Eri, and Yamada has a plan to steal his ward away from the dorm to talk on a 'secret mission.'

Chapter Notes

Trigger Warnings: Dissociation, 50 mention

Previously on Wards of UA: Monoma has been giving Eri and Shinsou small gifts for every day in December as part of an advent calendar, though Shinsou threatened to pickle his fingers and eat them if Monoma bothered him again. Shinsou told Eri that his pet fish's name is 'Fishio,' but he calls it 'Ten' privately, after a Number that he was close to at The Miasma. Monoma tried to rescue Shinsou from 127's attack on campus, though Shinsou ran away from those rescue efforts. Uraraka told Monoma that if he should stop trying to befriend Shinsou if he's just trying to buy his friendship with gifts rather than respecting his feelings. In the last chapter, Aizawa went to the office in the dorm to work on the information Shinsou provided about The Miasma. Yamada knows that Shinsou seems to be no longer selectively mute as he's talked to Aizawa and the 1-A students, but Shinsou is refusing or unable to talk to him, still using JSL. Eri used Rewind on Shinsou once before, to heal his ankle injury, but Rewound him 4 days back to the point where Shinsou had just been attacked by 127 and was bleeding from his old mask. Yamada recently learned about the Bug torture. Shinsou's previous username in Midoriya's chat was 'Brainwashio,' after a villain character in the Kawaii Kawaii Pussycat show that had a similar quirk to his. When 50 was alive, she was able to sneak Shinsou a red bean taiyaki while he was still captive at The Miasma. Shinsou reacted badly to Midoriya pointing out that he might have lashed out at 1-A because he was scared of them getting hurt by being associated with him. Nezu can control the vent robots to talk through them, which has convinced Shinsou that the vent robot above his room is sentient. Eri was able to stop her quirk on her own while she was at the Ketsubutsu training camp, which helped her confidence with her quirk. Aoyama is nicknamed 'Other Yama,' since Yamada has already been given the 'Yama' nickname, and Jirou ('Kyou') makes Aoyama sing. Shinsou also worries that if he talks to other people, Eri might be upset because he was only able to talk to her, and she might feel less special to him. Eri calls apple turnovers 'apple overs.' Shinsou's sign name for Aizawa is 'Zawa coffee.'

Hitoshi woke up on the couch, with a twinge in his neck and a blanket only barely covering his legs, the inside of Yamada's leather jacket sticking to his arms, and an annoying knock on the door. He thinks about waiting until someone else answers it, before he realizes that whoever it is will see that he's wearing Yamada's jacket and probably wonder why, an answer that Hitoshi doesn't have for himself, and springs up to answer the door, still feeling half-asleep.

It's Quirk Thief.

It's actually amazing that he could be stupid enough to overlook the clear warning Hitoshi gave him before, and look stupider with his fingers tangled in his hair like he was trying to comb his bangs into place. Hitoshi almost closes the door on him, out of mercy, before he sees what Quirk Thief has in his hands.

Another one of those Sailor Moon wands that Eri wanted, possibly the last one to complete her collection, and a pair of coffee cups held in a cardboard tray. The last coffee that Quirk Thief got him from that shop was underwhelming in taste, but it was purple, so he didn't hate it. And he wouldn't hate getting another one.

He just hates Quirk Thief, a feeling that worsens when he finally sputters out a nervous greeting after jerking his fingers free. "Good morning, Shinsou! It's surprising that you're awake this early, as the winter break has given many a reason to be lax with routine. Not myself, of course."

Hitoshi blinks, and realizes that what he really wants is to take what Quirk Thief has, and leave him out here. Just get the coffee, retrieve Eri's gift, and not put up with anything else from him.

But if he does that, Quirk Thief will learn that he can bother him for that amount of time without consequences. And Quirk Thief deserves to learn that his actions have consequences when he violates clear warnings.

So he opens the door and steps aside for Quirk Thief to predictably invite himself in. Quirk Thief seems to know he's already treading on thin ice with that, that weird smile getting smaller and pinched and more nervous, almost flinching when the door shuts. But he hasn't learned the reason he should be nervous yet.

"Ah, Fishie and Fishio are doing well," Quirk Thief comments pointlessly, as though the observation needs to be acknowledged as an invitation to sit at the kotatsu that 10 and Fishie's aquarium sits on top of. Hitoshi doesn't acknowledge it, or anything else that Quirk Thief mutters about as he makes his way to the kitchen, to gather what he needs.

His knife is probably still in the office, but he finds a santoku knife that will do just fine. Yamada is the only person Hitoshi has seen eating the pickles in the refrigerator, and he doesn't want to misuse them, so he grabs a jar of pickled radishes and a spoon, fishing most of the radish slices out into a bowl so that just the pickling juice remains.

He won't need to use it to enforce a threat. Probably.

The look on Quirk Thief's face when he sits down on the opposite side of the kotatsu with the knife and pickling jar seems to promise it won't be necessary.

But the white-faced shock fades too easily when he looks at the coffees he carelessly placed on top of the fish aquarium. "W-well, you might notice that this is a little different from the advent calender gifts I usually bring. Since you seemed to take a bit of offense to that, apparently with some good reason."

Quirk Thief takes a drink for himself, and holds one out for Hitoshi with an arm held over the top of the aquarium. Hitoshi pointedly stares at his fingers wrapped around the cup, picking up the knife and twirling it a few times, pointlessly. Testing Quirk Thief's resolve.

Quirk Thief remembers. He's not forgetful, but he is stupid. And he's still holding out the coffee.

Hitoshi is impressed enough to take it, and takes a sip to hide his smirk when Quirk Thief audibly sighs. He's not as unaffected as he pretended to be, and that makes him entertaining, at least.

"I want to make a few things clear, as apparently, my actions have left things up to the wrong interpretation," Quirk Thief says, rambling pointlessly while Hitoshi recognizes the taste of taro and can see hints of that purple hue through the hole in the lid, but he tastes something different along with that. Salt, maybe, but it's not unpleasant. "I would like to get to know you better, to be your friend, so to speak. I'm not trying to make you uncomfortable with the advent calendar gifts, or trying to 'buy your friendship' in any way, that was just my first method of extending a friendly hand. Offering companionship and all, and demonstrating what a caring and generous individual I am."

"You want to be friends with a criminal with a half-feral appearance who needs a demonstration to introduce themselves," Hitoshi asks without asking, reminding Quirk Thief of his first impression of him. He doesn't know if the reminder or speaking it is what makes Quirk Thief's eyes go wide like that before he remembers himself, or if it's both. "Or, you just want to steal my quirk. One sounds more reasonable than the other, even though you're putting too much effort into this."

Quirk Thief's mouth drops open, a finger raised accusingly before his brain fashions whatever argument he wants to use just for the sake of argument, or saving face. "I was mistaken and ill-informed about the situation that day, and I've since apologized. I don't have any ulterior motives towards being friends with you, this is friendship for friendship's sake. And you can't deny you need friends, especially one like myself. Someone who has always tried to look out for you and quite recently put themselves in harm's way to rescue you when you were attacked."

Quirk Thief takes another sip of coffee, eyes narrowed in accusation. Accusing Hitoshi of losing the argument that easily, and expecting that 'friendship' to be offered as a result. He didn't ask to be rescued, and Quirk Thief just got in the way, putting himself in danger recklessly. "You just want my quirk."

Quirk Thief wrinkles his nose, before he looks up at the ceiling like he's frustrated that Hitoshi isn't buying his lies so easily. "No, in fact I don't want your quirk. Whatever mysterious quirk you have, whatever it does, I'm quite fine with my own."

"Because you can use it to copy mine," Hitoshi reminds, as if Quirk Thief thinks he's stupid enough to forget that. Since Quirk Thief laid eyes on him on the first day of school, he's been scheming to find some way to Copy his quirk. The first time he caught him off guard, it seemed painful for him to have it, and he couldn't use it. The next time, he was invited to take his quirk but couldn't, because he was sick. Then Quirk Thief tried to take it forcefully, then stooped to these gifts. He tried to win Hitoshi at the Joint Training Exam like he could be bought that cheaply.

It's irritating, Quirk Thief is irritating, and short of murder, there's very few ways of getting rid of him. But Hitoshi would love to find some way of getting away with that, especially when Quirk Thief manages to fold his hands together in a way that's condescending. "Fine. Fine, I like copying the quirks of people that I take an interest in, you don't like that, I get that now. I swear upon my sweet Grandmama's grave that I will never attempt to Copy your quirk for as long as I live, if you would like to let that go."

Hitoshi looks at the hand wafted outward towards the fish tank, the hand folded dramatically over Quirk Thief's heart. The sweater he's wearing looks soft, and that's too distracting when he's beginning to doubt if the coffee was decaf or not. He doesn't doubt Quirk Thief's ability to trick him. "Is your 'Grandmama' even dead?"

"No, but she moved to Belgium and stopped inviting me to vacation with her during the summer, so she's metaphorically dead to me, and it's a dramatic turn of phrase I thought would convince you,” Monoma answers, before his eyes glaze over and his hand drops on the fish tank loudly, apparently hard enough to break him out of the control.

Funny, as much as Monoma tried to use his quirk without warning, he seems angry about Hitoshi doing the same. Hitoshi takes another drink in search of something that will make him feel awake enough, while the annoying blonde flusters.

“That is your quirk?!” Monoma asks, too loud which Hitoshi tries to remind with a glare, but too quickly he seems to calm down, his hand resting under his chin as he sniffs, trying to regain the semblance of control over this situation. He doesn’t have it. “Well, that is a vocal type emitter, falling quite in line with Quirk Rejection Syndrome, which I’m glad seems to be sorted out. That odd ‘fuzzy’ sensation at the end, and my hand falling-”

“Do you really think you can be a hero?” Nemoto asks this time, the question slips out of Hitoshi’s control, and he flinches at the flash of blindness that comes. The words are too familiar.

“Not really. With a quirk like mine that needs to be supported, I’m doomed to be a sidekick unless I rely entirely on publicity ratings, which is why I’ve been honing my public persona for years,” Monoma answers, his pale blue eyes not yet white, but locked on Hitoshi, and he can’t look away. He can’t help but fear this sinking feeling that he’s made a mistake. “There’s not a single person who believes in me, especially my father. I’m meant to inherit his practice. I’m probably just rebelling as much as I can before the inevitable crushes me into compliance.”

Monoma’s eyes fade white again. His hand falls softer on top of his folded arm, it doesn’t break him out of it. Hitoshi feels the string connected to the control, and though he wavers, he doesn’t sever it. “Stand up.”

Monoma does, a willing puppet with limp arms and no will, he might not even remember this if Hitoshi drops the control on his own, instead of hurting him.

“Walk around the kotatsu, and drink this,” Hitoshi orders, and when Monoma stops beside him, he holds up the jar of pickled radish juice. He’s being vaguer than he should be with his instructions, but Monoma takes the jar and starts drinking. After three gulps, Hitoshi stops him. “Stop. Turn around.”

Monoma’s back looks better than his face, and Hitoshi knows he could probably just order him to walk outside. Lock the door afterwards. Not open it again. Quirk Thief probably wouldn’t bother him anymore.

“Touch your nose with your left index finger,” Hitoshi orders instead, before he drops the control, and Monoma springs out of it to spin around, hand around his mouth and eyebrows drawn close with a hint of disgust. He must not be a fan of pickle juice.

“Radish- why? Why?” Monoma asks, looking between Hitoshi and the jar still in his hand, even if one has the clearer answer. “You made me- you made me-”

“Calm down,” Hitoshi orders, even if he knows that’s harder to do now. If he needs to, he might take control again, if Monoma can’t control himself from shouting. “Brainwashing. After you answer me, I can take control of you and make you do almost anything. So, yes, I made you drink the pickled radish juice. You’re not a fan.”

“Not of the juice,” Monoma hisses, setting the jar down roughly as he stomped back to his side of the kotatsu, folding his arms. He looks upset, but he shouldn’t be.

“You wanted to know more about me,” Hitoshi reminds, unsure if it’s a threat. It doesn’t feel like one, and it feels like he’s just hiding his face when he drinks the coffee again. He likes this flavor, salted taro. Monoma does have good taste.

Monoma still looks upset, since he won’t look at him. Just frowning at the fish, and they don’t deserve that.

“Here,” Hitoshi offers, holding out his hand. He knows how Quirk Thief’s quirk works, if he touches his skin, it should work. It never does when Quirk Thief tries, but his own quirk has been messed up until now. It’s still messed up, but it might work.

It might make it up to him. “I said it’s fine, you can keep having your fun. I’m certainly not one to lecture someone about appropriate quirk use.”

Hitoshi waits for the slip, the glance at what’s on offer, but instead Quirk Thief’s mouth just twitches, his arms adjusting tighter around himself.

“Why don’t you ask a few more questions, get to know little old me a bit better? Hm?” Monoma asks, his eyebrows raising, but that bitter tone seems to be directed at the fish. Along with that creepy, exaggerated face. “Wouldn’t you just love to know how it feels to walk around the same halls with celebrity Class A, the students who get twice as many internship offers even if they don’t make it past the second round of the Sports Festival? How it’s always like that, no matter how well we do or how hard I try, Class B is the sidekick class to the hero industry even when there’s not a single damn difference between us, it’s just one letter difference, and my father-”

“Monoma,” Hitoshi interrupts, feeling the string drop as soon as he misses it, as soon as he regrets his choice. He could have just made him leave. “You wanted to get to know me.”

Quirk Thief really is that cunning. He looks at Hitoshi’s hand, and he looks like he doesn’t want to take it. He’s just pouting, too much like Eri, and the annoying part is that he’s pouting at exactly what he wants. He wants Hitoshi’s quirk.

And maybe revenge.

“Are you sure?” Monoma asks, still staring at Hitoshi’s offered hand like it’s the most fascinating thing in the world, like it’s changing colors or something. His fingers on the kotatsu are twitching. “I meant what I said, I know it bothers you-”

“Monoma-”

“Alright,” Monoma sighs, because he wants to act put upon, but Hitoshi catches that flicker of glee crossing over his face when he reaches out and lays his palm over the back of Hitoshi’s hand. It feels warm.

Smotheringly warm. And he’s very sure that Quirk Thief doesn’t have to maintain skin contact like this to steal a quirk. Hitoshi risks looking at Quirk Thief’s eyes, expecting to find them more similar to his own, but instead he sees Monoma’s eyes half-closed, his expression too relaxed. Too satisfied. “Are you going to-”

“It’s-” Monoma flusters like he’s been caught, his free hand rising up before he starts wiggling his fingers around, like that’s some way of using Hitoshi’s quirk. He knows it’s not. “Odd. Sticky. It’s almost heavy, it’s not really like any quirk I’ve copied before.”

Monoma still has his hand resting on Hitoshi’s, but any intention of pulling away stops short at Hitoshi’s wrist. This isn’t horrible. But it just feels like he’s waiting for something to go wrong.

Monoma looks at him. And his eyes flash, the blue becoming too vivid. Exactly like Nemoto's. "Can you ever be forgiven for what you did to Eri?"

"No," Hitoshi answers, the words drawing out of his chest in a way that's familiar, but it's not. In the back of his mind, he feels like it's sticky. "There are horrible things that can't be forgiven, and I've done a lot of them. I never saved her, I lied to her then. I want to leave before she realizes that."

Hitoshi is looking at someone's chest. He's standing. He's standing close to someone.

Yamada's hands are on his shoulders, and he looks worried. "Hitoshi, you alright?"

No.

No no no, he hasn't- he hasn't done that, that hasn't happened, it shouldn't happen, losing time, Away, dissociating, Yamada shouldn't-

His quirk. Quirk Thief used it. On him.

That's what it feels like.

That's what he did to Eri.

*

Things had been going well.

Well, that's an absolute lie and Monoma can place absolutely all of the blame on the 1-A girl with the Anti-Gravity quirk for placing a seed of self-doubt in fertile pastures where it could bloom to this horrific abomination.

Monoma is currently biting his lips, while Eraserhead continues to glare at him, the red glow that cancelled Monoma's quirk is gone but that red impression on the corner of his forehead where it looks like he took an improperly placed nap is still there. Monoma tries not to look at it, but he's looking.

And pointedly not looking at Present Mic, who shifts from that almost sickening paternal concern to murderous when Shinsou brushes past him down the hall, presumably to his room if the slamming door is any indication. And with two sets of murderous eyes on Monoma, belonging to a teacher with a notorious record of expelling students and his own English teacher who has that right as such, Monoma can hear that he has some explaining to do.

He'd like to get some time to form those better explanations than the ones he has, so he'll wait for the interrogation to begin. And he's not disappointed.

"You copied his quirk." Eraserhead states, with a voice that brings to mind the image of bloodsoaked gravel, and Monoma currently doesn't like his chances of not looking like that himself, with his present circumstances. He is, in fact, guilty as charged, but he would like the jury to consider that he had no fucking idea what he was doing at the time.

"He offered it. Insisted," Monoma answers, swallowing two 'sirs' that will thoroughly rip through what little pride he has and would like to depart this world with. "I came here to smooth things over with a gift of coffee, trying to make amends for whatever I did, and he happened to use his quirk on me. Perhaps he meant it as tit-for-tat, but I shot that down, then he seemed offended and I..."

Monoma doesn't lose control of a quirk that he copies. Ever.

It's a matter of pride, an aspect of what he prides himself the most over. Ever since his quirk developed and he proved to be the better version of his father, he could copy and feel and use, his father's admonishments nearly became a soundtrack of his life. Don't play with that, Neito, you have no idea how to use that quirk.

But, he does. When he copies a quirk, he can hear the faint whisper of how it wants to be used when it settles in. How to twitch a tail he didn't have before, how vines feel when they're growing out of his scalp and the difference between that and tentacles. Monoma knows how to use every quirk in existence, thank you, and it's a grossly overlooked benefit to his quirk.

Except for that quirk. Brainwashing. Shinsou's quirk.

It said nothing to him, it was just heavy and something about it felt dark, it felt wrong in a way Monoma had never felt in any failing quirk. It felt like his brain was being smothered under a hot towel until he opened his mouth, intending to ask Shinsou if it always feels like this, but then something flashed in front of his eyes and that fell out of his mouth.

Can you ever be forgiven for what you did to Eri?

Monoma isn't proud of the first suspicion that came to him with those words, or the first part of Shinsou's answer. But, I never saved her, I want to leave before she realizes that.

Monoma isn't exactly one to cast stones towards a house that looks pretty on the outside but is a rotted wreck inside held together with twine, ingenuity, and a force of will to hold up until there's a good reason to collapse, but that statement seemed to indicate that Shinsou has some issues. And of course, after that, Monoma had some issues, staring him in the face with glazed over eyes.

He didn't mean to Brainwash Shinsou. And he had no idea how to stop it.

He tried to release his quirk, and it didn't work, Shinsou's quirk was stuck on his quirk like tar. In a panic, he ordered Shinsou to stand up, walk around. Touch his own nose with various fingers. Shinsou said he could make someone do almost anything, and there had to be a limit. Monoma can't use the full extent of a quirk he copies, so that limit has to be smaller. There had to be something too vague, too complex to short the connection out, maybe just an order limit, or a constraint on time.

Monoma has his own time limit, and he started watching the clock on his phone with undeniable relief when he found the space to remember that, but his ten minutes were nowhere near up when he heard a door open and close, and Present Mic walked in.

The horror on his face when he saw the blank look on Shinsou's, who was so conveniently looking down the hall, caused Monoma to try to explain that this wasn't what it looked like, which drew Eraserhead out of another door. And to erase his quirk, pulling that heaviness right out of his skull, which must have been distressing for Shinsou as he fled.

And now Monoma was here. And it was probably a huge mistake to be here in the first place.

"How are you here?" Eraserhead asks, and this is yet another one of those occasions where the full and honest truth will not serve him very well. There are a few students who have access to the full staff dorm beyond the common room on the first floor, and Monoma isn't one of them. He's not so shameless as to shuffle the blame onto Vlad-sensei, or that stupid.

"Kendo loaned me her student ID to visit Vlad-sensei, and I wanted to offer Shinsou a coffee on the way, since I was here,” Monoma says, mostly truths. Kendo didn’t willingly loan so much as she always places her ID in the right hand drawer of her desk. The ID that has access to this floor, the same floor that their teacher lives on which she does require as their Class President, which he might have mistakenly picked up while they were having their usual Netflix binge last night.

And he was going to visit Vlad-sensei afterwards. His door, specifically. Monoma was planning on standing in front of his teacher’s door and miming the act of knocking, just in case there were surveillance cameras that might think he had no other reason to borrow Kendo’s ID than a great emergency of utter emotional turmoil that went unanswered much like his teacher’s door.

He hasn’t slept well after all, the last few days. Wondering if Shinsou was okay after that attack, that attack on campus. That Chameleon quirk that thought he had the right to attack Shinsou, driving him to such a frenzy that he’d flee from rescue, absolutely terrified out of his mind.

And Monoma was completely useless. Unable to save him.

“Monoma,” Present Mic calls, taking half a step with his folded in front of his chest, pointing outward, and even with his hair a tangled mess and his pajamas disturbingly banana patterned, he can look every inch an intimidating teacher. “I get that you have really good intentions, you didn’t really do anything wrong—”

“We should have been aware that you were going to be in our living room,” Eraserhead adds, and the two trade a look that’s impossible to read and, quite frankly, a little disturbing to watch when it adds up to the assumption that they can communicate like that. Just trading looks at each other, like they’ve known each other that long. Years. It’s intimate.

Their living room.

Oh god they’re married.

“That’s a little misunderstanding with Hitoshi though,” Present Mic concludes, and Hitoshi. Shinsou Hitoshi. Given name basis. Monoma is fucked. “But, we appreciate the friendly thing, the little gifts and everything for the kiddos, Eri is absolutely thrilled with her new merch and the little bean likes hanging around her ‘Mono.’”

A nickname that he’s decently sure little Eri is unaware is similar to the name of a viral disease, but still definitely more flattering than ‘the dark face of UA.’ A nickname he’s sure she’s close to retiring.

“But, Hitoshi is figuring some things out, he’s a little stressed, and it might be better to be hands-off for right now until the coast is clear, alright?” Present Mic asks, like it’s a question, but the cold sweat running down the back of Monoma’s neck reminds him it’s not.

“Of course, I... see that was a rather poor decision on my part,” Monoma says, standing up to gather his things. His coffee, the cardboard carrier since it would be rude to leave that for his teachers.

He sees the pickle jar and the knife still displayed openly on the kotatsu, and he realizes that these heroes have asked startlingly few questions with that in mind.

“I’ll be ‘hands-off’ and all, until the coast is... Yeah. And Eri is fine,” Monoma takes a drink to settle his nerves, the chocolate syrup woven into this mocha almost sweeping the memory of that picked radish juice off of his tongue. “Goodbye.”

Monoma turns on his heel, exits stage right, and nearly collapses into the nearest wall with a mind struggling to wrap itself around all of that. All of that.

At least he walks away knowing a bit more about Shinsou. Not that it's pretty.

Not that Monoma ever expected it to be.

*

Yamada watched the door close behind Monoma, and still had questions. About the pickle jar, the very concerning knife, why Hitoshi looked like he had seen a ghost, why he was wearing his jacket, why Shouta hadn't come back to bed last night.

And as soon as he looked at his husband, he heard a loud and incredibly concerning thud coming from Hitoshi's room. He saw Eri's door start opening up, presumably with a very curious almost-six-year-old wondering what all the fuss was about, and decides that the 'cool down post-incident' for Hitoshi is going to have to be over, now.

Yamada still finds himself hesitating at Hitoshi's door, because of everything. Every little thing that's been piling up the last few days into what seems like an insurmountable wall. Hitoshi hasn't talked to him about what really happened at that mountain cabin, about threatening all his friends. Hitoshi hasn't talked to him either, but he can't let that show on his face. He still has to talk to the kid. "Hitoshi?"

Yamada knocks, and waits. He waits for a clap, even when he knows that a 'come in' is now in the realm of possibility, even if he shouldn't know that. If Nezu didn't give him video evidence, he probably wouldn't have believed it.

But there's not a clap, or a verbal invitation. Yamada hears a weird groan like metal is bending beyond its constraints, before the pitter patter of debris, and that's not something he should be hearing behind Hitoshi's door. As soon as Yamada's hand finds the doorknob, he hears the springs of Hitoshi's bed creak twice, and he only opens the door in time to see Hitoshi's legs disappearing.

Into the vents. Again.

Yamada doesn't have much time to tell himself that he told himself so, the vents are a 'clubhouse' for kids who don't have trust in the privacy that a door should offer, which Yamada violated pretty thoroughly by opening the door, even if he'd have the right to do that if he was a hero on patrol hearing those concerning sounds of violence. And there was quite some violence to be had in this room.

For one, the vent cover has been torn out of the ceiling, probably because Hitoshi knew that Yamada was coming to talk to him and he didn't have time to unscrew it delicately and all. There's bits of drywall and dust scattered over the corner of Hitoshi's bed, on the floor, over his computer chair that he used as a means to get into the vents. The vent cover has been placed on the bed, and both Mocha and that big purple mochi plushie that Mirio got Hitoshi have gone missing, but not really since they're probably invited to the vent party.

Then there's a few notebooks thrown on the floor, all blank as far as Yamada can see. His jacket was tossed towards the closet, currently clinging by a spiked shoulder pad to some sweaters still hanging up. Then there's the laptop.

Thoroughly busted. Busted in half, keys missing from the keyboard laying on the floor around it, the screen has a solid crack from one corner to the other. Both halves are almost under the desk that has a new dent in the low-quality wood, the paint surrounding the crater cracking to reveal the tan color beneath it, and Yamada is really more concerned with the desk than the laptop.

That laptop was bugged and all, courtesy of Detective Tsukauchi who was right about some leads popping out of Google searches given that it identified 50, but it's hard to fault Hitoshi for unknowingly destroying a huge invasion of his privacy.

But, that draws a bigger question of whether Yamada can invade his privacy a bit more right now. His first instinct is to chase the kid through the vents until they can have a talk, because this level of destructive anger deserves a big talk, but the vents are a clear way of saying that he needs space. Yamada knows he needs space to calm down.

But there's a bit of blood on the edge of the vent cover laying on the bed, so Yamada votes to veto the privacy concerns because as hard as these vent trips are when he worries about heat exhaustion, blood loss makes it impossible to allow it.

"Hey, Hitoshi?" Yamada calls, pulling himself to stand on the same chair his ward used to get into the vents, popping into the incredibly dark ventilation shaft to see no ward in sight. And he can hear the echo pretty well, as though the sight of Hitoshi's disappearing legs was just a trick to make him think he was in here. "I know you're probably upset, and not in a mood to talk, but it looks like you're hurt and we need to get that patched up before you can take some time to unwind and all, alright?"

There's no answer.

Of course there's not. For whatever reason, Hitoshi has decided that Yamada's just not cool to talk to anymore. Maybe, he just felt overwhelmed that first night back at UA, maybe he's overwhelmed because he was so affectionate, maybe he's embarrassed, maybe the kid is tied into so many knots over everything that it's impossible for him to sort out by himself, but the kid is too stubborn to ask for help. But Yamada just can't ignore that anymore, especially when it's gotten this bad.

For better or worse, he's going to have to get a few knots untied, to get his kid sorted out. And right now, that means stuffing himself into a ventilation shaft.

Yamada pulls his arms in first, trying to shuffle himself inside with plenty of kicks and a lot of scrapes on his stomach from the rough edge of the entrance, and maybe he needs to ask for pointers on a more gracious entrance next time. Yamada basically has to crawl around like a beached seal to get himself situated, quickly realizing that there's not enough room to even properly crawl without hitting his head from the attempt. The attempt is definitely a sign to Hitoshi that he's in here as the thud ricochets and echoes, and he's really wondering how Hitoshi manages to get in and disappear so silently in these things.

There's only stagnant hot air inside this vent, luckily no robots so far. Yamada army-crawls to the first intersection, trying to hold his breath so he doesn't worry his kid with all the heavy breathing. He sees a few smears of blood.

Going left, and with a glance, he can see the vent for Eri's room on the right with a dead end, but it was worth checking. After the left turn, incredibly tight with a corner of the vent digging sharply into his hip, he can see another dead end straight ahead, and two right turns between them. He imagines the farthest turn goes to the bathroom, kitchen and everything else, but the nearest one might go to the office. Yamada doesn't know what he's going to do if he reaches a dead end with no kid, given that he doesn't have room to turn around, but he'll have to take his chances.

Probably cry for help from said kid he's trying to help, which will be great for his ego, but maybe actually great for getting enough pity from Hitoshi to get a conversation, sign or otherwise.

Yamada shuffles down the first right, and looks right again to see a barricade of sorts. Definitely a sign that he's found a kid, because he's decently sure that the purple mochi plushie, while big enough to seal up a vent shaft, doesn't naturally bloom in the ventilation system.

"Hey, little listener," Yamada says, breaking the silence between pants for breath, when there really isn't any air to breathe up here, and he's more worried with Hitoshi cutting off the circulation by way of plushie. "I don't want to crowd your space and all, I know you're upset, but for what it's worth, I'm not upset about your room or anything. I'm just worried because I saw some blood on that vent cover, and I want to make sure you're alright."

Yamada waits long enough that he starts to worry if this is a decoy, if he's just talking to a plushie with the assumption that Hitoshi is hiding behind it, but the kid might have crawled off to who knows where by now. Maybe Shouta should have handled this, Yamada is pretty sure he knows his way around these tight and uncomfortable spaces more than him.

But Yamada nearly drops his head to the bottom of the shaft when he sees the edges of the plushie moving, before two fists come out. Hitoshi's fists, which don't really look too threatening. Especially when they open up, and Yamada sees the blood smears on his fingers and palms, from some nasty cuts between the first and second joint on his first two fingers. Still fresh enough to be sluggishly bleeding, and Yamada didn't think to grab anything to treat them with.

But it lines up with that weird sound of metal being bent. Hitoshi probably grabbed the vent cover and just dangled himself from it until the cover ripped off, slicing his fingers up in the process. That desperate to get to a place where he wouldn't be bothered, where he'd be safe to unwind after whatever worked him up to reign some indiscriminate destruction on his room.

And where he's being bothered right now, currently, and Yamada selfishly doesn't have plans to change that anytime soon. "Okay, those don't look too deep. We can get them cleaned up, bandaged and all. If you're close to the office, Shou can probably hand you some bandaids and wipes."

Hitoshi's left hand curls into a fist again, moving up and down to sign 'Yes.' He's close to the office vent, he's okay with that plan. He's still not planning on talking to Yamada.

And he's honestly pretty limited on the sign capabilities, even if the Great Wall of Purple Plushie was out of the way, there's just not enough space for gestures. "Okay, I'll text Shou and let him know that."

Hitoshi's hands curl up and disappear again, and Yamada has to wriggle onto his side to get to the pocket of his pajamas, where he luckily brought his phone. He's going to hope that Shouta also has his phone on him, but if not, he can possibly crawl back to the vent that leads into Eri's room, where he's decently sure Shouta will be to reassure the little bean who woke up to some loud noises.

But as soon as he sends the request for medical supplies, he sees a notification from LNE. From his chat with Hitoshi, barely used. Apparently, he's not the only one who brought a phone in here.

Hitoshi: You need to uninvite me from Eri's birthday

Alright, that's a weird first concern, but not entirely unrelated. Even if he was the person who trashed his room, Hitoshi is probably the most scared person to know about it after the fact. As much as Eri hates to see any sign of destruction in her foul moods, he imagines that the same is so or worse with Hitoshi. Yamada imagines he hasn't really had an opportunity to take out any type of frustration on his surroundings, and might be worried he'll devolve into a rage like that at any provocation, when Yamada certainly doesn't share those concerns.

Hitoshi: I can't be around her anymore. I'm sorry. I don't want to Shouta responds to say he'll make the drop off, a notification Yamada doesn't reply to when he's trying to figure out how to answer this one. Hitoshi doesn't want to talk to him, he can't sign, he might not like the reminder that Yamada can talk to him when Yamada has no idea why Hitoshi hasn't tried talking to him. And that's probably not an issue he should be thinking about right now.

Yamada looks at the purple plushie hiding his ward, and rolls over on his back so at least he's comfortable while he gets to talking, trying to be quiet enough that the little bean doesn't hear any weird voices from the vents. "Hitoshi, I know that Monoma probably said or did something to upset you, because you don't really make a habit of breaking things like that. I know that probably makes it scarier for you, to get that upset, but that doesn't mean you can't be around Eri anymore, or that you can't be at her birthday party. I'm pretty sure you're not planning on wrecking her cake or anything."

Yamada watches his phone for any reply, still waiting for a smart remark about how he needs to piss off, which is the only thing that will drive him out of the vents at this point. If Hitoshi is truly not ready for any kind of talking to him right now.

Hitoshi: I made her dissociate. With my quirk. Every time I used it.

Shit. That's a horrible connection that few people other than Hitoshi could make, and he made it courtesy of one Monoma Neito.

Shouta hasn't said what it feels like to be under Hitoshi's quirk, but the little bean clearly hasn't been offended by it, given that she calls it 'The Safe Place.' Which is a pretty solid connection, even if it does feel like that. "You remember when we talked about that? Even when it feels scary when you lose time like that, when you dissociate, it happens because your brain is trying to protect you-"

"Twenny!" Yamada hears Eri calling, and it's hard to place exactly where she is, but he imagines that a little bean decided to follow Shouta into the office to make the medical supply drop off. "Dad said you got hurt, but I can fix it with my quirk if you come out."

"Eri, that's not-" Shouta's voice is closer, and Yamada can practically hear him rubbing his eyes. "I know you want to help Hitoshi, but you need more practice before you can use your quirk on people."

"Training," Eri says, showing off that she gets quite the education alongside the little herolets she hangs out with. "Twenny, Dad said I can't use my quirk, but I want you to feel better when you're not in the ceiling. I love you!"

"Love you too," Hitoshi replies in a watery voice, the kid is crying behind that plushie wall, and Yamada doesn't know how he'd bundle the kid up in a hug in these vents if he ripped away that purple wall, but he'd probably break his elbows trying. He hears Shouta calling Eri's name softly, probably grabbing the little bean in his arms to carry her away for some cereal and distraction from current events. Probably getting littered with 'Dad's all along the way.

If there's any evidence to indicate that Eri's better off with Hitoshi, dissociative quirk and ventilation adventures and all, it's that sign of how much the little bean misses him after he's been so distant from her too, the past few days.

“Hitoshi, I know you never wanted to do that,” Yamada says, cutting to the rotten heart of it. Even if Hitoshi’s quirk made a mess out of Eri’s mind, which they know it didn’t, Hitoshi never wanted to use it on Eri in the first place.

They were both forced into a horrifying situation beyond their control at the 8 Precepts, and Hitoshi tried his best to protect Eri in every way. Even when it meant that he had to make some hard decisions to make sure he would still be around for her.

“You’ve always wanted to protect her, you’ve never wanted to hurt her, and I’m pretty sure you never have. We know for a fact that your quirk has never hurt her, and I know she doesn’t think you’ve ever hurt her with your quirk. And you’ve never done anything to intentionally hurt her either, right?”

Yamada hears a sniff, which draws his attention to the soft purple wall, but the answer comes across in a chat message.

Hitoshi: No. But I made her feel like that.

Hitoshi: It’s unforgivable.

‘Unforgivable’ is a pretty ugly word, and one that only Hitoshi could feel about this situation right now. Which only makes it hurt worse for the poor kid, twisting his own knife in the wound. “I’m sorry kiddo, but you can’t decide whether using your quirk on Eri is unforgivable or not.”

Yamada really hates the plushie wall right now, especially when the words drop out of his mouth sounding like that. Maybe it’s a little too harsh, taking power away from a kid who’s already spiraling, but he really can’t let the kid take the burden of ultimate sin for hurting a little girl who adores him.

“Eri is the one who gets to decide whether she forgives you or not, or if she can, if using your quirk on her is unforgivable or not. I know this is a pretty rough situation when your quirk feels like that to you, but Eri has never made it seem like she was uncomfortable or hurt by your quirk, you know?” Yamada wishes he could know what Hitoshi looks like right now, when Yamada is trying his best to pour his heart out to a wall of purple with absolutely no clue how many lines he’s stepping across, with a kid he knows is suffering in there. “She calls it ‘The Safe Place,’ because she’s only ever felt safe with you, and it kind of seems like your quirk is different with her in the first place. With everything we don’t know about your quirk, I wouldn’t be surprised if she felt like that because she could feel how much you were trying to protect her, even when you had to do that.”

Yamada honestly hasn’t put a lot of thought into it, but Hitoshi’s quirk could be terrifying, even if he just used it to make someone walk around for a little bit. Waking up to look at a different scenery, in a different time, is jarring, especially knowing that someone else was piloting behind the wheel with free reign.

As much as Yamada would still trust Hitoshi, knowing him as well as he does within all of two months of knowing him, he wouldn’t be afraid. And knowing that Eri doesn’t even remember her life before Hitoshi, she’s hardly known any safety or trust beyond him, he knows that Eri wouldn’t have felt afraid at all. “You can talk to her about it, just to make sure for yourself. And even if you think Eri might be too young to understand the whole situation, you should know that Shouta and I don’t blame you for what you had to do to survive back then. We’re just so grateful... that you guys made it through.”

If someone had told Yamada last year that he and Shouta would have opened their home and hearts to two kids, making both of them cut their work hours more than half while they'd get less sleep and sex in the trade off, Yamada would have laughed. They had a plan, which at that point was basically planned procrastination, waiting until there was a better time to even think about bringing kids into their crazy busy lives. And now they had those kids, and if Yamada had anything to say about it, they were going to keep it that way, and keep figuring things out once there was an opportunity for their work schedules to resume.

Yamada never thought he'd be happier sweating in a vent shaft with his hair a tangled mess than he would be playing his favorite new discovery on his radio show, or taking down the latest baddie that needed taking down. But when he sees the Great Wall of Purple Plushie coming down, pulling to the side at first as Hitoshi struggles to shove it between himself and the wall, Yamada can't help the relief pulling him to grin, even if the kid looks like a mess.

Red, watery eyes, darker circles under his eyes, and even if the blood's cleaned off his hands, Yamada can spot the unused bandaids. He can spot faithful old Mocha tucked against Hitoshi's chest too.

"Kind of missed you, you know?" Yamada can't help but say, even when he sees that wasn't the right thing to say as Hitoshi winces, dropping his chin on an arm as a hand pulls up to wipe at the corner of his eye.

Yamada sees the scabs on his scars, the fresh wounds that Hitoshi had that night he was attacked, when they forced that mask back on his face. He sees the other scars, since Hitoshi's wearing a T-shirt, those long and winding grooves from horrific torture, something that Yamada knows would break him before it even began. He knows where they came from.

But that doesn't change how he sees Hitoshi, despite his worries. If anything, it just makes him want to squeeze the kid a little harder once he gets the opportunity and invitation for a good hug.

'Sorry,' Hitoshi signs, out of the limited vocabulary he has with the limited space and all.

"Nothing to be sorry for, kiddo. I know it's hard managing all those social obligations, everyone who wants to spend time with the most amazing teenager in the whole world, but I'm glad I could squeeze my way into your social calendar," Yamada says, because it is a squeeze and it is stifling. He barely gets a pity-huff, a clear sign that the kid is still hurting and not ready to really laugh yet, and Yamada knows the worst is probably waiting in his room. "And you know you're not in trouble, right? You can do whatever you want to your own stuff, destruction is not off the table, especially in this case because I know you had pretty good cause to get worked up like that. And my jacket looked like it was safe and sound."

Hitoshi looks at him with a complete deer-in-the-headlights look, purple eyes too wide, and Yamada is still hoping it could be funny. That Hitoshi's just that horrified out of embarrassment, not because he might have forgotten about the slight room damages. Or that he might have been away while the damages were going on by his hands. 'No. Didn't.'

Yamada finds himself a little impressed how Hitoshi flips around on his back and pulls that plush wall back up in one fluid movement, a little bit of his hair caught at the bottom, little purple tangles that Yamada can't stop staring at. Until his phone vibrates on his chest.

Hitoshi: I wasn't wearing it.

Yamada has to read that a couple times, covering his mouth and staring at the metal ceiling above him while he tries to work through that impossible math problem. The real problem with that statement, that Hitoshi seems to really want him to believe, is Yamada saw him wearing his jacket.

He's not mad, he's the farthest thing from mad and the only slightly irritated feelings he has about the situation is that he didn't take a picture.

But he's sure that Hitoshi is embarrassed beyond belief and solidly into the realm of denial, the poor kid has decided to buy up prime real estate near the biggest river in Egypt just to stay in that state of denial for further notice, which means that picture might have to be taken far into the future.

But Yamada can be patient, the best things in life come to those who wait and all. Maybe he could get a full cosplay out of the kid if he bribes him with a cat and his own oath of silence. "You're right, I saw my jacket in your closet but it could have gotten there in plenty of ways, definitely wasn't accusing you of wearing it. Which you could do, anytime you want. I have plenty of spares. And I can always autograph one of them for my favorite listener, maybe even as a Christmas present!"

It's hard to remember that he's trying to bring the plush wall down and not seal the kid up in a tomb with his own embarrassment, but luckily Hitoshi has picked up a fondness for glaring. And he can't do that too well through a wall of purple plush, so the wall is pulled away, and even upside down, that glare is exasperated.

He's definitely been picking things up by spending so much time with Shouta. "Want me to help you out with the bandaid sitch? I'm first aid certified as a hero, and maybe there's some teasing I should make up for. And inviting myself to your swanky little clubhouse and all."

'It's fine,' Hitoshi signs, his sign vocabulary a bit more enhanced when he has more than just a head and hands to work with since he's laying on his back. 'Not lying. Your house. Your ceiling.'

Hitoshi taps on the ceiling above them for good measure, but it's not really their house anyway. Or their ceiling, since it's UA property and all. But Yamada will eat his hat if Principal Nezu tries to fault Hitoshi for the drywall damages, given how much he cares about the kid. "Yeah, but you need a place of your own, a place where you know you won't be bothered. I get that the vents should be that place for you, even if I kind of think it's hot and stifling, and I do prefer your room being that place. But I still feel bad, invading your privacy and all. As long as there's no signs of injuries I don't know about, it won't happen again, scout's honor."

Hitoshi shrugs, glancing at the vent to his left which might have provided a little bit of fresh air, not that it's as much as Yamada would like Hitoshi to have. 'It's okay. If it's you.'

The 'clubhouse invite.' His mom told him about it when he made that call, the first nerve wracking time that Hitoshi decided that the vents were a good place to unwind for five agonizing hours. A kid who retreats to a secret little place no one will bother them in might eventually invite one trusted individual or two, to that place where they can sit with their worst fears and wounds, and trust that person to help them sort it out.

Yamada is stretched out and sweating in Hitoshi's heart right now, the place he retreats to with his worst fears. And he's sharing it with Yamada.

And he can't say he regrets this wreck of a wake-up call this morning, with that in mind. And with a kid offering up some bandaids with some nasty scrapes that need them. "You know, I've got a secret little mission that I can't let Eri know about, if you want to help me out with it after breakfast. If you've got the time and all."

Hitoshi looks at him, both hands raised over his head so Yamada can wrap up two fingers on each hand, his purple hair a messy halo against the bottom of the vent shaft. Maybe that look is an accusation that Yamada had any plans to take the words out of his hands, given that Hitoshi can't sign anything right now, when in fact that was just Yamada talking without considering that, talking without thinking and talking without coffee first and foremost. But then, Hitoshi nods, and maybe the suspicion was all in Yamada's head.

Yamada honestly needs the opportunity to get some things out of his head and out into the open with his ward, even if spending some time with his favorite listener is still a big priority. And spending it the way that he plans to will give him plenty of time to air out a lot of concerns, worries, and big questions.

Especially the big one, about what his little listener wants to get for the little bean's big birthday.

*

Yamada leaves first, and Hitoshi hears every thud and grunt to his progress back to his room. Yamada didn't tell him to leave, he said that Hitoshi could come out 'whenever he feels like it.' He doesn't feel like it yet.

Hitoshi curls on his side to look at the office through the vent, feeling the emptiness of the vent shaft where he hasn't placed the mochi plushie above his head, struggling to hold both the mochi and Mocha against his chest. His phone is still in his hand.

Yamada doesn't blame him, even if he knows what he did to Eri. Yamada doesn't think that anyone but Eri can decide whether it was wrong, but Yamada doesn't know what it's like. He made Eri feel like that, he had to have traumatized her. Thousands of times, he tried to take away her pain and fear but he was just another torment on the way to Chisaki's worst machinations. He always took her to The Chair.

Hitoshi knows that Eri is too young to know what he did, but those days are numbered. She will look back and realize what it was, how much he is to blame, and she will hate him. She will have the right to.

The group chat with 1-A is still missing, because what he said to them, what he did was unforgivable. They've chosen to sever that connection, even if Aizawa talks about making amends at some point, even if Midoriya still smiled at him and asked about his quirk, told him that his chat and Ashi's was still open to him. Bakugo's too.

He used his quirk on Midoriya several times, definitely the most out of the hero students. Probably more often than Aizawa. Other than Eri, probably the most that he's ever used it on a person.

Shinsou: Why aren't you scared of my quirk? Shinsou: and why did you change my name.

Midoriya: Oh! I thought that since you were having trouble with your quirk, you might not want to see that name anymore? And even if you liked KKP, the villain character doesn't really seem like it fits you.

Midoriya: And I guess I'm just not? Does that affect how it feels for you, because it seemed like you didn't like the last few times you used it, and you didn't like it, and maybe most people don't want you to use your quirk when you use it, but I was asking you to because of my hand, which is better now!

Midoriya: Just in case you were wondering!

Shinsou: You type really fast.

Midoriya: I guess? I'm used to the new keyboard now. :D

Shinsou: It did feel weird. Open. I don't know how to explain it.

After Hitoshi took control when Midoriya asked him to, when he pulled the string to pull him under, it was like his mind was suddenly clear of anything else beyond it. It almost felt like there would be no resistance to whatever he ordered, whatever he commanded. Like he could command Midoriya with just a thought, terrifying enough without Aizawa there for him not to consider testing it.

Midoriya: Mental quirks can be really complex, especially because there's not really a way to visualize how they work sometimes. Even Black Whip is hard for me to really understand, because I have to create it then move it around, and it's harder than just imagining the taiyaki and kicking.

Shinsou: Taiyaki?

Midoriya: !!! It's a long story, kind of weird, but that's how I picture my quirk??? I guess???

Shinsou: It makes sense.

Midoriya: I'm... glad you think that Shinsou. Even if it doesn't. TT.TT

It makes too much sense, why Midoriya would trust Hitoshi so much without any reason to and with so much reason not to. Why Hitoshi feels so confused around him too, why his green eyes are intolerable sometimes.

It doesn't make sense, Midoriya just likes the same food that 50 did, they both like taiyaki but they never knew each other. They're not related. They're not similar to each other.

But they are.

Shinsou: You spent a lot of time with Eri when she was first rescued. Does she hate me?

Shinsou: Yamada might have told her to act differently when the wardship started. She probably seemed more traumatized at first, because of me. My quirk makes people dissociate.

Shinsou: Eri would have told you if she hated me, and she wouldn't tell anyone else. I need you to tell me the truth. No one else will.

Midoriya: No??? She doesn't

Midoriya: Shinsou, you know Eri better than anyone. You would know if she secretly hated you, and she doesn't. She really cares a lot about you.

Midoriya: And when she was first rescued, she was scared. She only really stopped being scared when you came to UA, and Present Mic couldn't have told her to stop acting scared so you wouldn't know she was. Eri is really smart, but she's still 5, she wouldn't have been able to act dishonestly this entire time.

Shinsou: She's almost six.

Midoriya: Still... I don't think that Eri hates you, or that she's scared of your quirk. And I don't want to be mean, but if she was, everyone in class A wouldn't have been nice to you.

Shinsou: So now she's scared of my quirk, because you're not nice to me.

Midoriya: No.... That's because you're not really

Shinsou: I broke my laptop. And the ceiling. And threw some books.

Shinsou: I don't know why I did that. I thought it would help.

Midoriya: Help Eri... not be scared of you?

Shinsou: No. I felt weird. I wanted it to stop. And I kept thinking of breaking those things. But it just felt weirder.

Midoriya: Oh! So you just felt really mad.

Midoriya: I used to get really mad at Kacchan when we were kids, and sometimes thought about some violent things happening to him. Like his legs blowing off, or shoving him on the ground and kicking dirt in his face like he would do to me.

Midoriya: But since I didn't want to worry my mom, I would just write those things down and then throw away the paper, and it made me feel better.

Shinsou: That would be intentionally hurting him. And blowing his arms off would hurt him worse, it would ruin his career as a hero, probably destroying his will to live.

Midoriya: Right, I didn't actually want those things to happen tho! I just felt angry in the moment, but I wouldn't really want Kacchan to get hurt!

Midoriya: I guess I'm trying to say that it's okay to feel angry, or even want to do something awful, as long as you don't do it? To the wrong people?

Midoriya: Because I started feeling a lot better since I started training to be a hero, and taking down villains. Not that I really want to hurt them just because they're villains, but it's nice to hurt people who are hurting people, a little Midoriya: That sounds bad. But what I REALLY mean is that you didn't hurt anyone when you were angry, and you didn't scare Eri, at least that's what it sounds like, so that's kind of okay? And it's okay to feel angry but there's probably better ways to deal with it?

Shinsou: Chisaki's dead, so I can't stab him. 127 killed him, but he tried to kill me too, and he's probably dead so I can't stab him either.

Shinsou: I don't want to go back to my room.

Midoriya: Where are you right now?

Midoriya: Shinsou?

Shinsou: Is it weird to be in a vent?

Midoriya: Not for you, and everyone is different. I don't think that's a problem, unless you stay in the vent too long.

Midoriya: But, I think you would feel better if you fixed your room? Even if you don't like seeing it at first, or if it's scary, or

Midoriya: I DON'T THINK YOU'RE SCARED I'M SORRY

Shinsou: Fine. I'm not scared of my room. I just don't want to see it.

Shinsou: But Eri doesn't hate me.

Midoriya: Nope! She definitely doesn't!

Midoriya: Tap to open 22kB

Midoriya: She doesn't look scared at all to me! :)

Hitoshi didn't know Midoriya took this picture, but when he sees the pink blur on the corner that looks a little like Uraraka's gloves, it makes far more sense that he didn't. A few weeks ago after school, Eri wanted to show Mirio the first Sailor Moon wand Monoma gave to her, and they started singing the theme song. For some reason, she wanted Hitoshi to sing it too, and he lied to her by signing along instead.

But she loved it. Her eyes got so wide, she was so excited about the idea of learning how to sign that song that she stopped singing, demanding to learn how to do that too. Her interest didn't hold long enough for her to learn more than the first two lines, especially when Mirio was there and wanted to take her to play in the snow. But Midoriya is right.

She doesn't look afraid.

But he looks weird in this picture, and if he didn't know that Uraraka was obsessed about Eri, he would think she took this picture to blackmail him in some way. Hitoshi doesn't know what expression he was trying to make, but he just looks terrified and nauseous.

Shinsou: Don't take pictures of me. Don't let your friends take pictures of me.

Shinsou: I will intentionally hurt anyone who does that without hurting them physically or hurting their feelings.

Shinsou: But thanks.

Midoriya: Okay, I won't! And I'll tell Ochako that you don't like that, and she won't do that again. You don't have to hurt anyone. :)

Hitoshi closes the app when he sees the office door open through the vent's shutters, shoving his phone in his pocket before he sees it's just Aizawa. Aizawa, holding the two pieces of his laptop in his hand.

And looking at the vent. Hitoshi is still stupidly close enough to it that Aizawa can see he's still there. "You're not in trouble for breaking the laptop."

Hitoshi knows that, Yamada already told him. But he should be, and it doesn't make sense that they keep telling him that he's not. He hasn't had many things of his own to break, but whenever he breaks something, he's supposed to be punished. And he knows that the laptop is expensive. "I can't fix it. I can't... make amends with it."

Aizawa looks at the laptop, as though he needs to confirm it's broken beyond repair, before he puts it on Yamada's desk. "No, this laptop can't be fixed. Hizashi is straightening up your room right now, but the laptop isn't worth being upset about. You can borrow mine, or...."

That doesn't fix the fact that Hitoshi broke it. He didn't even know what he was thinking, his body just felt too tensed and twitchy, he felt too trapped, he felt like it was the laptop's fault and if he broke it, he could break out of that horrible feeling. Throwing the notebooks wasn't satisfying enough, and he couldn't stop thinking that he needed to break something worse.

"It wasn't a good idea to take out your frustrations by breaking it," Aizawa says, stating the obvious. But for some reason, he looks guilty, as if he was at fault for that, when Quirk Thief was. "But the laptop was bugged. It could record everything you typed on it, for the investigation. It was an invasion of your privacy, and I'm not angry with you for breaking it."

"You could have—" Hitoshi turns to look at the ceiling above him, his words echoing too loudly. Aizawa looked at everything he typed on that laptop, and never told him. He did that for the investigation, as though he's ever typed what Boss' name is, where the compound is, as though he knew those things in the first place.

Hitoshi wanted to say he could have asked, but Aizawa did, and he didn't tell him. He wouldn't have told him what he knows, because he didn't know how little Aizawa did know. And he had other reasons not to tell him anyway. "You have the right to be angry with me for doing that."

He is angry, if anger feels like he wants to hurt something to make things even. If he hits the metal walls surrounding him, Yamada will hear it and get concerned. He can't hit Aizawa either. And it feels terrifying, but the words slip out of him numbly anyway. "You're an asshole."

Aizawa doesn't say anything, doesn't do anything like Hitoshi was sure he would. He doesn't even have the capture scarf so he's not sending it through the vent to strangle Hitoshi for saying something that disrespectful, and despite that fear, it just angers him to see Aizawa just standing there and silently taking it.

"And you can't use anything I gave you last night, if you were going to steal it like that," Hitoshi says, because he gave a lot of information to Aizawa, willingly, trying to make amends. Trying to make progress when Aizawa didn't seem to care, but judging from how tired Aizawa looks and how everything was messed with after he fell asleep, now organized in neat stacks, Aizawa might have done his part already.

"You would have been within your right to decide that, but I already shared that information with the rest of the investigative team," Aizawa says, gathering his hair into a ponytail with his hands before he just drops them, like he was stupid enough to forget he doesn't have a hairtie. And he looks stupid when he looks up at the vent. "I can buy you another laptop."

Bargaining. Aizawa actually feels like he's done wrong, and even if Hitoshi is physically looking down on him right now, it feels like he's even taller. And he doesn't want to let that feeling go. "I don't want another laptop, especially one from you. Another 'bugged.' laptop."

"What about a laptop from Santa?" Aizawa asks, and even with a straight face, he can sound so mocking. Especially with that straight face.

"I know he's not real," Hitoshi argues, and tries to keep his voice down just in case Eri is nearby. "You bugged my laptop and invaded my privacy, and you never told me. So now I'm...."

The problem with this distance between them, this height, is that it's hollow. He doesn't really have a way to hurt Aizawa right now, but he wants to have one. He wants to make Aizawa feel sorry, instead of just saying that he is. The only thing he can really withhold is where The Miasma's compound is when he finds it, and that will hurt Hitoshi far more than him.

"I'm not going to tell you what Yamada's secret mission is," Hitoshi says, rolling onto his back fully with the finality of his decision. A bluff, he knows that. But Aizawa doesn't. "It's important for Eri's birthday, and you're going to embarrass her if you don't know about it. And Yamada told me to tell you, because he won't, and if I don't tell you, it's going to be a disaster."

"Hitoshi," Aizawa calls, raising his hand before he looks at his own laptop. His mouth looks weird, his lips drawn too tight, but when he looks back he actually looks sad. Regretful. "I'm sorry about the laptop. I'll make it up to you any way I can, but if I don't know about the 'secret mission-'"

"Too bad," Hitoshi interrupts, far too satisfied with the way this has played out. He really bought it. "And I don't know how long it will take, so I probably can't help you with your class. You'll have to deal with All Might being so cheerful and supportive all on your own."

Aizawa sighs, half a groan of agony at that idea, something that Hitoshi barely considered doing when he wasn't sure if Aizawa really enjoyed their conversations about the students' shortcomings in the first place. But looking at Aizawa bent over, braced by a hand on Yamada's chair, makes him feel even better than vengeful. "I... hope you'll be free tomorrow, then."

Hitoshi can't help the grin at that, and hopes Aizawa doesn't see it. But it fades quickly enough as he runs a hand through his hair, still tangled but now sweatier than he thought. He probably should get out of the vent, especially with the mission that he doesn't know about.

Aizawa hums, and Hitoshi's nerves sing with the sound. He waits for the test to really fail, for Aizawa to say he was playing along just to see how far Hitoshi would go, to tell him that he's offended Aizawa too fully at this point and he'll have to face the punishment for it. "Coffee's getting cold."

Hitoshi rolls his eyes, because cold coffee isn't that bad, even if Aizawa seems to hate it. But he starts rolling over on his arms and knees to make his way back to his room, listening to see if Aizawa would keep talking to him when he's not there.

He hesitates at the entrance to his room, because the vent cover was moved to the desk. Because Aizawa said that Yamada was 'straightening up' his room, so he might still be there.

But Hitoshi pulls his head out and looks around, and sees that the door is closed, Yamada isn't there. His notebooks are stacked on the desk instead of scattered on the floor, he doesn't see Yamada's jacket so he might have taken it back.

Hitoshi lowers himself down to stand on the chair, tossing Mocha and the mochi pillow to his bed before he takes the vent cover to fix it. The white part of the ceiling is cracked, but when he lines the cover back up, the cracks are hard to spot. Two of the holes where the screws went in are warped, but when he unscrews then rescrews the others, they seem to lock into place.

He sees a robot scurry over, it might be the same one that he saw the first time he disappeared into these vents. He watches it almost bounce up and down, gears whirring like it's surveying the damages. What he did when he was angry.

'Sorry,' Hitoshi signs, the bandaids around his fingers feeling tighter with that small movement. He doesn't know if it's stupid to apologize to the robot for damaging its home, if the robot even knows sign, if he's just stupid. But he feels sorry.

The little screen display pops up over the robot's domed body. 'Apology accepted. :3' 'May perform some.' 'Renovations.' 'For easier access in emergencies.'

"Thanks," Hitoshi says quietly, as though he can't convince himself that Yamada isn't nearby or just hiding from him.

Hitoshi can't even see the dust that he thought he did before, but he can see the lines on his carpet like Yamada vacuumed in his room. He still checks that the door is closed, and can't help but check the closet. He knows Yamada isn't in here.

But his jacket still is. Hanging up in his closet like it belongs there, like Hitoshi is free to wear it. Yamada probably wants him to, so he can take a picture for whatever weird reason he has to do that.

He likes the jacket, but he doesn't want to give Yamada the satisfaction, so he changes his clothes into a fresh set he didn't sleep in, with the light purple sweater that Eri picked for him. The one she picked as her favorite when he was taken to UA from the interrogation room.

And he faces the door, knowing he still needs to make sure he never hurt her.

*

Eri looks at her science kit that Momo got her spread out on the kotatsu, and tries to be excited about looking at the microscope again.

Winter breaks are supposed to be fun, but they're kind of not. Everyone seemed really excited about not having school, even Yama and Zawa and especially Aunt Nemmie, but it's really really boring without school. Instead of getting to wake up and eat breakfast together, and seeing all her friends every day, and learning a whole bunch of stuff, she's been spending too much time inside. Even watching TV with Yama or playing in the snow is kind of boring.

She played in the snow a lot on her sleepover trip with Mirio, Tama, and Neji, and met a lot of new friends, but when she got back all of her hero friends were sad because Haga had to leave, and Haga didn't even say goodbye to her. Twenny hasn't said goodbye to her, but he's been leaving a lot, and today he decided to leave to go spend time in the ceiling.

Eri sighs when she swivels the microscope around, looking at the sea monkey slide again. Science is really fun, but mostly when she learns different stuff. And there's not a whole lot she can learn about sea monkeys that live in the little glass rectangle, even when she looks at them under different colors like red and blue and green. The sea monkeys never move, and they don't really look like monkeys.

It's another fun day of winter break, when she's just waiting for Mizzy to be done with school so they can talk, or waiting to eat lunch, maybe with Twenny and Zawa there. Maybe Mirio will come over today, but it seems like he's busy now that he's in love with Tama. They better not get married and forget about Eri being the flower girl though.

Eri hears someone coming down the hall, and wonders if Yama's already done with his shower or Zawa's done with his important phone call, but Twenny is out of the ceiling now. "Twenny! Are you okay?"

Twenny smiles at her like he does when he's just Twenny, and that doesn't always mean that he's happy, but he holds up his hands with the bandaids that Eri picked around two of his fingers on each hand. "I'm okay. I just hurt myself on accident."

Twenny looks at her kind of like he's worried, and he kind of dances on his feet before he goes to the kitchen to get breakfast. Eri gets up to follow him, because Zawa just made cereal but Twenny sometimes makes good food, but he's just getting coffee. And he didn't even ask her to pick out a mug for him, and she would have picked a cuter cat mug.

Twenny looks at her like he's surprised she's there, and Eri must be getting really good at hide and seek if she can hide from Twenny when she's not trying to. But Twenny looks back at the kotatsu, instead of looking at her when he talks. "Are you working on a science project?"

It's not really a project, when she's written all her observations about the glass slides down already, and she can't really find new questions about them. But maybe Twenny can help her find new questions. "Kinda. I can show you how it works, 'cause I didn't show you yet!"

Eri takes Twenny's hand, and makes sure not to touch the places where he's hurt, and makes him follow her to the kotatsu, where she turns the microscope over to him. Even if Eri's tired of looking at the sea monkey slide, it's still the coolest one.

And Twenny looks at it like he thinks it's cool, maybe this is the coolest microscope he's ever seen. "I got the sea monkey slide in there, with the blue color I think. You can move it around to zoom in or change the colors, and I got other slides too."

Twenny leans down to look through her microscope, and he twists the color wheel and the zoom wheel really careful, even though Eri didn't tell him to be careful like Yama did. "It... doesn't really look like a monkey."

"I know," Eri agrees, and she still doesn't know why they're called that. Even Momo didn't really know, so it's impossible for anyone to know the answer. "But it's still kinda cool. They're supposed to swim around in the ocean, but they're so tiny. Even if Fishie and Fishio's house was full of sea monkeys, we wouldn't even see them."

That kind of sounds like a good experiment idea, because Mirio said that sometimes fish need bigger houses to grow, and Fishio and Fishie might grow bigger because they were in a bigger house. So even though the sea monkeys in the ocean are still really tiny, maybe if she just had one sea monkey in a big house like Fishio and Fishie have, it would grow into the biggest sea monkey ever.

Eri gets her notebook to write down her experiment idea, so maybe when she sees Momo, Momo can make her a baby sea monkey to test it out. She writes down her big question, and her evidence about fish growing in big houses, and how she's gonna test it, but when she reads it to make sure she's got everything down, Twenny's just staring at her with a little smile on his face. "Do you wanna help me think of experiments?"

"I can't really think of any," Twenny says, but he doesn't look sad about it. He's still smiling a little, kind of a whole lot like Zawa does when he's happy but for a long time, and especially when he picks up his coffee and drinks it. "Your experiments always start with a question, right?"

"Yup, that's how the Science Method works," Eri says, because that's her favorite part of learning science. It's never bad to ask questions, because that's what scientists do all the time, even for little stuff. "You gotta have a question, then write down all the stuff you know about it, and think of an experiment idea, then do it, and write down what happens and what it says about your question."

"I have a question," Twenny says, and Eri grabs her science pencil with the circles that Momo said are 'atoms' on it so she can write it down, even more scientifically than using her crayon. "But I don't want to test it. It's not really a science question."

Twenny is talking kind of small, and he keeps hunching closer to the table, like he's scared of the question. So it's got to be a really serious question, and maybe they need Zawa to talk real serious about it.

"Do you..." Twenny says, and he keeps curling his arms up like he wants to take a nap, and he's trying to be really small, and not look at her. "Were you ever scared by my quirk?"

Eri shakes her head at first, before she remembers how Twenny is sometimes. "Nope."

Sometimes, even after Twenny started asking her questions again, Twenny is scared to ask questions. Twenny is scared of his quirk after they got rescued, and even if it doesn't make sense to Eri, it kind of does. She's still scared of her quirk sometimes, but she thinks if she uses it more, she'll feel better, just like how she was really scared to stop it in the mountains, but she wasn't scared at all after she did. She felt a lot better.

But Twenny said he doesn't want to 'test it,' so Eri knows he doesn't want to use his quirk on her. But she doesn't really know how to make Twenny not scared of his quirk any other way. "Your quirk isn't scary, Twenny. My quirk can be scary, but it's not now, and I can learn to use it better so it won't be scary at all. But sometimes your quirk feels kinda nice and floaty, even if sometimes it feels like you're scared, but even then that doesn't make me scared. It just makes me sad, because I don't want you to be scared."

Twenny looks up at her with his arms crossed to kind of cover his face, like he's still kind of scared of that. "I'm sorry. I probably make you sad a lot."

The way Twenny says that makes Eri really sad, and she has to pull up one of Twenny's arms so she can hug him really close, and squeeze the sad really hard so it goes away. But Twenny holds her too, and even if he doesn't squeeze her as hard, it works to squeeze out all of her sad. "You don't make me sad all the time, Twenny! You make me really happy too! So don't be sad about making me sad, 'cause you make me happy more than being sad. And that's an experiment!"

Eri gets really excited when she figures it out, and she has to lean back and grab Twenny's face so he pays really good attention this time. Twenny's eyes look really red, kind of like Zawa's sometimes, and she has to be careful not to grab the places where he got hurt on his face. But he looks like he's paying good attention.

"Sometimes, you gotta do an experiment a lot of times to make sure it's right, and sometimes it doesn't come out the same way, but if it comes out one way more than the other, that means it's right. So, you gotta spend a lot of time with me, and I can write down how many times you make me sad, or make me happy, and prove that you make me way more happy than sad," Eri says, and she thinks it might work better if she can get more stickers to count all the times that Twenny makes her happy, but maybe she made Twenny happy again, because he smiles a little better this time.

"I think that sounds like a good idea. Science always has the answers, huh," Twenny says, and he gets an itch behind his head when he looks at the rest of her science kit. "I think you know more about science than me right now. Maybe you could help me do my science workbook."

"Twenny," Eri says, and she tries not to pout, but Twenny is being ridiculous. "You know a whole lot more about science than me. You've been learning stuff before I was even born! And you always used to read books, all the time!"

"Yeah, but..." Twenny's head must be really itchy, and he kind of frowns at it before he puts an arm around her, and kind of hugs her like that, so she sits on his leg to get more comfortable. "I didn't learn the things that you do now, when I was your age. I'm learning a lot now, but...."

"But you learned different stuff too, and just because we know different stuff doesn't mean you're dumb, because everyone thinks that Sailor Moon is dumb but she's really smart about making friends!" Eri says, even though Twenny isn't good at making friends, or sometimes cooking, but he's good at a lot of other stuff. "And you're really good at talking with your hands, and reading books, and singing. And it's okay to be scared of singing with other people around, because the other Yama gets scared of that too, but Kyou makes him do it. But I won't make you do that, 'cause it's okay if you only sing to me."

"And it's okay if I..." Twenny starts to say something else, and he's only kind of scared to say it. He keeps looking at her science kit, and the coffee, and Eri really wants to know what it is, so she can tell him it's okay. Because that's her job sometimes, because Twenny is scared of a lot of stuff that's dumb sometimes.

But Yama comes in and scares Twenny anyway, even though Yama's just dressed up like he's gonna go outside, with an extra hero jacket in his hands. "Hey little sciency listeners! Are we ready to go and trample some snow with a little boy's only adventure?"

Eri was excited and ready to go, but only Twenny and Yama and Zawa going out and leaving her here is mean. "Yama, you can't have a boy's only adventure 'cause that's not fair! I wanna play in the snow too!"

"It's not that, it's-" Twenny looks at Yama, but he kind of looks mad when he looks at the door, so mad that his face is kind of red. "Training. With my quirk. We just have to walk in the snow to get there."

"Ah, yep! Yep, that's what it is, just training with two guys who have talking quirks- voice quirks and all," Yama says, and now he looks kind of nervous. It doesn't really sound like good training like the heroes get excited about, it sounds like the bad training that makes everyone scared or tired. And Twenny sleeps too much already, so Eri doesn't really want him to be tired. "And it sounds like Shou might be up for a little training for a little bean, and maybe you can crash the herolets' training too, make sure they remember that someone's special day is coming up."

Eri doesn't know which one she's more excited about, training with her quirk with Zawa or getting to see all her hero friends again. "Okay, but you gotta get ready Twenny, it's cold outside!"

Twenny's already wearing a comfy and soft sweater, but he needs a jacket, but Yama holds the jacket from his hero costume up for her, and that's almost perfect.

"And you gotta match, 'cause you're training together!" Eri says, and Yama smiles at her a whole lot when she gets up and grabs the jacket, before he runs into the office to get another one out of the bunch that he has in there. But when she tries to give Twenny the jacket, he looks like he really doesn't want to wear it, but that's too bad. "Twenny, it's the rule that if you have fun with Yama or Zawa, I gotta pick your clothes."

"Eri..." Twenny says, and he looks kind of sad at the jacket, but his face is really red, like he's really embarrassed. "Can you please pick-"

"And we're ready to go!" Yama says, and he's smiling really big after changing into his hero jacket, even if it looks kind of weird without his speakers or his black pants, and his hair can't even swoop when it's under his beanie hat. "Just waiting for one little listener to get ready for the show! Or snow!"

Twenny pouts, a whole lot at Yama, and Yama has to drop his arms and sigh a whole lot, like he's play-sad about it.

"I promise not to take a picture, and not tell a soul, but if that still isn't okay then maybe a little bean can pick another jacket that doesn't match. Maybe for a batch of apple cider when we get back?" Yama says, and Eri really wants some more apple cider after the first time he made it. It was so warm, and sweet, and cinnamon-y, and it's just like an apple over but she could drink it!

But Twenny takes the jacket and puts it on, even if he still doesn't seem happy about it. And his face still looks really red, but it looks really cute when Twenny and Yama match like that. "Have fun at training! I love you!"

"I love you too, little bean," Yama says, and he even slides down on his knees to give her a hug, like he's really happy with her, even though he's leaving. But maybe he'll still be happy enough to make her apple cider if she asks really nice. "You deserve the whole world, kiddo."

"I love you too," Twenny says, even if he's trying to hide his face in the part of his shirt that covers his neck, 'cause he kind of forgets that it's not supposed to cover his chin sometimes. Or maybe his chin gets cold.

But when Twenny and Yama leave to go on their training adventure, Eri feels kind of cold, so she puts up her science kit to get a hug from Zawa and feel better, and ask about their training.

Because even when science is fun, sometimes spending time with Zawa is the best thing ever.

*

In Yamada's defense, he just meant to bring out the jacket as a little joke, a little teasing since he feels like he's been missing out on the opportunity with Hitoshi lately, and he wasn't prepared for Eri to lay down the law like that.

Maybe that was a little underhanded of Yamada to let Hitoshi simmer like that, before he tried to talk the little bean down into a fashion choice a little less mortifying, but Hitoshi does need opportunities to assert himself. In hindsight, he can claim that's exactly the reason he had the jacket in his hands in the first place.

But now, he and Hitoshi are wearing matching jackets from his hero uniform, the kid refuses to look at him and he keeps looking around campus like he's terrified someone will spot him and call him out for being a fan, and Yamada is still battling the urge to make sure Hitoshi is comfortable with him but also take a picture of this moment because it might not happen again. The horrifying prospect of someone seeing them like this makes the quick trip to the cafeteria an even quicker step, and if Hitoshi just happens to walk a little closer to him when he sees a small group of students in the distance, Yamada pays it no mind.

The quiet walk where Hitoshi is too mortified to sign anything just means the reveal of the 'secret mission' is all the better, and it seems like they're halfway in the cafeteria before the kid realizes where they are, and starts to question what they're doing in this empty place. "Breaking in like we really own the place, but don't worry! I got everything squared away with Nezu and Lunch Rush, they understood that this project is just way too big for our kitchen."

Our kitchen, Yamada never thought he'd say that to anyone other than Shouta, and only mean it in the technical sense that they'd both rent an apartment that had a kitchen in it. But for all those little things that are similar to Shouta as a teenager, the culinary skills are completely Hitoshi's own. And Yamada can't help the proud little tingle in his chest when he throws open the doors to the bigger-than-industrial sized kitchen, with all those gleaming stainless steel appliances that Shouta wouldn't even be able to name, that makes Hitoshi's eyes almost glow at the possibilities that Yamada hasn't even explained yet.

"So, I know a few things that Eri likes to eat, and while apple flavored cakes are a thing, I thought it might be worthwhile to whip up a full course sample to make sure we've got the perfect combination, and this is the perfect place to go wild with it," Yamada says, and sees that Lunch Rush already did him a favor on top of the huge one they're standing in with several mixing bowls and necessary tools already laid out on one of the giant prep tables. "Chocolate cakes, vanilla cakes, fruit cakes, any cake that we could name, we've got the stuff to make it right here. We can make a few combinations in cupcake form, then take them home and see who the winner is, and since it's just a sample, we won't have to worry about ruining sugar for her for life."

The cupcake idea might have been news to him when Lunch Rush suggested it, but luckily Lunch Rush is enough in the know to set out a couple cupcake tins instead of thinking that Yamada would keep the sample selection to a mere dozen on the cake base. Yamada has all the recipes he could think of with icing flavors too, and he's sure there's a lot of produce that might go to waste if they don't sample a small selection before it's dispersed to the student dorms to bulk up their kitchens.

The quick decision to shut down early left a lot of preparations around that lacking, but Lunch Rush wasn't going to let the students go hungry on his watch and worked out a fantastic plan, as expected of the Culinary Hero himself. The cafeteria couldn't be operational as Lunch Rush always took the winter break off to work some magic for various soup kitchens and homeless shelters, but even if the students wouldn't have a chef who could whip up a meal in seconds from 57 different menus, they wouldn't go hungry.

Yamada strips out of his own jacket and Hitoshi seems eager to follow, but he can't seem to fight that twitch on the corner of his mouth that almost works into a smile. 'How many?'

His favorite sous chef, back in action in a big way, in honestly the biggest stunt Yamada has ever tried to pull. "17 cake batter flavors to start with, but we've also got ten icings in the mix and five topping ideas, so...."

'340?' Hitoshi asks, with a little horror in his eyes. Not entirely writing off the project, but Yamada figures that his math is a little more sound than the vague idea that Yamada had before he actually tried to work out the logistics that far.

"...Maybe we can whittle it down, we don't have to make every combination, just the ones that make sense," Yamada says, before he starts the hunt for a pen and paper to work out some cake planning, which he probably should have done before.

Yamada is still sold on those five toppings, because even if he's sure the glazed apples will probably win, sweet lemon, blueberry, strawberry, and homemade chocolate sauce can't be ruled out either. But he can stick to classic icings and classic combinations, chocolate sauce on chocolate whipped mousse on chocolate cake, strawberry reduction with buttercream icing and birthday cake. He manages to whittle down a lot on the complicated icings to wind up with four, and twelve cake bases. As a fiend for good cheesecake himself, he sets up a small cheesecake tin for a variety slice plan, to go along with all 48 cupcake combinations that will be baked in the cupcake tins.

Hitoshi pokes around the refrigerators to find a stick of butter to start preparing the pans while Yamada gathers everything else they need to start from scratch. The sight of the industrial sized bag of sugar that they'll probably use the majority of is almost as shocking as how heavy it is, but by the time that Yamada is done with all the heavy lifting, his favorite sous chef has every bowl and smaller ingredients set out, looking at the recipes on Yamada's phone like he's not entirely sure where to start.

Yamada isn't sure where to start in another sense, but the distraction of cooking has carried him through many a hard time. "Let's see, we'll need to make enough batter for each of these cakes, and I'm pretty sure a cake's worth is enough batter for a few cupcakes. The cheesecake will probably take the longest, so we can start on that first, then set up the other cakes."

'Can measure. Other cakes,' Hitoshi signs, still glancing at the phone and signing slow enough that all the hesitation comes through clearly. The confidence still isn't quite there, despite all of Yamada's efforts to make the kid believe that he's a pretty fantastic cook, especially considering that he's only been at it for a few months.

"Divide and conquer! That sounds like a fantastic plan. You can start anywhere you want, and let me know if you need any help!" Yamada says, even if his mind is already tangling in the weeds when he thinks about what Hitoshi starts doing.

Yamada knows his mother's cheesecake recipe by heart, and it's simple enough to grab everything he needs from the row of refrigerators and get to cracking in his one bowl. But everytime he looks at Hitoshi he sees that pen moving around, behind his ear, in his hand, the corner of his mouth, between the mixing bowls which are all labelled with a piece of scratch paper in front of them, tallying up what Hitoshi has put in. He's making twelve cake batters at once, even if the amount of eggs and flour and milk doesn't change much between them, his kid is noting everything and double-checking the recipe about five times before he distributes.

Yamada's head is getting dizzy with numbers he isn't even looking at, and once again he's blown away by how smart his kid is. "Alright, where can I jump in, cake boss?"

Yamada dusts off his hands that only got a bit of powdered sugar so far, but when Hitoshi turns to look at him fully for the first time in half an hour, Yamada can see both wide eyes and a solid dusting of flour on the right side of Hitoshi's purple hair. 'You're done?'

"One cheesecake is way easier to whip up than twelve at once, kiddo! You could even say it's..." Yamada has to do the finger guns, he's been waiting for the opportunity and he can't hold off any longer. "A piece of cake."

He gets the eyeroll of all eyerolls, not even slipping into English could shield the teenager in front of him from the agony of that bad joke. Hitoshi shakes his head once he recovers his will to live, the pen that was hidden behind his other ear is tossed between two bowls on the counter.

'Difficult,' Hitoshi signs, then points at the bowls on the left side. 'Easy,' the easier ones are apparently on the right, because not only is Hitoshi making twelve cakes at once, noting down every single ingredient he adds to keep track of the chaos, he's got everything organized in accordance to difficulty in the recipe.

It is almost physically painful to work alongside Hitoshi with the urge to ruffle his hair only growing exponentially with the flour streaked through where the kid might have gotten frustrated and forgotten how messy their work is. But it just gets messier.

Sifting, mixing, beating, hunting for the rarer ingredients that just have to be added to follow the recipe to the letter, the time is starting to add up as they work down the line, finishing up the more basic recipes that don't call for grinding fresh cinnamon because the jar apparently causes the spice to lose flavor. Yamada's shirt and the top of his pants are done for before they're ready to start pouring the batter, and Hitoshi?

That fuzzy lavender sweater apparently picks up everything like a walking duster. It's losing pigment to the confectionary sugar and flour by the minute.

The batter-to-cupcake-tin-transfer does not get off to a great start. Hitoshi starts pouring from the bowl but loses his grip for a second, a second is enough to overfill the first hole and claim the first row for the vanilla batter. But Yamada promises that's what they wanted to do in the first place, it makes sense for that row to get filled so the flavors are in order, he finds one spoon to do some recovery work on the overfilled portion and a ladle to make distribution a breeze.

Hitoshi still looks at each batter's notes and checks the recipe again before they get to pouring, because Yamada knows he's pouring his heart into this as if this was Eri's real birthday cake, and not just a sample spread to pick out her tastes. Maybe the birthday cake doesn't have to be perfect, when Eri's only turning six and has plenty of time to develop a culinary taste, but Yamada knows all too well that she still hasn't had as much opportunity to explore sweet flavors like other little kids her age.

And he knows she's not the only one, but that's a sneaky little ulterior motive Yamada tries not to think about before the cakes are ready.

Yamada knows that a few recipes called for different baking temperatures and times, but it should work out fine. He'll check the tins when the first batch is supposed to be done, and at worst, he'll have to retrieve the cupcakes by flavor as they move down the line, but with three ovens filled - the poor cheesecake all by his lonesome - they have four icings, double batches of fruit reductions and a chocolate sauce to make and about half an hour to make them in.

"Alright, so we can start off with three buttercream batches and add the flavors for the caramel and strawberry afterwards, then the chocolate mousse," Yamada says, pulling up the buttercream icing recipe even though he's pretty sure he's memorized it, Hitoshi pulling out another scratch paper to triple the ingredient count close to his side, elbows touching. He's pretty sure he's not imagining how Hitoshi's head keeps getting closer to his shoulder before it jerks away, never making contact but getting close to that little habit his kid has.

Or had, before last week. Yamada thought he would be lucky if Hitoshi met his eye when he came back to UA after that trip into the mountains, and while he's grateful that it's better, there's a new way that it's not.

It's a shorter wall, but it feels all the more insurmountable when he doesn't want to push. "So, with the laptop. Do ya feel up to talking about that?"

Hitoshi looks at him, luckily looks a little more confused than fearful with the way his eyebrows barely move together. 'Zawa coffee said not in trouble. Talked about it.'

"Of course, it's not really a 'trouble' talk," Yamada says, and he tries not to feel uncomfortable with his kid and broaching topics that might be a little uncomfortable on both their ends. Anger issues, dealing with that, how not to deal with a surge of power ripping them apart to create havoc on the outside. He doesn't want to scold Hitoshi for feeling that way, if anything he knows it could be a step in the right direction to assert himself, to feel when he's been wronged. There's just better ways of doing that without going too far in that power surge. "It's pretty normal to feel overwhelmed like that, and I think it might be kind of new for you to feel like that. Especially at your age, when the hormones are getting all kinds of crazy. A lot of guys your age might knock holes into walls or scream and shout, and you can probably guess which one I was doing a lot of."

Screaming. He can still feel how his cheeks would burn from his grin when his Heroics teacher would say that they had quirk training that day. Yamada could bottle up a lot inside, and whenever he checked his surroundings, sometimes he had to dig a little deeper to find just enough space to stuff more of it away. He can't even imagine what his poor mothers would look like if he hauled off and punched a wall, he was still terrified to find out what people would see if they saw that raw side of him. So, he wore a mask, on top of the bottle, and found other ways to let loose.

Hitoshi is looking at him, recipe and pen forgotten in his hands, like Yamada is suddenly telling him the secrets of the universe. Maybe, he's just gone quiet because his hands are full, but Yamada tries not to think about how that really wouldn't stop him now. "Shouting is much better than punching, for the most part. You can still get a nasty sore throat, but that's better than busted knuckles. A lot of what it boils down to is recognizing the right time, right place, and right means to let out some steam so you can tackle what set you off with a clear head, even if it's tempting sometimes to let the power do the talking for you. But that almost always turns out bad, because you're not entirely you when you're like that. It's a part of you and all, but it's... no filter. Just a lot of hurt and fear coming to the surface trying to get out of your system in the worst way."

Hitoshi tilts his head, staring at the mixing bowl in front of Yamada, considering something before he puts the pen and paper down to put them to words. 'Eri after quirk. Scream with you.'

"Exactly like that," Yamada says. "Eri gets pretty worked up after she uses her quirk like that, and she needs a way to let off steam in a way she's comfortable with, and will actually help her out. Ripping up paper or tossing things around might work for some people, but Eri doesn't seem to like seeing how she got like that, so our little scream concerts work out pretty well. She likes to wear my headphones too, since they cancel out all the noise, and all that mad can get out without the little bean getting startled by it."

Yamada starts unwrapping the butter sticks, just so they can both have a task to take their minds a little off the conversation, Hitoshi already reaching for the sifter for the confection sugar. He doesn't know if he should bring up Eri as an example, especially after the mess Hitoshi's quirk startled him into the vents, and there's not really a vent to crawl into in here.

"There was a quote from a book I read, that kind of helped me understand why that happens. 'Your anger is the part of you that loves you, and doesn't want you to be mistreated again,'" Yamada says setting the bowl into the paddle mixer and flipping the switch to a low and slow beat to start breaking up the butter. He can see out of the corner of his eye that Hitoshi is sifting into another bowl, almost like he didn't hear it, but that tiny frown at the corner of his mouth is thoughtful. "Even if it's scary for Eri to have that kind of feeling, all that anger is probably welling up like that to try to keep her safe from getting hurt. Because she had you around to let her know that she never deserved to get treated like that."

The sifting stops, Hitoshi's hands frozen even if he doesn't look at Yamada. Yamada wants to make it perfectly clear that Hitoshi still isn't at fault for that, he can't take on what Chisaki did as his own doing.

"That's honestly a great thing for Eri, you know! If she didn't have you to protect her, to show her how she should have been treated and cared for, she might not have recognized how bad it was," Yamada says, because he's done that math, he knows how malleable a toddler like that would have been to those horrific circumstances presented as normal in that isolation. "It's not hard to love Eri's tantrums and grumps when you see it as a little girl standing up for herself with a lion roaring behind her, demanding to be treated right. Miss 'You Can't Have A Boy's Only Trip Because That's Not Fair' wouldn't know that's not fair if she didn't have a certain little listener telling her that she deserved the world from the start. And I'm proud of both of you for that."

Hitoshi does turn to look at him with those words, sifter lowering into the bowl. Terrified, open, vulnerable, Yamada knows he's inching so close to Hitoshi's heart the more he keeps talking about how that painful past was wrong but Hitoshi made a miracle all on his own, when he shouldn't have had to. And he knows there should have been someone in his corner telling him that it was wrong to be put in that situation.

And that voice might have only started talking recently, making all the more trouble with that sudden noise. "Being angry is okay, and being mistreated isn't, and it's hard to work through that moment where it's all too much. It's kind of like what happened this morning. At the time you were angry about your quirk, and how you thought it made Eri feel. Probably a little angry that you were put in that situation, which is good, that's totally normal. But it's a lot to feel at once, and taking it out any way you could by yourself sounded like a good idea. There's other ways to do that, but you figured out the basics all on your own - step away from the situation so you can come back to it with a clear head, and afterwards it sounded like you were able to talk to Eri to work everything out."

Hitoshi nods, slowly glancing at the mixer, but the kid looks all the more worn out by the memory of that. 'Hate quirk,' Hitoshi signs, quick and with a flash of a curl on his lip to show how much he still means that. 'Eri fine. Still. Hate it.'

Yamada nods, he knows hate is a strong word to level at any part of yourself, at a quirk or an emotion or even how tall and gangly you are in middle school, but it's starting to line up with something that's been bugging him this whole time.

Hitoshi's signing is just a little off, like he's gotten just a little rusty at it. Because he talks to Shouta, he talks to everyone else, he doesn't use sign language as much anymore.

Because sign language definitely can't work through Hitoshi's quirk. "It's just my opinion, and I know I can't change the way you think, but I still think your quirk is pretty nifty. If there's anyone I would trust to wash my brain and take control, it would be someone that wouldn't want to hurt me, wouldn't want to hurt anyone. Someone who cares a lot for other people in his life, and deserves a whole lot of care in return."

Which, is another big concern at the edges of this conversation, about how Hitoshi shouldn't be pushing his friends away out of fear that they'll get hurt, and about how Hitoshi deserves to have friends and be safe and Yamada will be damned if he can't convince the kid to believe him despite the recent attack as evidence to the contrary, in his mind. But all of that falls out of Yamada's head when Hitoshi steps a little closer, his shoulder just a few inches shy of Yamada's own pressed behind Yamada's own, his forehead falling against his collarbone because this is kind of how Hitoshi seems to define comfortable physical interaction - with the ability to hide his face. But with a few purple hairs ticking Yamada's chin, what really seals the deal is Hitoshi's arm hovering around Yamada's waist, not confident enough to make contact, but enough to try.

They're making great progress on the hugs, and Yamada can't help but wrap his arms around the kid to make it a technical one.

The butter is beyond whipped when that quiet moment is over, where Yamada finds himself too awed by the vulnerability to press further and Hitoshi can't sign anything with his hands around Yamada's back. But honestly, Yamada might be more whipped than the butter.

Because he's honestly considering waging a one-man war against The Commission if they try to take this kid away from him, just because Hitoshi doesn't feel comfortable talking to him yet. Hitoshi doesn't have to be anyone other than Hitoshi to deserve what he's got right now, and Yamada might have needed the reminder that the kid still cares about him.

And that has nothing to do with talking to him.

*

If Hitoshi never looks at another cup of sugar in his life, it will be too soon.

He can't get the smell out of his nose, he can feel the dust in his lungs, and the taste is still in his mouth even if he's only tasted the reduction sauces to make sure they're right. Yamada thought that the lemon wasn't sweet enough when it was almost perfect, but at least they're almost finished.

He's not entirely sure he wants to be. Despite how much work it was at first, how much of a mess it was to figure out, even when he's looking at all the cupcakes cooling on the rack and he can't wait to see which one Eri likes, how excited she'll be by the surprise, he missed this.

Just being with Yamada. Just talking to him, just hearing his voice. Even if it's almost painful at times with the things he says, the crazy things he seems to believe about Hitoshi when he shouldn't, he still missed hearing them.

But when Hitoshi looks in the huge refrigerator stocked solely with fruit, still thinking about something he's sure wouldn't work out well, as he picks out a pear to eat, the hunger gnawing at him unbearable now, Yamada says something crazy enough to make Hitoshi think he can read minds. "Been thinking of ideas for Eri's birthday present?"

Hitoshi shuts the door and takes a bite, walking away as though that's not more obvious. It's stupid, but he wanted to make sure there were plenty of apples there, plenty enough for mistakes. But with the pear already bitten, he can't put it on the counter and has to hold it in his mouth to sign, and probably looks stupid. 'Not sure. Eri wants me to spend time with her. I want to make apple dessert. For breakfast.'

Everything he thinks of is stupid.

Eri at least told him the minimum requirement - to spend every moment from the time she wakes up until after she goes to sleep with her, but that's the minimum. That's not even a gift, that's only a deviation to their new normal at UA, before they were rescued they would spend all their time together. The biggest complication to Eri's birthday is how that's not true anymore, there are other people involved.

Even the idea that keeps sticking in his mind, to make those apple turnovers she loves so much, is stupid because Sato is involved. He's going to make them exactly the way that Eri likes, Hitoshi knows that for a fact, and he knows that any that he tries to make will at best pale in comparison but probably turn out awful.

He knows that Mirio has a gift for Eri already, and he doesn't even need to know what it is to know it's going to make her happy. Aizawa, Yamada, 1-A, Monoma - they all planned in advance to get Eri the perfect gift from all of them, and 22 perfect gifts means that he has no chance to give Eri something decent.

Which means he's going to give her a bad gift for her birthday. Her first birthday since getting rescued, her first real birthday. And he's going to ruin that, because he's that outnumbered, and hopeless from the start.

"That's perfect, Hitoshi! Getting those little 'apple-overs' to start off her day, then spending the whole day with her favorite 'Toshi,'" Yamada keeps talking like that, and Hitoshi can't decide if he's being mocking or not. For the birthdays he tried to give her before they were rescued, he at least had something to give her. A torn teddy bear, a bar of soap, a new book to read, he had presents even if he couldn't give her the certainty of being safe that day, and any of those things would just be insulting now. So he has nothing. "Eri's probably going to get a lot of 'things,' and with Christmas coming up too, I doubt she's going to have much room left in her room at the end of the holidays. But getting something special from someone who knows her that well is worth treasuring."

There's another reason why he picked that, why he gave up to the inevitability that he wouldn't be able to give Eri a proper gift, and shouldn't try. If he gave her something to be treasured like that, she'd keep it.

And she shouldn't, especially now. "But, a little birdie told me that we have some clothes shopping to do, and since I haven't seen any action on my Amazon account, maybe we can take some time to revamp your wardrobe."

Hitoshi looks at Yamada, who looks like he's just looking at his phone. But he knows that Yamada is gathering his strength before he tries to frustrate Hitoshi into giving up on living.

Hitoshi has to take another bite, closer to the core of the pear, when he brings himself to lean against the counter beside Yamada and see that Yamada was already looking at black leather pants.

The jacket is comfortable. The pants would not be. He doesn't have to try it.

There are a lot of impractical clothes that Yamada insists on looking at. He already has a pair of pants that have tears in the knees, he would think that they were old and damaged if he didn't see students on campus wearing them sometimes. Yamada does pull up some pants that are practical, that are complete, but there's a pair he seems to scroll away from quickly that grabs Hitoshi's interest.

They're black, they have a lot of pockets, and even if Hitoshi doesn't have to think about places to store weapons or anything else, he still thinks that's useful. There are also chains falling loosely on the sides, along with some extra fabric that almost looks like a skirt. Easier to hide a knife underneath, or even several knives.

He could put snacks in the pockets too, but he's too curious about whether the chains can be detached as weapons to let Yamada scroll away from it, tapping the image and picking another picture that shows that the chains do come off at both ends. The picture says it's for washing. But they probably have to say that, legally.

"Oh, yeah. I didn't know Tripp was still making pants. Those are cooler than the parachute pants I used to rock back in the day," Yamada says, a little nervously. Maybe he doesn't want Hitoshi to get it, and when he looks at the price, he understands why. Maybe he shouldn't. "It's practically a right of passage to own something a little punky, a little out there like that."

Hitoshi has to look at Yamada, to make sure. He wants them, Yamada seems to think he should have something like this. They're not damaged, they're useful, and he can't deny that he wants them.

Yamada takes the phone back, but before Hitoshi can think of convincing himself it's fine, he's flipping through the colors available. "How many do you want? Five? One for every day of the week?"

Hitoshi actually has to argue to just get two, the solid black and the one with purple seams and a purple skirt. He tries not to think about money.

But Yamada seems like he wants to spend even more of it. Yamada looks at jackets, and Hitoshi doesn't tell him why none of them catch his interest, but they're not spikey enough. Even if Yamada still wears too much leather to be practical in a fight, the spiked pads are useful, and his jacket is loose enough on Hitoshi that the restrictive leather wouldn't bother him.

The boots that Yamada moves on to, 'combat boots,' are interesting. Some of them have steel to reinforce the heels and toes of the boots, he can imagine how powerful it would feel to kick with them. Yamada has a lot of opinions about the brands, he's apparently worn a lot of these boots, and he does still wear them when he's in his hero costume.

There's a pair that Hitoshi can't bring himself to ask for, even when it seems as simple as looking at Yamada to do that, and has to bite his lip as though that would stop him. They would be perfect, even if they don't have spikes on them.

Yamada taps on them, only to go back and search for shirts, but he hands his phone to Hitoshi to check on the cupcakes. But that seems almost intentional how the opportunity to still put those boots in the cart is left in his hands in Yamada's absence, and though Hitoshi looks again, he can't bring himself to do it. He has shoes, he doesn't need shirts either. He just needs pants, because most of them are too tight now.

But, curiosity still gets the better of him, probably because of those boots. 'Eri cat outfit?'

His attempts to find it himself lead to too many results and none of them are right, and Yamada talks about certain names like 'Tripp' or 'Doc Martins' so he knows the outfit Eri wore when she was in the hospital should have a name. But Yamada is looking at the icing bowls, moving them around like he's getting ready to decorate. He isn't looking at Hitoshi, so he didn't see him sign.

It should be easy, to just open his mouth. Just to talk to Yamada, to even pretend that he's Aizawa if he has to.

But he's not, no matter what Yamada said. No matter what Aizawa says, the thought keeps twisting in his head until it nearly turns his stomach, the image of Yamada's green eyes glazing over like that is horrible. Even if he could convince himself it wouldn't work, it's too difficult to risk it.

He doesn't need another cat shirt anyway, he has plenty. They all still fit. They're just not the same one Eri has.

And that's probably how it should be.

Hitoshi still looks at the boots one more time, but this time, there's a picture of a suggested product he hadn't seen. It's a mask, but not a face mask. It's a real mask, or at least, that's what it looks like.

He taps on it, because he's not sure if this is something that easy to buy. If Yamada or Aizawa could just add that to their cart and end their worries with him and his quirk, but it's not exactly a real mask. It has spikes and straps, but the two clasps at the bottom don't have anything to lock into, to keep his jaw shut. He sees a picture of someone wearing it, the sides of their head shaved with a bright red spike for their hair, almost like Yamada styles his hair, but it fans out more. People willingly wear that mask, just because they like how it looks. It's probably comfortable, 'adjustable' according to the notes beside it.

There's more masks suggested under this one, one of them he knows is meant to poisonous gases out of the wearer's lungs. It also has spikes, and green radioactive symbols on the ends that stick out on either side, those protrusions look a little like speakers.

“Find anything else?” Yamada asks, and Hitoshi shakes his head, making sure to click on the cart before handing back the phone. Yamada can decide if he really wants to buy all of that, he doesn’t have to know what Hitoshi was looking at.

Hitoshi isn’t sure if he wants him to know, and busies himself by picking a cupcake up, even if he wants to watch Yamada decorate the first one. To at least give himself a chance not to fuck it up, even though he knows Yamada will make it look better, since he makes everything look better.

He doesn’t know if Yamada really bought those things until he puts his phone on the counter, smiling at Hitoshi. He doesn’t say it, but there’s something in his smile that convinces Hitoshi that he did. Even the pants that he’s most excited about. “We can listen to some tunes to get those artistic juices really flowing for these cakes! You can change the music anytime, it’s my playlist, but you... are officially the DJ.”

Hitoshi barely stops himself from rolling his eyes, because Yamada is the professional DJ. But he’s never disliked any of Yamada’s songs, and he’s had plenty of opportunities to find something he hates. Even when Yamada and Byte Sound try to argue about a song or band, and ask for his opinion for a tie breaker, he doesn’t really have an opinion like they do. He just likes it.

And the music that Yamada picks is no different. It’s a little louder than the songs he usually plays, a lot of guitars and drums that roar and clatter, the singer seems to just be growling the words instead of singing, so it’s hard to pick out what he’s saying. It sounds angry.

And he can’t deny that even now, even when he’s more at peace than he has been for what feels like weeks, he likes it.

“I like listening to certain tunes when I’m feeling a certain way, kind of ‘vibing’ with it,” Yamada says, nodding in a loose and slow way that’s almost mocking, especially the way he squints his eye a little. He’s not paying much attention to how he spreads the icing on the cupcake, but Hitoshi is. “Some people like to sing along to it too, yell out their frustrations. I’ve been to a few punk concerts when I was younger, and moshing and headbanging, throwing people around and getting thrown around yourself... It’s almost a cleansing experience.”

Hitoshi hasn’t ‘moshed,’ and he’s not sure if headbanging is something more than banging your head against something, but the way Yamada says it doesn’t seem like it’s something that could result in a concussion. He’s never been thrown around in a way that really felt ‘cleansing.’

But he can’t deny that sometimes, throwing someone else around does feel like that. “But, I heard there’s a little bean that thinks someone’s singing should be hers alone.”

‘Right,’ Hitoshi signs quickly, trying not to feel how his face feels hotter when Yamada laughs softly like that. He’s not singing for anyone else, only Eri. If Yamada ever heard him, he’d probably die immediately. He’d just stop breathing and not a single person could tell him to breathe again.

“It is a little embarrassing, putting yourself out there like that, I can definitely understand. Shou still can’t make it through a full song whenever the mood strikes him, he just gets too embarrassed,” Yamada says, and Hitoshi can’t really imagine Aizawa singing. For any reason, but he’s not sure what it would sound like either, how his voice would change. If it would still have that growl he almost always has, if he would sound like this singer does and how he practically roars.

Yamada somehow makes the icing so smooth by the end, the sides of the cake are coated in a perfect white and the caramelized apples don't slide off the edges by how carefully Yamada puts them on top. Hitoshi wants to make sure that Yamada makes all the cupcakes with the apple topping, because he knows that one will be Eri's favorite, but he nudges the icing bowl closer to Hitoshi as a reminder that he should do something with the cupcake he's just holding.

"So, I don't want you to get embarrassed or anything, and if you don't want to talk about it, it's cool, but I just want to know... what happened with Monoma this morning? With the pickle jar and all," Yamada says, and Hitoshi doesn't want to answer. He has a cupcake to decorate, and he could use that as an excuse to bide his time, to come up with a lie that isn't as stupid as the truth.

But something gnaws at him, like a hunger, convincing him that he shouldn't lie to Yamada, especially now. He'll just have to carry the weight of that lie, and he wants this to be a 'cleansing experience,' like it feels like already. 'Thief came with gifts. Had coffee. Didn't want to ta- see him. Threatened. A little.'

Hitoshi picks at the butter knife he'd rather be using in the pause he takes between signs, he almost signed 'talk' but he knows the rest of it, if he goes on, would be wholly incriminating. He's almost certain that Yamada knows, but he hasn't said it. Aizawa definitely told Yamada that he can talk, but Yamada hasn't told him that he knows. If Hitoshi tells him, there's no denying it, it's out in the open.

It's honest. Even if everything is ruined, at least he'll know. 'Used quirk to make him drink juice. Probably wrong.'

"Yeah, I can see how that could be a little funny, and I know you're not really a fan of the guy," Yamada says, and Hitoshi is too thankful that his attention is drawn to another cupcake, now that Yamada knows he talked to Quirk Thief, he just doesn't want to see what he thinks of it fully. To see his face, if Yamada looked at him. "But, a little prank like that is kind of hard to pull off with a friend, a little embarrassment is fun but you have to know someone pretty well to know where the line is, before it goes too far. He didn't seem too upset by it though, so maybe you can patch things up with him. If you want to, and all. I know Monoma comes on a little strong, just a little more than good old Bakugo."

Hitoshi told Yamada that he can talk, that he can use his quirk freely, that he did to make Quirk Thief suffer. And Yamada just wants to talk about friends? And Bakugo? 'Should apologize. It was wrong. Don't hate him.'

As much. "A little apology goes a long way, and I think that's the right idea! Just talking things out with that person, trying to smooth things over after a little kerfuffle. Everyone makes mistakes, and that's no reason to leave a good friendship behind."

Yamada has already finished another cupcake, and even if Hitoshi picks up the knife and a wad of icing, he has other reasons to do it. He knows what Yamada is going to say, somehow he knows about that. Hitoshi probably made it obvious, if Aizawa didn't tell him outright. He doesn't know if he wants Yamada to say it, until he does.

"And it seems like maybe something might have happened with our herolet friends on campus? Haven't had a Bakugo study session in a while, or any antics with any chats," Yamada says, because he already knows, but he wants Hitoshi to say it.

The knife clatters too loudly when Hitoshi drops it in the bowl, no matter how loud the music is, he feels louder. 'Blast-chan stupid. All stupid. Don't care. I don't need friends.'

He looks at Yamada, even if everything feels wrong now, it feels horrible again. How just a glance at Yamada's green eyes seems to strip away his skin, everything hurts and he just wants to get away from it, especially when Yamada turns to look at him like that. "I get it, you know. And I'm not trying to say that you have to have friends, or that you have to patch anything up if things got a little messy. If these herolets are just dumb and annoying and you're relieved to have a break in your social calendar, I'm more than happy for ya, kiddo."

But Yamada doesn't think that. He doesn't believe that's what Hitoshi wants for a second.

"Apart from the rules we all live by, about not hurting people with words or otherwise, there's no rule to make you have friends, and there's not really any written rules about making friends or keeping them. It gets pretty messy when everyone is different and has their own needs and opinions and boundaries and stuff, it's easy to make a mistake," Yamada says, like he knows that it might have been a mistake. It feels like one, even if Hitoshi tries to convince himself it's not, it's not guilt, it's not wrong, it's best for everyone involved and he just has to get used to it. It's just easier if he does. "And sometimes it's easier to apologize than it seems like before you try. Since it's easy to make those mistakes, it can be easy to try again afterwards, because we're always learning about people, even if we've known them for years."

It's not that easy, and it shouldn't be. Midoriya is just weird, but he's the only one, he knows Bakugo would never forgive him and Ashi shouldn't. Asui shouldn't either, and it's almost a crime that Midoriya would forget what he said about her, what he threatened to do. What he did when Asui was trying to rescue him, they should all know better now.

"The worst anyone could say is 'no,' but that's after you've said your piece. Just getting everything out in the open, so it's not on your shoulders, the ball's not in your court, and you can stop having it hang over you," Yamada says, before he shrugs, before the relief comes because he's back to looking at the cupcakes. But it doesn't linger. "Just like me and Shou back in the day! You wouldn't know it, but back when we were younger, Shou tried everything he could to shake me off, but I was like a tick stuck to him. Probably way worse than our Monoma, now that I think about it. Shou said some pretty rough stuff, did some rough stuff, but when he came to his senses and apologized, he probably thought I'd finally figure out that he was doing all of it intentionally. But I already knew it, and knew why, and I forgave him from the start."

Forgiveness that came that easily, from understanding. Yamada and Aizawa knew each other for years before that happened, Aizawa probably knew from that time what would hurt the most and he might have used that against Yamada. But Yamada understood. He didn't leave him.

Forgiveness that comes that easily. Even if it's probably wrong, it's not born from making amends, it's blind to the wrong that's done instead of acknowledging it. Hitoshi wonders.

But the words stick in his throat all the same. He's just lucky that Yamada doesn't see it, doesn't hear it.

It's just easier to forget that he tried to say it.

Training, Confidential

Chapter Summary

As a homeroom teacher, it is Aizawa's responsibility to guide his students on their path to further their potential, and the most common way to do that is to oversee and guide their training exercises. With a young girl stumbling into self-confidence, a promising student on the cusp of greatness despite his inner worries, and a particularly stubborn ward, Aizawa sets aside his time and attention to see who they are, and what they can become with both a push and some praise.

Chapter Notes

Trigger Warnings: Bug mention, bleach torture mention, 50 mention, Aizawa reflecting on Shiori's "death" at the end of the chapter

Previously on Wards of UA: Yamada and Shinsou left for their 'secret mission/training exercise' which is in fact cupcake baking, leaving Eri, who wants to 'train' with her quirk, and Aizawa to their own devices. Shinsou guided Eri to use her quirk on him to heal his sprained ankle, which resulted in Shinsou being Rewound 4 days. Eri has chosen to call attempting to use her quirk 'training,' after Shinsou said that he trained with his quirk, and after Eri has seen the hero students training during school hours to hone their quirks. Eri spent a great deal of time with Emi/Ms. Joke when she went to the Ketsubutsu training camp in the mountains, and Ms. Joke and Midnight are in a romantic relationship. Eri developed a mild fear of cats after Sushi, the first cat she encountered, swatted at her when he was in a bad mood. Eri has a friend her own age, Shoji Mizuno, whose mutant wings give off strong scents based around her mood. Yo Shindo tried to help Eri visualize her quirk to help her control it, with some results when she was able to stop it on her own. Eri had previously tried to see Shinsou while he was bathing, out of a natural curiosity for a young child, leading Aizawa and Yamada to ask if Midnight would help answer those questions. Shinsou's clothes and hair got messy from baking in the last chapter. Shinsou's birthday is July 1st, Yamada's July 7th, and Mirio's July 15th, and Shinsou knows when all three of those birthdays are. Shinsou threw away his stash as well as almost all of the things he's gotten from the hero course students when he decided to throw away 'useless attachments and distractions.' Shinsou has recently been able to use his quirk without asking a question. Shinsou has avoided talking to Yamada, but with an upcoming test to evaluate the validity of the wardship placement, whether Yamada's hearing aids will keep him from being affected by Shinsou's quirk, Shinsou will have to talk to Yamada. Ms. Saito, the Commission representative overseeing Shinsou's wardship, told Shinsou that he will be moved to an institution at the end of the wardship. At the Shichi-go-san festival, Shinsou stole a few bags of specialty candy from vendors, which Aizawa was aware of and covered up by paying for it after Shinsou left. Monoma agreed to leave Shinsou alone after Shinsou was distressed from Monoma Brainwashing him, and Midoriya still wanted to befriend Shinsou after Shinsou Brainwashed him into running into a wall, which hurt his hand.

Aizawa rolls his head around his shoulders, gaining a few pops but not entirely relief. His eyes are burning too, despite the eyedrops. This brand of fatigue seems particularly resistant to Hizashi's brand of coffee grounds, which he's trying to fix with a second pot of his own.

But while that brews, Eri sits at the counter, kicking her feet with her small hands under her chin, waiting expectantly. She seems to hum when she catches him looking at her half-sized horn, and the uncertainty that brings. "Did Hitoshi help you when you used your quirk on him, with his quirk?"

Eri's feet hit the legs of the chair she's sitting on, punctuating her frown with that. "Kinda. It wasn't really working when I tried, so he helped, but I still kinda had to... pull it. And I kinda remember how to do that. And I wanna try."

Despite how fruitless the effort might be, Aizawa can't suppress the pride in his chest when he smiles, leaning his arms on the counter while he tries to find the right words to say. To think that Eri would want to use her quirk, to learn how to control it further, after she had so much to fear from losing control or being reminded of how powerless her previous circumstances had made her feel. He doesn't want her to lose that sense of power to disappointment. "It might not work today, but trying to use your quirk even when it's ineffective will help you in the long run. It's progress, even if it doesn't seem like it."

"Like training," Eri says, as Hizashi has pointed out Eri has paid more attention to her surroundings at UA and acclimated her vocabulary to them. Eri rolls the plastic wand that Monoma left for her today between her hands, Aizawa isn't completely sure, but he thinks it's for the green Sailor Scout. He's not sure which planet she's from either. "Zawa, what's your quirk feel like when you use it?"

Aizawa hums, considering his answer. Painful probably isn't the right one, but it's the first that comes to mind, now that after USJ, the ache of an overused muscle has been replaced with splintering pain. Something that probably shouldn't make him miss his regular patrols so much. "It feels like 'pulling' for me too. I can open my eyes, and not activate my quirk, but when I was younger it was hard to know the difference."

He made more than a few children at his daycare cry, mourning the loss of their newfound quirks, until his teachers acquiesced to his mother's insistence on an eyepatch. He knows now that measure stunted his quirk control, as without having both of his eyes uncovered, unable to see with both of them, his quirk wasn't able to activate. It felt almost as though there was a void where his eye was, it was unnerving in a way he doesn't like to remember.

Aizawa touches the corner of his left eye, the one that wore that eyepatch the most. His vision had always been worse in that one, probably as a result of that treatment. Far worse after USJ, but only enough to consider wearing glasses now. Even if his vision blurs out at long distances and with only that eye open, he's still cleared to work without correctional lenses, he can still see those blurs well enough.

But he doesn't need glasses to see Eri perfectly at this distance. He can see the eagerness thrumming in a childlike way, from a child who hasn't had much experience to want things for herself. Especially power, which Aizawa can't deny is the root of what Eri's quirk is.

"And if you feel overwhelmed, or if you want to stop, I'll be there to help you," Aizawa says, a reassurance he doesn't think Eri needs at this point, but he needs to say it. "And you might be able to help Nemuri in the process."

“Aunt Nemmie!” Eri cheers, raising two fists in the air as though she’s tragically deprived of Nemuri’s presence. Hizashi’s words about how Aizawa approaches both wards with ‘low energy’ seem like half an accusation in the face of Eri’s excitement, because Nemuri tends to be anything but.

But given that Kayama seemed half asleep when Aizawa made the arrangements, he hopes that Eri won’t be too crushed or too distracted if Nemuri doesn’t greet them with her usual energy. He prepares a thermos for himself, black like coffee is meant to be taken, and another that’s watered down and ruined by the hazelnut creamer that Hizashi likes. It’s an offering to smooth over the intrusion, suddenly rare over the past few months.

And Aizawa takes Eri’s hand, not having to worry about either of them bundling up for the cold weather when Nemuri’s dorm is next to theirs, with all the dead house plants he’s made sure she still has ripe for the training. “Eri! You’re ready to move in with me, right? Spending all that time with Emi must have made you realize how awful Shou is to be around.”

Nemuri is dressed like she’s ready to either lounge around all day or sleep with the sweatpants and loose shirt barely able to cover both shoulders, but she brightens too eagerly for Eri. Mostly for the opportunity to drive another splinter under Aizawa’s skin.

Given the dead houseplants, Aizawa doesn’t exactly trust her with Eri’s custody, even if he knows that Nemuri has risen to the occasion with other wards. But not with Eri.

“Zawa’s not awful at all!” Eri defends, swaying Aizawa’s hand in hers and Aizawa can’t help but grin at the victory, to Nemuri’s pouting. “Zawa’s really nice, Aunt Nemmie, but you make him do his teacher face a lot, but I don’t.”

“Exactly,” Aizawa says, unable to keep himself from rubbing it in a little more even as he hands the thermos off to Nemuri. “You shouldn’t make me scold you so much, or I’d be nicer to you.”

Aizawa lets those words slip out, because he knows Nemuri wants to twist them to her usual teasing. And she can’t, not with an innocent child between them.

Nemuri fumes, but she still smiles at Eri to allow them inside, and she’s even arranged for all those neglected houseplants that neither Nemuri nor Emi can take care of properly to be gathered in a row on the floor of her living room. Even if there’s not much of a difference, there was an attempt to clean up. Less clothes scattered on every piece of furniture, no dishes left waiting to be washed. He’s still sure the sink is full of them.

But there’s another occupant that Aizawa thought Nemuri locked up, that Eri seems concerned with when she presses herself a little closer to Aizawa, her hand tightening on his. He honestly feels more torn than he should be. “Is Sushi in a good mood?”

Aizawa has to look away from the elderly tabby staring at them curiously from the arm of a couch, to see Eri looking at the cat with fear, but not as much as he expected. This is the same cat that swatted at her and made her fearful of Todoroki’s cat, instilling a phobia all the more tragic for how much she adores the idea of cats and their image. But not real ones.

“Maybe not right now,” Nemuri says, an accurate assessment to Sushi’s posture, his feet planted below him ready to flee or attack, but his eyes are locked on them to assess these ‘strangers’ in his domain. Aizawa must have made himself a stranger to the cat recently. “The grumpy old man just needs to watch you for a while, then he might be up for a little petting. He just has to get to know you again first.”

“Hi Sushi,” Eri says, waving and greeting the cat even if it’s done a bit timidly. She seems to understand that Sushi’s observance of her is the most important part of the ‘introduction,’ but Aizawa does appreciate her own introduction.

Nemuri pretty much collapses onto the couch, her head falling next to Sushi’s armrest which means she might not be conscious for this entire visit. Aizawa finds a place to sit on the floor, on the edge of the row of wilted plants gathered in front of them. Eri sits by his side, her side pressed against his and her knee digging sharply into his thigh, until she shuffles just a small distance away. That seems to rattle her confidence a bit, to remember that her quirk relies on physical contact, but it’s not restricted to only a part of her. She can’t be touched while her quirk is active.

“We have plenty of options,” Aizawa notes as a distraction, two bonsai trees with reversed bends, probably meant to be displayed as a pair, have few leaves on their branches but plenty on the potting soil. There’s also a white flower with large waxy petals, wrinkled and curled a bit too much, next to a small pot of a ‘lucky’ bamboo shoot that looks particularly unlucky with those brown spots.

Eri has a beanstalk of her own, but Aizawa wouldn’t use something that precious to her for training purposes. Eri raises her hand, but hesitates between her options, before she decides to pull on the flower pot to bring it closer to her. It’s one of the healthiest of the selection, one of the newest he assumes accordingly, but Eri tugs gently at one of the lower petals before she closes her eyes, straining to concentrate.

Too soon, Eri opens her eyes to look at him, disappointment that he expected from her age, but he offers reassurance in resting his hand on her head, because she needs it. It’s telling of how close she is to giving up already when she doesn’t react with fear from that at all. “It takes time. Even if nothing happens today, you’re working towards that.”

“I’m doing it right,” Eri insists, her fingers curling on the edge of the pot. “And my horn wasn’t big when I used it on Twenny. It doesn’t have to work like that... right?”

That note of fear, woven in how her voice grows higher yet weaker, reminds Aizawa that Eri isn’t entirely referring to her horn being fully grown. She has enough memories of how she was forced to use her quirk to convince her those cruel methods may be the only ones, even if Aizawa knows better. “There’s a lot we don’t know about your quirk yet, but if Hitoshi was able to help you, there should be a method to use it yourself. We know it’s related to how you feel.”

Eri’s fingers start digging into the soil, her head tipped under his hand, almost like she wants to shake it off out of frustration clear to see in her frown. This is new to her, Aizawa knows, and he knows it’s frustrating at her age. He knows her quirk makes it harder than most to hone it.

“Midoriya also struggled to learn how to use his quirk,” Aizawa says, and he’s not blind at all to how the name draws Eri’s interest when she turns to look at him. One of the heroes that saved her, Deku himself, struggled with his quirk. “Even when he started high school, in my class, he couldn’t depend on his quirk like he does now. There were many times he tried to use it, and it wouldn’t react at all. It took months for him to understand it.”

Aizawa knows now why that was, the details of how Toshinori gave the child a quirk the day before his entrance exam. The vague story about being a late bloomer already didn’t bode well, but Aizawa saw enough potential in his ability to adapt beyond his quirk, something that was uniquely promising. Especially among students who focus too much at first on what they think they can do, limiting their image as heroes to their quirks, but he saw the foundation for a great hero in how Midoriya would look beyond that from the start.

Though, if Eri asks how he did succeed when he struggled, Aizawa doesn't want to answer with the truth that the Problem Child resorted to breaking his bones. "That means that for months, Midoriya's training would look a lot like this. Trying, with no results. But it does pay off with time."

Eri nods, looking again at the flower with determination renewed this time. Aizawa pulls away his hand, but places it close enough behind her. He tries not to watch, to put more pressure on her even if he wants her to know that he's there and attentive. For all the consternation growing on Eri's face by the minute, how her nose wrinkles and she holds her breath at times, there's not a flicker from her horn nor growth there. Nor shrinking.

Aizawa thinks it takes about ten minutes before the renewed determination of a five year old peters out again, and he only catches a flash of her wide-eyed disappointment before she falls into his side, clinging to him for comfort. With his arm wrapping around her, it's easily given. "It's difficult, but it will get easier. I'm still very proud of you for trying."

"But it's not working," Eri grouses, muffled against his shirt. "All the heroes know how to use their quirks, and I can't."

"Mizuno doesn't," Aizawa prods, thankful that he has a better comparison to offer Eri than the teenagers far outside her own development. "Mizuno has trouble controlling her quirk, and Kota has been working with his quirk since he developed it nearly three years ago, but he's still learning. It's normal to struggle when you're learning, when you're new to it."

"Like Izuku?" Eri asks, and he can only see one red eye looking up at him from where Eri has pressed herself to his shirt, a small fist pulling at the bottom of it. Aizawa nods, because he knows she needs the reassurance. From a unique hero.

"He struggled too," Aizawa says, and sees the similarities too clearly now. How Midoriya would also scrunch his face, trying to force a quirk that wouldn't answer when he didn't know how to connect to it. And he realizes that there's a question he never asked, that he should have. "What does your quirk feel like to you?"

Eri fidgets a bit closer, looking away. She seems a bit uncomfortable, and Aizawa prepares himself for something he knows in many senses, but not this one. Not from Eri's own words. "It hurts sometimes. It used to always hurt, but with Izuku, and with Twenny.... It was like a flower opening up. That's what I wanted it to feel like."

"Did it hurt just now?" Aizawa asks, impressed that his words come out evenly, even if his chest aches at the thought, that Eri wasn't determined or focused but in pain right next to him. Falling into memories she shouldn't have, that he wants her to forget in time, rather than feel them.

Eri shakes her head, burrowing closer to his shirt. "It didn't feel like anything, even when I imagined it like Yo-yo said, and Twenny. Twenny just has to pull a string and he can use his quirk, but mine's difficult."

Aizawa's lip twitches, though he doesn't want to show any amusement towards the honest frustrations of a child. "Your quirk is different from theirs, because it's an accumulation type. It's very much like Midoriya's, which means it will take time."

The same little girl who asked him if he could take her quirk away permanently only months ago, now looks up at him with a similar sadness to the thought that she'll have to wait to learn how to use it. She's grown so much, thriving now under more normal circumstances, but he knows this is the barest promise for what the future holds for her.

He can't wait to see it.

"Oh," Nemuri calls out, and Aizawa turns his head to see an old friend walking towards them, Sushi's head lowered and gait slow, but confident. Curious even, now that he seems convinced that Aizawa and Eri intended to ignore him, and he wants to rectify that with a cat's usual aloof attitude. "It looks like someone wants to say hello now. He must be in a better mood."

It's only the clarification that Sushi is friendly now that draws Eri to look at him, instead of continuing to hide in Aizawa's shirt. Aizawa stretches his hand out first, offering a finger to sniff for a cat that certainly isn't a stranger to him. "Sushi prefers to smell someone's hand before they can pet him. Cats see that as being 'polite.' And if he wants me to pet him...."

Aizawa sees how Sushi licks his lips, satisfied to remember Aizawa, before he brushes himself along Aizawa's still outstretched hand, rubbing his cheek against it pitifully. Begging to be scratched as though the cold shoulder before was just another cat, not the one in front of him.

"He'll show me exactly where he wants to be petted," Aizawa says, unable to help the grin as he trails his fingers over Sushi's cheek up to his chin, where the cat closes his eyes and seems blissful. He wonders if Sushi remembers that this is UA, if he even remembers how Aizawa bottle fed the poor kitten between classes until Nemuri agreed to take him in. At 16 years old, Sushi likely doesn't remember those things, he's probably earned the right to be a bit surly at times.

One of Eri's hands moves to curl around his sleeve, but the other stretches out confidently, if a bit shaky. Aizawa lowers his hand to the floor to deprive Sushi of the affection he wants, to make him realize there's another hand to offer it. But he keeps it close enough that if a foul mood strikes in the worst way, he can protect Eri from another frightening swat or bite.

Instead, it seems like Sushi has forgotten all of that unpleasantness, his nose twitching as he smells Eri's offered fingers and even quicker, he licks his lips to accept the introduction. Instead of a cheek, he bows and bumps his head firmly against Eri's palm, making her gasp and look up at Aizawa with a beaming grin, incredibly proud of this victory. "He likes me!"

Eri has to lean forward a bit more in order to properly pet the top of Sushi's head. The cat bows lower to the floor, his eyes closing again, but that just makes it more difficult. "You can get closer to him, just slowly. He's easily startled."

"It's okay," Eri coos softly, rolling onto her knees to inch forward ever so carefully, this time for the sake of Sushi's fear instead of her own. "I just want to pet you, 'cause you're very pretty."

That compliment seems to push the cat over the edge as he rolls over onto his back on the floor, rubbing his head back and forth with the fluff of his belly exposed. Eri's hand hovers above him, and she seems worried that she might have overstepped, but it's anything but when the cat yawns, punctuated by a pleased 'mwrrrp' at the end.

But Eri's hands bravely yet gently stroke the tabby's cheeks, as he closes his eyes and starts to stutter into a purr that Aizawa is sure will grow louder with all this attention. It's almost overwhelming, to see Eri and Sushi getting along so well.

It only makes him more aware of her white hair, and how honest her rarest smiles are.

"That reminds me," Nemuri says, groaning as she rolls off her couch to look through the piles of books on the bottom section of her coffee table. "There's a couple of books that I think a growing girl might need, now that she's turning six years old!"

Eri watches Nemuri eagerly, smiling expectantly, but Aizawa's heart catches in his throat when he sees the cover. When Nemuri grins with a particular brand of sadism at him, as she already knows neither he nor Hizashi want any part of this. But she's trapped him now.

"Here you go, sweetheart. These books might answer some questions that you might be having, and if you get confused or curious about some parts, you can talk to me, or ask Shouta or Hizashi to read them to you!"

Aizawa. Doesn't want to read. 'It's Not The Stork!' to Eri.

Especially when Aizawa is highly aware he's not Eri's biological family, he's an unrelated adult man who has been given the great privilege to raise her. And he would feel far more comfortable if Nemuri would take over the most awkward part of that discussion, given that Nemuri doesn't have the body parts that would be the most shocking for Eri to learn about.

He knows it's not wrong for Eri to have that curiosity or questions, and he doesn't feel like Nemuri is tainting her by handing her those books on the subject. He's known that a part of raising Eri means that he needs to be able to answer the questions that she has, before she tries to answer them herself with childish means of investigating.

But Eri has taken those books into her hands. She holds them out to Aizawa, and he feels the weight of this expectation too fully. He takes them and he hopes she'll be distracted by Sushi again.

"Thank you Aunt Nemmie!" Eri says, standing up to give Nemuri a hug, which causes Sushi to scatter. Nemuri hugs Eri back, and sticks out her tongue with a finger pulling down her eyelid, the perfect taunt and Aizawa feels she's solidly won.

He hates her.

And though it might be kind to get out of Nemuri's dorm so she can rest, Aizawa mostly wants to escape to try to find some way to avoid the conversations that lie between the pages of these two small books. He's not prepared, at all, and he needs time to come up with a better strategy to tackle this. "Maybe Nemuri could part with one of these plants that she can't take care of too, since someone's birthday is coming up."

Aizawa tugs the flowerpot closer, because he's sure that there is no protest. Eri doesn't even have to look at Nemuri before she seems passionately onboard. "Of course! But that's not really a present for someone's big sixth birthday. I've got something much better up my sleeve, from me and Emi both."

"Really?!" Eri cries, her eyes wide in astonishment at the notion. He hopes that the gratitude will last when Nemuri and Ms. Joke will truly be one of many gift givers this weekend. "Thank you! Thank you! Thank you!"

Nemuri laughs and pulls Eri in for another hug as the child bounces on her heels, but soon enough Eri is staring at the plant with wonder in her eyes.

She might have been that excited for a new plant anyway, which unfortunately defeats the purpose of trying to use her quirk on a less consequential target. "What's the flower's name?"

"It's a lily," Nemuri says, answering an innocent question with an innocent tone, but the wink she directs at Aizawa reminds him of the connotations that flower has for Nemuri and Emi specifically. "It's a flower of purity, just like me."

Aizawa isn't quite as capable at smothering his laugh as he should be, but Eri seems to decide he only sneezed. "I'm gonna name it... Lillio! And Yama knows how to fix wilt-y flowers, if I can't fix it. Yama should teach you how to do that too, Aunt Nemmie!"

"He should," Aizawa agrees. "At Nemuri's age, she should be able to take care of her plants responsibly."

"My age?" Nemuri asks, smiling tensely with a voice too sweet for the vein throbbing at her forehead.

"How old do you think she is, Eri?" Aizawa asks, and he sees Eri's head tilt in consideration, as Nemuri glowers at him. It could be anything from six to 32, Aizawa estimates, but he hopes that Eri will shoot a bit higher than that.

"Twenty!" Eri guesses, and gets caught in another embrace as Nemuri gushes far too proudly. "'Cause that's how old Emi is, and you guys are good friends! Just like me and Mizzy!"

"Yeah," Nemuri agrees, trying to hide her amusement it seems, before she looks at Aizawa and grins. "We're good friends, just like you and your best friend Mizzy."

Aizawa has years before that becomes something to concern himself with. Eri having agemates, having friends, is necessary to her development. He has absolutely no issue with whoever Eri chooses to play those innocent elementary school kissing games with, but he knows for a fact that he's not an outlier for not having such experiences. His first kiss was in high school, and if Eri would like to follow in his footsteps, he would be completely unconcerned by it.

Aizawa gathers the flower pot and books under his arm, taking his thermos of coffee with his free hand before he remembers it's not free. Eri would still like to hold his hand on the short walk back to their dorm, so he tucks his thermos into the bend of his elbow accordingly.

Eri bids Nemuri goodbye, again thanking her for the books and new friend 'Lillio,' and Aizawa asks her where to put this new friend as soon as they get back to their own dorm, hoping it distracts her from the books. It still doesn't bode well that Eri wants to put this dying lily on the ground below her beansprout's perch on the windowsill, when he doesn't want her to form an attachment to something she could Rewind out of existence.

But Eri takes pride in including the plant in her usual self-imposed chores, feeding the pet goldfish and watering both plants as she hums, and Aizawa watches. She surely knows that her quirk isn't the only way to help others, even plants. It's unnecessary in the face of her boundless compassion.

"Dad, can you read my new books to me?" Eri asks, with an innocence and excitement he doesn't know how to answer.

He doesn't, he imagines he can answer specific questions if he's pressed enough, but he'd rather not risk the revelation of certain bodies being different from her own happening right in front of his eyes, where she might have the perfect target of those immediate questions right in front of her. "We can do that later, but it's almost time for my class' training session."

He can arrive early to meet with Toshinori, to discuss the training exercises for a while. And if Eri feels inspired to ask if 'Lillio' can come too, that only means he has more time to spend finding a small enough shopping bag to carry the plant in.

Arriving an hour early isn't terribly strange, after all, when he wants to make sure that his students have a worthwhile exercise.

*

It is yet another day shrouded in this heavy air, humid from the maelstrom of darkness.

The uncertainty of these past few days have forced his peers and himself beyond their limits, in some ways more severe than others. A mad scramble for clarity in these uncertain times, hearts clutching for the rope of salvation only to find a spider's thread. Perhaps, one day these frayed strings can be woven into a hero's mantle, but for now the edges seem too sharp to suffer.

Tokoyami would have rather gone home for winter break, just to find some solace from the demands of his school for a full month.

Alas, it is not so. And though their classes have ceased to demand their time, there is truly no rest for the wicked. A training exercise, claimed voluntary much like a scorpion might claim to a frog that it will not sting, has been scheduled for every weekday of the current week, until the holidays truly toll, and a brief reprieve from campus may be gifted to some. Only for internships once again to call upon its victims.

And Hawks turned him down. A busy man, Tokoyami knows, but there was a part of him that bristled at the opportunity to work with one of Hawks' sidekicks that happened to patrol his own hometown. He knows every angle from which to take that offer, a kind gesture to allow Tokoyami a bit more time to catch up with his family, something that many of his peers would envy. To still hone his flight feathers under the watchful eye of a similar hero, even if the one he wants has made the distance clear between them.

He wanted to speak to Hawks, face to face. There is a part of him that wants nothing more than to stoop to a most unbecoming burst of anger to be treated to this understandable rejection, something he still cannot wholly convince himself is not a slight.

Especially after all he's done, in his 'continuing' internship at UA.

Tokoyami was guarded at first, convinced that this was all that he was invited for at the beginning of his internship with Hawks. He didn't want to discuss the incident at USJ, especially not the Summer Training camp incident, he didn't want to discuss his peers or his teachers, he wanted to learn. He wanted to observe the hero who kept flitting away to chase further incidents, leaving Tokoyami and his sidekicks behind to clean up after. It was almost a stinging rejection in itself, a punishment for his held tongue. If you want his attention, you have to earn it on his means, and accept that you're only a source of information instead of a student.

Tokoyami demanded answers instead. He *demand*ed to be seen for his potential, to be seen by his mentor, and on that night he flew at Hawks' side for the first time, he felt it. The raptorial gaze surveying him anew, that was almost what he was seeking, but the weight of Dark Shadow's wings was no shelter from the fierce winds they rode among.

If he wanted to be an equal, to be a hero, he had to see what Hawks saw. That was terrifying, to catch a glimpse of it, and so he settled for Hawks seeing his own vision, through his eyes.

He kept in touch with Hawks, though he had nothing truly to report about any suspicious behavior from his peers or teachers. Hawks still asked, in a way Tokoyami only thought was a casual mask, but it was incessant and prying enough to seem like truth. 'Yeah, but how was school? Super boring?'

Hawks took an interest, farther than what Tokoyami offered. He wanted to know even the minutia of his routine, in a casual way that was almost terrifying to come from such a great height.

Hawks would remind him that he's not giving a report, that he could 'relax' and just tell him how his day was. Tokoyami attempted to do so, but his own train of thought tends to be what Hawks perceives as long-form prose. He seemed to find humor in it at times.

Tokoyami wasn't blind to what he was doing. He was supposedly helping a hero who had an interest in the unprecedented villain attention focused on his class. Hawks had a reason for that, and Tokoyami was no fool to it. He trusted Hawks, and Hawks trusted him in kind.

And he aches to know if Hawks trusts him less now, with this failure. When he didn't see any sign that Hagakure was a traitor, when that seems to be exactly what Hawks was looking for. He knows he won't see honesty in the messages already sent and received, that conversation Tokoyami doesn't wish to dwell on.

He wants to meet Hawks' eyes, and ask if he can be forgiven. If he can still fly alongside that great hero who saw his potential once, then brushed him away after this failing. Something he tries to argue isn't related, a voice arguing that thought sounds a great deal like Hawks.

He'd like to hear it outside of his own head, to believe it.

This turmoil is his own, hidden away from prying eyes, but he will be tested. Soon, and brutally.

It's one of those days that Aizawa-sensei sees fit to deal his heavy hand in their training regimen. Perhaps it's due to the week coming to a close, the final chance to prepare them before their voluntary internships begin after the holidays. Tokoyami should look forward to the individual attention that his teacher distributes evenly among his peers, to discuss their own goals and struggles before being guided towards new pathways towards progress.

Tokoyami is only able to focus until he sees Shoji release the fists he had manifested among his arms to talk to Aizawa-sensei for his turn. Tokoyami knows that Todoroki will be the target between them.

His stomach twists, and his burning skin calls him a coward, but Tokoyami feigns the need to take a water break. And once he arrives to the corridor that bears both the locker rooms and water fountain, he sees that he's not the only student who has considered taking a more lackadaisical approach to this time, though he's keenly aware that Midoriya still intends to remain in the building while Tokoyami wishes to flee before he's seen.

Midoriya is crouched on his heels in front of Eri, with a potted white lily that has withered closer to death between them. Midoriya's hands cup his own face, and as attentive as he is towards this flower, Eri bares her teeth in a toothy grimace, both eyes closed and hands buried among the soil, as though she's trying to manifest the spirits of the dead.

A disappointingly futile effort, Tokoyami has found. The dead seem to appear only when they aren't wanted. "I'm disappointed not to be invited to this seance on fertile grounds."

Midoriya's concentration seems to break more violently than Eri's as he nearly loses his balance. "Oh, we're not doing that! Eri is trying to use her quirk on this plant, and I was trying to help."

Taking the excuse to loom over the child, Tokoyami assumes, but it is probably better if someone were there to call for Aizawa-sensei if his quirk is needed, given that All Might was also making a few rounds with helpful advice. He wasn't sure if it was at that point that Midoriya decided to excuse himself from attempting to meditate within the moment that he used Air Force Shoot Style, the movement that seems to birth those mysterious, abyssal tendrils that have mystified him thus far. "I wanna train too! And Izuku has a quirk like mine, 'cause it's difficult."

Eri's precocious words are tinged with enough sadness that Midoriya turns to argue against them with encouragement. And though Tokoyami remains silent, he feels the same reassurances echoing within his chest. "It's hard at first for everyone, Eri! But you're trying hard now, and that's the only way to get better at it!"

Midoriya's eyes seem drawn to Tokoyami, almost like he wants something. Almost like he wants to clarify that quirk control is difficult in a myriad of ways, and put forth that horrible assumption that it's not at all false with a sentient quirk like Dark Shadow. It's far worse.

"Maybe, if you don't mind helping Eri too?" Midoriya asks instead, and Tokoyami is positively flounced by that surprise. "Eri's quirk is an accumulation type like mine, but it's also linked to her emotions, like Dark Shadow. She said that she was able to use her quirk by imagining it as a 'flower,' and that it felt warm, and I thought that might be because it was linked to feeling happy-"

"A quirk reliant on emotional states is particularly unruly," Tokoyami says, he can't help to say with this unpleasant coil of pressure beneath his heart, but regrets immediately as he sees Eri's face fall with those words. Perhaps too harsh for her, when they were meant for his own ears. "It's difficult, but not impossible to control it. But manipulating your own emotions is both dangerous and a truly vain effort, in ways."

Tokoyami takes a seat on the floor, forming the triadic symbol of power around this plant that serves as a sacrifice. But despite himself, he can't offer much hope that it will leave this altar changed in any way by Eri's hands.

"I have the opposite issue with Dark Shadow. It was far more necessary for me to learn how to stop the flow, and negotiate with the dark beast before it took its dazed reckoning," Tokoyami says, feeling the coil thud like his dear friend was knocking upon the material world's door politely. Such manners weren't always so. "When I was a young child, my tantrums were acted out on Dark Shadow's behest. And by the time that I found I wanted to manifest him, the channel between us had begun to open, as though Dark Shadow had finally learned proper speech. Even though it took him three years longer than myself."

"Ah! Don't say that!" Dark Shadow begs as soon as Tokoyami opens the door for him, a pitifully small piece that curls next to his shoulder with exaggerated eyes. "That's embarrassing!"

"Aw," Eri coos, reaching out to pet Dark Shadow's head, and Tokoyami can feel how pridefully his quirk preens. What a horrible manipulation for affection. "It's okay to have trouble talking, Shaddy! Twenny has a lot of trouble talking, and sometimes I did too, but that's just 'cause I'm little, and it's cute to not talk properly."

"Right!" Midoriya agrees, and Tokoyami is grateful for such a powerful endorsement burning in his classmate's eyes, far beyond what little Eri probably knows. The warmth is easy enough to feel, when Tokoyami knows what monster tried to abuse the poor child into 'talking properly.'

"Dark Shadow is fueled by darkness, both physical and mental. Negative emotions such as sadness or anger can also make him unruly, as much as a dark room," Tokoyami says, but a voice apart from Dark Shadow's whispers 'worse.' He knows that much, he knows the cage he had to build around his heart and the consequences of loosening it, the devastation that could be unleashed even now. "But I've never manifested those emotions intentionally. If reflecting on things that bring you happiness does not work, perhaps your quirk relies on more honest feelings than that."

Eri's small hand curls away from Dark Shadow as her expression pinches in worry towards him. "Toko, are you sad right now? 'Cause Shaddy is out?"

“No,” Tokoyami says, and intentionally keeps himself from questioning it, because Dark Shadow is out. “When Dark Shadow is as small as he is now, he does not require fuel to enter the material plane.”

Eri’s eyes catch his, almost as though she already understands. It’s easy enough for him to forget after honing his technique, in the many unseen battles he’s had with the beast he now calls friend, the only path he has to becoming a hero. But, he forces out the horrible truth all the same.

“When Dark Shadow does require those negative emotions, it’s easy to fall into the abyss for them,” Tokoyami admits, something that he’s said before with different, more palatable and less honest words before, but they catch Midoriya’s attention as though the difference is greater than it is. “It is easy to find darkness for those that seek it, but I imagine honest and pure feelings of happiness are more difficult to attain. If your quirk requires you to chase that fleeting light, I hope that we can all make that easier for you. But I understand that it is a difficult thing, indeed.”

Eri frowns in what he tells himself is consideration, when she looks at the subject and vessel meant to hone her powers. He imagines if Dark Shadow required something as difficult from him as being happy, he would be nigh quirkless now. And he’s aware that his circumstances are a dream compared to Eri’s. “I am happy, though. I think about how happy I am a lot, but it’s different when something makes me really happy. Like, when I think about how happy I am to spend time with my friends, it’s different from spending time with them. Is that why it’s not ‘honest’?”

Tokoyami nods, but immediately feels conflicted about such a complicated thing being made so simple as he tilts his head, almost in shame for such a decisive answer. “Perhaps, it’s more powerful to catch the fullness rather than the reflection. In that moment that you bask in the warmth of another’s company, you need only open your eyes to it. In solace, too many warm spirits must be conjured up to capture it.”

“But, what if that’s only part of it?” Midoriya asks, his chin cupped in thought, staring at the wilted vessel just as intently as Eri. “When you use your emotions as fuel for Dark Shadow to manifest, isn’t it also with intention behind it? With my accumulation quirk, I have a- uh, I think of something to tap into it and kind of imagine what I want to do with it. Kind of like, I become that thing and at the same time, I’m thinking of what I want to do with it?”

“It’s... similar,” Tokoyami admits, not sure how exactly to frame it. “Indeed, I tend to think of negative emotions linked to what I wish to do with Dark Shadow. The consequences of failing what I intend to do, morbidly enough, fuel my success.”

The link between himself and Dark Shadow is a razor now, now that he knows how powerful his quirk has and will become on his journey. During the Sports Festival when he turned his quirk to a battering ram and forced Yaoyorozu beyond the boundary, he can still taste the fear that kept Dark Shadow tethered despite the early summer sun high above them. You will lose control, in front of all these watchful eyes. You will hurt Yaoyorozu, you can see the terror in her eyes because she knows it. You are a monster, only allowed to participate for your successes thus far. There is always a beast in wait inside you.

Tokoyami pulls Dark Shadow within himself as the spectre whines, and Eri’s attention seems to be drawn to his defense. “Maybe, that makes sense. But I tried to think about how happy I would be if I used my quirk on Lillio, and made her pretty again, and it didn’t work. And how happy I would be if I could fix Mirio. And if Zawa said he was proud....”

“Aizawa-” Tokoyami and Midoriya seemed to have the same idea in mind, but Tokoyami nods his submission to Midoriya speaking those words, earning a nod in return.

“Aizawa-sensei is proud of you, and all of us are. We know that it’s hard at first to try to control your quirk,” Midoriya says, unflinching honesty and optimism scattered among his freckles, impossible to doubt in the full force of that. But that hand once again cups his chin, reflecting on Eri’s quirk, Tokoyami supposes. Correctly. “But maybe, when you think about all of those things, you start to get a little distracted? Because if you think about helping Togata-sempai, that probably makes you think about how he needs help, or thinking about how Aizawa-sensei would be proud of you makes you think that he’s not. But I might be wrong!”

Eri hums, and it sadly seems that Midoriya’s assumptions have struck true. “You and Toko are right. I really really try to be happy, ‘cause that’s how I want my quirk to work! But I get sad, when I think about that stuff. So it doesn’t work....”

“And that’s fine,” Tokoyami reassures. “The mind is a morbid mausoleum of twisting halls and dark chambers, at the best of times. It is difficult to shut a door that opens upon its own volition, in such a haunted place. But there may be ways to retain your focus.”

“Singing!” Eri declares, inspiration like a lightning strike breathes life suddenly into a small child who had been too small and sullen with dark thoughts. “If I sing about how I’ll be happy, then I’ll be happy because I get to sing! And if we sing together....”

“Yeah!” Midoriya cheers, encouraging Eri’s enthusiasm as it wanes, like dawn breaking as the lantern’s wick cools. “We can sing with you, right Tokoyami?”

Tokoyami would rather not participate in such an activity, as sure to flay him bare as any instrument of torture. He’s sure there are others better suited to the activity. But when he meets Eri’s pleading red eyes, “Every sacred ritual requires vocalizations, I suppose.”

Tokoyami has heard whispers of ‘The Bestest Beanie song,’ a humming melody that may gain words when necessary to spur the growth of a bean sprout that Eri was tasked to nurture. And while he takes a few more chants than necessary to learn the words, he falls into an unintentionally haunting chorus with Midoriya and Eri as they delve to give life back to this wilted plant.

“If I’m happy and I know it, I will sing. If I’m happy and I know it, I will sing. If I’m happy and I know it, and I really want to show it, then I’ll fix Lillio’s petals and I’ll sing,” the chant continues on, and Tokoyami finds reprieve as repetition seems to draw his consciousness into a lesser void, only allowing his voice to escape as his mind numbs to the torment.

He’s sure little Mizuno has taught Eri the original song, and perhaps he should be overjoyed it is not a rendition of ‘Baby Shark.’

“Tokoyami.” A dark voice issues forth, powerful enough to nearly slay him in spirit.

“Zawa, Toko and Izuku are helping me with my quirk!” Eri explains, and Dark Shadow whispers that cowering himself in darkness and fleeing may be the act of a coward, but it may be the cowardly blade that ends his torment.

“We endeavor to summon life anew into this plant,” Tokoyami further explains, as he’s well aware that rituals offer solace in dark times, and even if he is not believed, any association he can make to the dark arts may save his face, even before one he knows cares not about it.

Aizawa-sensei indeed doesn’t wear any scorn or judgement on his face, and the embarrassment is a burning coal only within Tokoyami’s flesh. “If you’re too busy doing that, then-”

“I,” Tokoyami begins, standing though he does not know where to go. The distraction of Eri’s endeavors drew his mind easily enough from the torment of being under his teacher's gaze, and now faced with it, he wishes to run. He knows that is the path of a coward, not a hero, and though the exit is open to him, he shall close the door and face what may come. "Don't wish to waste any training opportunities."

He makes the mistake of looking down, to see those harsh words stinging upon Eri's disappointed face.

"But I will return to help you afterwards," Tokoyami amends, and finds that's a far easier crucifix to bear despite the burning upon his flesh, than Eri's sadness from his own inattentive hands.

"Okay! I'll train hard too! Good luck Toko!" The blessings of such a benign faerie may weaken Dark Shadow, but he bears them all the same, as he follows his teacher to the training ground proper to endure his thoughtful attention.

And it begins with a revelation he did not expect his teacher to be aware of. "Hawks submitted a request for your internship to be in Shizuoka, with one of his sidekicks. Are you sure you're ready for that?"

Tokoyami had no doubts, until he tries to find them in his teacher's monotone words. For all his incessant musings on Hawks' not supervising him properly, he had yet to truly understand what it meant.

"Pidgin is an experienced sidekick, but without a fully fledged hero on your team, you will probably take the role of the sidekick on patrol, instead of intern," Aizawa says, and yet no judgement falls to how well he thinks Tokoyami will do in that situation. "That's a greater responsibility than you should have on an internship, especially as a first year."

That's the judgement, however small it is. No matter what Hawks sees, what he's done, his rank in comparison to his classmates, that Sports Festival that he didn't win is still his crowning achievement of his first year. He is still young, unfledged. Not truly tested, it seems.

Tokoyami has weaponized his doubts, but in the face of his teacher, it's too easy to hide them.

"Hawks believes I am ready, and I will rise to the occasion," Tokoyami explains, but loosens his stance all the same. He knows this isn't a mere 'consultation.' How inefficient it would be if so. "If I am overwhelmed, I'm not so foolhardy as to overlook that for sake of pride. I don't believe you have cause to worry, Sensei."

Aizawa nods, but in a flash his stance becomes looser, in a mere blink the image of a sudden villain attack is presented before Tokoyami's eyes as demonstration. Tokoyami has learned Aizawa-sensei's methods well enough to keep the parry Dark Shadow provides to the capture scarf light, disrupting that cord's path and drawing back to protect him from the fist coming for him.

But in a single red instant, Dark Shadow falls into a void, and Tokoyami crosses his forearms for his own defense, the impact shuddering through him. Aizawa's glowing eyes haven't wavered, and neither shall he.

Tokoyami knows his own weaknesses, that Dark Shadow is useful enough to overshadow himself. His quirk is offense and defense and he is unprotected without. Perhaps, most of his peers would struggle right now with their teacher's quirk upon them and this quick flurry of unblinking blows.

But, his peers aren't him. They didn't earn third place, they weren't invited to intern with Hawks, they didn't earn that man's attention. He knows that his place has been elevated, by his own merit, but he fights to climb higher.

Tokoyami doesn't see as much as feels when Aizawa-sensei blinks, and Dark Shadow surges forth from him. There is a moment that the beast is uncaged, unhinged, too close to Aizawa-sensei even as he dodges back, and Tokoyami fights to take hold of him.

That's the moment that he recognizes it from the corner of his eye, takes hold of the beast and pulls him back into a cloak, allows himself to be ensnared by the capture scarf but Dark Shadow spans his wings and pulls the pressure outwards.

The scarf falls, and his teacher rises, as though the test that Tokoyami just passed had not happened at all, only evident by a few strands of hair falling from his ponytail. "I've never approved an internship overseen by a sidekick before. And I honestly wouldn't, if you were any other student."

Such praise lances through Tokoyami. If not spoken so plainly, he would think it undeserved. Even when he attempts to temper his desires in his age, his accomplishments being only part of the whole of his education, hearing it from Aizawa-sensei makes it impossible to disprove it. The man would not lie to him. "If both you and Hawks believe I am ready for it, I cannot argue against it."

"Are you ready?" Aizawa-sensei asks, as he asked before. It seems pointless to ask now.

But it's not. And Tokoyami knows this. "I am."

It is pitiable, to be a bird tethered to the ground. To rely on the words of others to believe them. Tokoyami keeps his passions to himself, he finds the bold declarations of others terrifyingly loud. He wishes to speak quietly, so that his actions are believed. So he does not misspeak his own intention and curse it to failure, a fool of the future's jests.

But he wants to fly, untethered. That is a lonely place, he knows, and he cannot imagine it yet. But he can see it in his mentor's eyes, to act and speak boldly, to be believed because Hawks believes in himself before all others. Confidence.

Tokoyami is the dark imitation of that virtue, a mere shadow of it. And he wishes to change that in time, in his mentor's eyes.

"Then, I'm satisfied," Aizawa-sensei says, rubbing the back of his neck as he closes his eyes, seems even more weary for it. "Try to enjoy being at home while the others are scattered in other prefectures, or stuck at UA. Pidgin only recently moved to Shizuoka, so you might be playing the part of a guide. You should have fun with that."

Tokoyami tries not to take that information for what it's not. While he's aware that Hawks can be playful, bordering on irresponsible, moving one of his sidekicks to patrol Tokoyami's hometown in particular during the winter holidays is a bit.

Above his antics.

Possibly. "It will be a most amusing twist of fate, indeed."

Tokoyami imagined that the next student that Aizawa-sensei will consult with would be Yaoyorozu, but he can see her curiously examining Eri's project with a water bottle pressed to her mouth, as though she had already been run through that rack of torment. Then, Aizawa-sensei skipped his place in line, so that Tokoyami would be the last student.

So that Aizawa-sensei would not interrupt his chanting with Eri. Which was not singing. It was merely a ritual.

“Zawa! I gotta fix your hair!” Eri exclaims, though she seemed to be examining Yaoyorozu’s unkempt hairstyle for the same intention.

Intention, and emotion. Curious things that they are.

Tokoyami says nothing, as he’s sure he’s not the only one to see those sparks trailing from Eri’s horn as she stands to run to her caretaker, his teacher.

A man, who perhaps inspires happiness within them all, even if his words aren’t always ‘I’m proud.’ The intention remains the same, as it is felt that way.

Perhaps, Tokoyami doesn’t need to see Hawks as urgently as he thought.

*

Hitoshi knows it’s not unfair, but he feels like it is.

They were able to stack all the cupcakes and the cheesecake onto three huge trays, covering them with foil to make sure that nothing would fall off and get ruined when they carried them back to the dorm. It took a long time to clean all the dishes and make sure everything was put back where it should be, like they hadn’t used the kitchen from the start.

Since there’s three trays, it makes sense that one of them would just carry one. It makes sense that Yamada would carry two, because he’s a hero, Hitoshi knows he’s ridiculously strong, and stronger than he is. He knows for a fact that his arms are longer, because Hitoshi has to roll up the same sleeves of Yamada’s leather jacket that fall perfectly before Yamada’s hands on his wrists. He knows that Yamada really did more to make these cakes than he did.

But Hitoshi can’t get rid of this stupid irritation, because he wants to carry two trays, because Yamada did so much to make them. And he can’t. And he can’t convince himself to just forget about it.

But when the staff dorm comes into view, he can’t stop thinking about what Eri will think, what she’ll say. Maybe she would even like one of the cupcakes that Hitoshi decorated, more likely given that Yamada helped him do it, Yamada practically did everything. Even if Hitoshi didn’t entirely make them.

He just hopes that Eri likes them.

But when Yamada so easily shuffles two trays onto one arm to open the door, he already knows that they’re still at the training exercise because Eri doesn’t greet them like she usually does. Yamada seemed to be disappointed in that too, wearing it more easily in a sigh. “Well, I guess we can start making dinner if you feel up to it! Get something a little heartier on Eri’s stomach before she gorges herself with sugar, if you want to and all. Probably all baked out already!”

Hitoshi isn’t, even if maybe he should be. The promise of food, and cooking something that isn’t caked in sugar is too promising, especially with Yamada. Yamada picks something quick to make, just a stir fry because Yamada must be tired of all the cooking. But Hitoshi isn’t.

He knows that he should shower, and change his clothes, but the hunger gnawing at him in a way that makes him forget the pear he ate earlier entirely makes him wait until they’ve finished cooking at least. Even if he should wait until they’re all together again, so he doesn’t break that rule about one meal each day being a communal one, Yamada tells him that they shouldn’t let it go to waste, and he can’t argue with him.

Hitoshi has eaten most of his bowl, barely noticed the silence stretching between himself and Yamada, when the front door opens, and Hitoshi can't help but smile when he hears Eri calling out to them. "Yama! Twenny! Auntie Nemmie got me a new plant!"

The plant is wilted, in a bag that Eri probably insisted on carrying, and though Hitoshi liked Witching Hour, he might have to revise that if this is Eri's birthday present.

"And we got you a little present too! More cakes than you can possibly eat in one sitting, made with loving hands and practically stuffed with love, and iced and decorated with it," Yamada says, his arms sweeping out to display the cupcake trays.

It probably shouldn't have taken until this moment to realize it, but looking at Eri now, even knowing how excited she is, Hitoshi realizes that they have enough cake to build another Eri with it. There's no way she can eat all of this by herself. "Did Toshi get love in his hair too?!"

Yamada laughs, but Hitoshi feels the mess clinging to him all the more fully for it. Yamada only got a little flour on his shirt, but Hitoshi's hair and all of his clothes are covered in it, he has batter on his sweater too, and his arms are coated with an almost mud-like mix of flour and water from when he was washing the dishes. "I need to take a shower, but..."

He doesn't have to say it, when Yamada looks at him and smiles like that. "I think we need to taste-test some of our creations first! Let's see here, let's see what we've got."

Hitoshi follows Yamada to the kitchen counter, where their trays had been resting until now. Hitoshi pulls the foil off of his tray, making sure that the cupcakes are still perfectly decorated and not damaged by the trip, and he sees Eri's eyes go wide with awe as she sees what they've done. "I get cake for my birthday present?!"

"It's a lot of cake, but it's not your birthday present, little bean!" Yamada explains, sweeping his hands over the selection. "We've got a cupcake in practically every flavor, to make sure that your birthday cake is the perfect one! And it's probably a good thing that we've got three days until the big day to go through these."

"You gotta help me, though! It's a lot," Eri insists, but that's not how this works. She doesn't have to eat the entire cupcake, but she has to decide which one she likes best on her own. "Which one did Toshi make?"

She probably wants to avoid that one. "We made all of them together, with teamwork! So, let's get some forks and knives and get to picking our favorites!"

"Cake before dinner?" Aizawa asks as he raises an eyebrow, like he has any room to argue. He didn't make the cakes or the dinner, and Yamada should remind him of that fact.

"Hey, we've got some dinner on the stove, and a little dessert before dinner never hurt anyone," Yamada argues, but Hitoshi can feel his excitement too. It's just too much, seeing Eri's awe, practically seeing her pick apart which cupcake she wants to eat first, and deny her of that. Not when they want to know what she thinks too.

Yamada gives Hitoshi a fork too, even if he doesn't need one. He's still a little hungry, which is why he doesn't argue, but this is supposed to be for Eri. She's the reason that they went through all this effort, to find the cupcake that she likes.

He holds his breath when Eri picks the first one, cinnamon cake with vanilla buttercream and the glazed apples he knows she'll love. And when she hums so loudly, smiling so brightly with a bit of icing on her nose, the smile that he wears himself makes it all worth it. Even with just one bite.

Yamada cuts up each cupcake into quarters to sample, and Hitoshi tries to keep track of the ones that Eri says are good, but not quite as passionately as the ones she means. She doesn't like the sweet lemon topping, maybe because it's too sweet, but it's Hitoshi's favorite compared to the others. She doesn't like the chocolate mousse as an icing either, even though that was the hardest one to make. She likes the plain buttercream, though.

Yamada hums like it was predictable that Eri likes the red velvet cupcakes, just because it's Aizawa's favorite too. But Eri might just be saying that, just because it's Aizawa. Just because he has that kind of influence on her. "Wanna try a little of this cheesecake too? Kind of cleanse the palate and all."

If Eri tries it, they all have to try it, and that seems to be the rule right now. Hitoshi can't stifle his own excitement, knowing that Yamada made the cheesecake by himself, and Hitoshi just decorated half of it. He takes a bite of the plain slice after Eri does, and he has to keep the fork in his mouth to stop himself from getting more. Or trying the piece that has the lemon topping. "It's yummy! But I like the cupcakes better, kinda."

Hitoshi swallows a sound that he knows would just embarrass him, trying to plead with Eri with his eyes to convince her to try another bite, even if it's not the lemon one. She can't just give up on this cheesecake, it's delicious, and he won't be able to take another bite if she doesn't. "A solid vote for a cakey-cake for a little bean! I guess you can taste how Hitoshi had the most to do with those. How about you, little listener? Think I did alright with my mother's recipe?"

Now, Hitoshi has to try each slice, to make sure that Yamada made it well. And he does, even if he tries to hide how eager he is to do it. He saves what he thinks will be the best for last, but he's unfortunately wrong. The lemon topping is still too sweet, but the plain cheesecake is by far the best.

And when Yamada looks at him, with the weight of that expectation on his shoulders as heavy as the jacket he hasn't taken off, Hitoshi has to meet it. 'Very good. Plain is the best. Toppings too sweet. Perfect on its own.'

"'Perfect on its own,' that sounds like a cheesecake done right!" Yamada says, grinning too much as though Hitoshi's opinion really matters here. He's not exactly an expert when it comes to taste, he's not a 'foodie,' and he knows it. "I'll have to keep that in mind when July comes around, I guess."

July is half a year away, and Hitoshi has no idea why he needs to make a good cheesecake then. Unless Yamada intends to make a cheesecake for his own birthday, which honestly sounds sad. Not even Aizawa could be so incompetent to make him bake his own birthday cake while he does nothing. He could at least buy one.

Unless, Yamada isn't talking about his own birthday. He's talking about a cake that he wants to make for someone else. Someone else has a birthday in July. Mirio.

It seems weird that Yamada would ask if Hitoshi likes this cake, when he wants to make it for Mirio's birthday, but it's enough of a reason that Hitoshi can put down his fork, satisfied that he helped. He tried the cheesecake, and Eri likes all of the cupcakes she's tried so far. When Yamada starts nudging more of the plain buttercream cupcakes her way, all the while talking about how she should probably only have a few more before she gets too full to walk around.

Hitoshi should probably take a shower, if Eri doesn't pick her favorite this time, if she has more time to do that. She likes the cupcakes that he and Yamada made, and Hitoshi should be satisfied with that. With how much effort he knows Yamada is putting into her birthday to make her happy, how everyone else will do the same.

How he doesn't really need to be here, at the end of it. The end that's coming soon.

"Toshi, did you have fun training with Yama?" Eri asks, her voice cutting through his thoughts too loudly, almost making him flinch. Especially when he realizes he was staring at Aizawa, probably making him unnerved by it.

"Yeah, it was... just learning to bake cakes, though. It was a surprise," Hitoshi mutters. It was a stupid lie, something he came up with on the spot to explain why Yamada would want to take him away from the dorm for the 'secret mission' he hadn't told Hitoshi about yet. The idea of training with Yamada is practically a nightmare, the more that he thinks about it. Having to risk hurting Yamada if they sparred, the idea of training with his quirk on Yamada is nearly enough to make him nauseous.

But Eri frowns, as though the deception hurts her feelings more than Hitoshi thought they would. "But that's not fair! I got to train with Zawa, and all the hero students did too! And you like training with the floaty scarf!"

If there is something close to being as horrible as training with Yamada, it's training with Aizawa with the capture scarf. He knows that Aizawa already knows how much he struggles with it, how he still can't quite master making it stop squirming at times, and how the scarf reacts with a mind of its own when he tries to manipulate even the smallest section of it. He can already imagine Aizawa's focused attention on him, seeing all his failed attempts, getting frustrated with his inadequacy, getting angry at him for wasting his time.

"If that's something Hitoshi wants to do, I'm fine with that," Aizawa says, as noncommittal as it is nonsense. He's probably had enough of Hitoshi, after staying up last night working on the investigation. He must be even more tired after training his students, he probably wants Hitoshi to turn him down.

'I do,' Hitoshi signs, waiting for a flinch that he knows he should earn, how Aizawa's eyes should narrow at him because he's tired and he doesn't want to be around Hitoshi at all. But he made that offer, and he should learn not to.

"Whenever you're ready," Aizawa says, before he takes another piece of a red velvet cupcake like he immediately regrets those words, but he hasn't yet. Hitoshi nods, and stands up to leave to make sure that he will.

He wanted to take a quicker shower, to make sure that Aizawa wouldn't have time to eat the stir fry that Hitoshi and Yamada made, and he didn't, because as soon as the water hit the flour in his hair, it clumped into a mess that takes longer to wash out. He should probably rinse his clothes before putting them in his laundry basket, even though the washing machine means that he doesn't have to wash them fully like he would have before he was rescued, but that would take even more time.

In his urgency to get ready, he forgot to grab a change of clothes from his room. He considers wrapping a towel around himself, but the risk of someone looking down the hall and seeing him like that is too much, so he changes into his dirty clothes anyway, just to strip them off as soon as he's in his room and the door is closed.

And his room hardly looks like his own, now that he's forced to look at it fully.

Without the laptop that he broke, without the decorations that the hero students gave him, it's almost as though this is the same room that he thought was so luxurious and full when he first arrived to UA. But it's not. Even when he looks at the plushies on his bed, Mocha and the mochi pillow that Mirio gave him, and the Grengar, these things hardly seem enough.

But it is. It has to be. He threw away his stash, and he cleaned up his room, because it was crowded. Because he doesn't need those distractions.

Because he knows his room will become more barren eventually, after he finds The Miasma's compound. He'll have to leave, Aizawa said it himself. In a few months.

Yamada can bake whatever cake he wants in July, Hitoshi won't be there to eat it.

Now that Hitoshi has the opportunity, he can dress like he's going to train, unlike all the other times that he didn't have warning before he was attacked or the opportunity presented itself. He picks one of the few pairs of black pants that still fit him, and a loose black shirt. He doesn't know what to do with Yamada's other jacket, since there's already one hanging up in his closet. Even if he knows that Yamada has several of these, he doesn't need two when he shouldn't wear either of them again.

He hangs it up all the same, but his hand hesitates when he looks for another warm jacket to wear. The Delete Face shirt is still hanging in the back of his closet.

He's seen people wearing T-shirts over long shirts, so he knows it's not weird. It feels weird, but he stretches his arms and makes sure that it's not truly restrictive, before he grabs the thickest black jacket in his closet.

He runs a hand through his hair, and knows it usually dries faster than it is. It might be getting too long, but while he waits he thinks about the knife sitting on top of his desk. He didn't need it with Yamada, because Yamada would protect him. He doesn't know how far Aizawa wants this training to go, if he wants to see his skills with a knife. If Aizawa thinks that just because he has that tanto knife strapped to the back of his belt, that he could teach Hitoshi anything.

He decides against it, just in case. If Aizawa wants to insult him like that, he'll have a reasonable excuse. And if they're attacked, as impossible as that sounds if Hagakure was the only reason he was, then Aizawa can prove his word and protect him.

But when Hitoshi opens the door, his hair still a little wet at the ends and drooping because of it, he can hear that they're still gathered in the kitchen. They probably haven't noticed that he's ready to leave his room, and Aizawa has probably had enough time to eat by now, since he took so long.

The insult on his shirt doesn't feel heavy enough, and a pull draws him to the laundry room, just to see if he'll get caught on the way.

He's not, he's still trained well enough, so Aizawa really has nothing to teach him. If Aizawa can't tell that Hitoshi left his room, then he should realize how unaware he is. Hitoshi should prove it to him, to really rub it in his face that Aizawa has no idea what he can do when he's left alone, unescorted.

The duffel bag is still on the top shelf, even if the bleach is gone, but Hitoshi stands on the tips of his toes rather than pulling the bag down to unzip it just enough, fumbling blindly until he finds that cold plastic that he wants. Aizawa's goggles.

He folds them up, putting them in the opposite pocket of his jeans from the one that holds his phone, and tucks his hands in the pockets of his coat to pull the end of it over that pocket to hide them better. If Aizawa tries to get too high and mighty, Hitoshi can prove to him that he's already won, again. Yamada probably told him how he stole his goggles the first time, and he just left them in the same place, like an idiot trying to get robbed.

But right before Hitoshi reaches the end of the hall, he remembers a rule that will sting Aizawa before he says a word to him. Eri and Aizawa are both eating the stir fry, even though Eri has a noticeably smaller portion. Yamada should probably be careful not to feed her too much, or she'll get sick. "Eri, is it okay if I wear this?"

It's a rule that Eri picks his clothes whenever he leaves her, mostly enforced when he leaves with Aizawa or Yamada. Eri has to approve of his choice before he leaves, she has to approve of the shirt he's wearing. The insulting Delete Face shirt that Aizawa is already pulling a face at.

But Eri clearly loves the idea. "Yeah! You're already dressed like Zawa, and it looks cute!"

He's not dressed like Aizawa. Even if he's wearing black from head to toe, like Aizawa does, he's done that for years, just like any Number would. Black helps him blend in with the shadows, it makes him more intimidating when he's a bodyguard. Aizawa just thinks he's stealthy, but he's not, and Hitoshi is far better at it than him.

Yamada makes a weird coughing noise, drawing Eri's concern, but he has a weird smile after he clears his throat. "Yep, rocking the 'all black' number, that's definitely a look! You sure you don't want to pair it up with my jacket?"

Hitoshi shakes his head, he wants to give both of those jackets back because this is clearly a joke that Yamada wants to take too far. He's not wearing that jacket again. Ever. Especially outside, where people could see him and think something as untrue as it would be embarrassing, that he's a fan of Present Mic.

But Aizawa seems to know that Hitoshi is ready, that his time to eat is up, as he stands up to take his dishes to the sink, running a hand over Yamada's shoulder as he passes him but pausing to rest his hand on Eri's head. "We'll be back, but that means that training with Lillio is over."

"That's okay, 'cause Yama can help me fix her with his green thumb!" Eri says, and 'Lillio' must be the name she picked for that wilted plant, a better name than that reject really deserves. "Have fun! I love you!"

"I love-" Hitoshi stops, because Aizawa was saying it too. That's not allowed, he never does that. After all the times that Eri has told him that, only for Aizawa to try to hide his face or stare at a wall when he just told her 'goodbye,' he decides to say it now. When Hitoshi is telling her.

"I love you," Aizawa says, just to be completely insulting. Eri still smiles like she doesn't see it, kicking her feet under the table because she can't fathom how horrible Aizawa is, when it's too obvious right now. "Have fun."

Yamada just smiles, like he doesn't see it either. Clearly, he can't, because he married Aizawa and all. "Oh, we will! I think we might be up for a little movie marathon after the gardening special, or maybe-"

"We can read my new books that Auntie Nemmie got me!" Eri says, and she seems so excited to do that. She's getting everything she wants, just as simply as asking for it. Just like it should be.

"Absolutely!" Yamada agrees, like Hitoshi knew he would. Aizawa pats his shoulder for some reason, before he turns around, and Hitoshi can see how much he hates the Delete Face shirt even clearer when his back is turned to Yamada and Eri.

When it's just them, and they can be more honest with their feelings. Which is exactly what Hitoshi wants, as they leave the dorm, and he feels like the mask is almost slipping off his face once he's out of Yamada's sight.

*

Just as Aizawa suspected, the silent irritation hardly lasts long enough for Aizawa to pull his hair back after stretching to warm up, still unsure what Hitoshi would like to do with this time, when there are several things that Aizawa would like to correct. "I'm not like your eggs, there's nothing you can really show me that I don't already know."

Starting out strong, it seems, and Aizawa turns around to face Hitoshi, the perfect image of teenage arrogance that Aizawa personally delights in smothering in other circumstances. With his students, which Hitoshi is not, and those students will apparently forever be known as 'eggs.' "You need practice with your quirk control, your hand-to-hand combat skills could be better, and you seem ready for introducing movements to the capture scarf. Or, 'floaty scarf' if you prefer."

"I don't," Hitoshi answers in a growl, insult reflected in his half-lidded eyes and flash of teeth when he scowls. "My hand-to-hand combat skills are fine, that's literally the first thing I started training for. I was training with Bug before I learned how to read."

It takes a moment for Aizawa to steady himself after hearing that. It's become too easy underneath these barbs, all the ways that Hitoshi can manifest aspects of any other teenager his age, to forget that he isn't any other teenager. And it's become too easy for Hitoshi to say that name, it seems, when Aizawa is never unaffected to hear it, and remember what that woman did. "You can afford to be more offensive now. You have a solid foundation, because in most fights, you would be at a physical disadvantage, but the gap is closing."

Hitoshi doesn't have to fight like the frightened child he was, relying on redirecting his opponents' brute strength with what little pressure he could manage, in order to survive. The thought of Eri being forced to fight like that sickens Aizawa to his core, and he doesn't want to imagine Hitoshi at that time either. Hitoshi narrows his eyes a bit more, as though he noticed where Aizawa's thoughts try to travel, to a dark place where he would feel nothing but pity for the child in front of him, but his words are an accusation, deep and measured. "You watched me fight Midoriya."

"Not all of it," Aizawa admits, because he had other matches, more dangerous matches, to keep an eye on at the time. "But enough to see that you didn't press all of your advantages. Midoriya is stronger, and faster, but he's observant enough to recognize your pattern--"

"I don't," Hitoshi starts and stops, an attempt to argue that he doesn't have a pattern falling short as he glances at the ground. "Fine, I don't like making the first move. It's easier to react, and that's why I was put on bodyguard duty. I've tried to get over it, and it's not going to happen."

Hitoshi shrugs, staring at Aizawa as though he's made his point and turned down the offer for help. But he hasn't entirely, in too many words he's described the issue and ended it with a lack of confidence for change, but none of that is new for Aizawa. "Reaction is a good strategy. I've never said that the way you fight is wrong, only that you can afford to add new techniques now. You know my strengths, and if I were your opponent, how would you attack?"

Aizawa watches as Hitoshi's eyes seem to change, his scowl dropping off his face and retreating into that unnerving blankness he hasn't seen for a while. Aizawa lets himself be examined,

Hitoshi's analytical gaze lingers on his eyes, on the capture scarf, two of the most powerful weapons Aizawa has. "Low and to the side, avoid the capture scarf and try to break your line of sight with your own body."

Aizawa smiles as he pulls a hand to his scarf. "If you're worried about my quirk, then you're planning to use your own."

As soon as Aizawa pulls the capture scarf to flare loosely around his shoulders, waiting for Hitoshi's move, it falls limply around him as does his hand. As Hitoshi makes that move, with a shit eating grin on his face. "It doesn't usually work the second time, because most people are smart enough to avoid it. But you're really not good at that."

Aizawa watches Hitoshi walk towards him, unable to respond, and trying not to linger on the unpleasant buzzing those words have stirred up inside his skull. Hitoshi raises a fist that Aizawa can't guard himself against, can't react to at all, but he sees the hesitation that comes. Hitoshi's fingers uncurl, and Aizawa sees him meet his own eyes.

Before the twerp flicks his nose to break him out of the brainwash. Aizawa raises an eyebrow as Hitoshi steps back, the bravado disappearing as he seems both ashamed and eager to get back to actual training now that he's had his fun.

But this isn't actual training, and a bit of fun can be allowed. "Did you have trouble breaking the control on your own, or did you just want an excuse?"

Hitoshi huffs, and that irritation is a far better look for him than that guilt and blankness. "This isn't quirk training. I could have broken the control, but you wanted me to make the first move."

Aizawa fights not to roll his eyes, because flicking his nose wasn't what he had in mind. But it's a necessary reminder that this isn't the training that Aizawa is used to, or that Hitoshi is either. And he wants Hitoshi to keep that in mind. "You don't have to do anything that you're uncomfortable with. I can help you with anything you're struggling with, whatever you want to use this time to explore."

The disgusted curl of Hitoshi's lip seems to indicate that he's still not enthused with the idea, especially frustrating because Hitoshi wanted to do this, it seemed.

Unless, it's not what it seems on the surface. "Unless you didn't want to be left out, when Eri made it sound like she and my students were getting more attention."

Hitoshi glares, but his lips pull tight and his shoulders tense, and Aizawa can guess that he's probably right. Even if Hitoshi instinctively wants to deny that. "I don't need your attention. I don't need you to tell me all the things I'm doing wrong or how you think I could do them better, I just...."

Aizawa waits, for the explanation that he wants, that Hitoshi seems to want to fight against giving when he looks around, purposefully avoiding looking at Aizawa. Aizawa has to wait while he sorts out his own issues, and hope that maybe admitting them will make this time pass more smoothly.

"I can't talk to Yamada," Hitoshi admits, something that Aizawa was hopeful had been sorted out, but he knew not to expect something that complicated to be resolved that easily. "He knows that I can talk, and he didn't say anything about it. And I know he's going to be fine, but I don't...."

"Why do you find it easier to talk to me?" Aizawa asks as he crosses his arms, even though he has his own assumptions. Hitoshi likely finds it easier not to care about what Aizawa thinks of him, given that their relationship has progressed from terror on Hitoshi's part to irritation bordering on outright hatred, though Aizawa wonders if he's the only one who can find it companionable at times.

He's not sure if he wants to find the truthful answer, but he asked for it all the same, and Hitoshi seems less nervous to give it than sorting out his reasons behind not talking to Yamada. "You know how I am. You don't see me the same way Yamada does. He just... thinks I'm this great person, like I'm not stupid, like I'm not messed up. But you don't care about me, so I don't have to care about what you think."

Hitoshi shrugs, as though not a single word he's said hasn't driven a nail into Aizawa's heart. He honestly wants this to be a taunt somehow, to not be honest. What Hitoshi honestly thinks about him. "You think... that I don't care about you?"

Another shrug, Hitoshi looks away and to the side as though his words shouldn't be doubted, that they're truth. He does believe that. "I'm only here for the investigation, that's the only reason you're putting up with me."

"I care about you," Aizawa says, still in disbelief that it needs to be said. That Hitoshi honestly doesn't believe it. "You don't have to help with the investigation to earn that, you deserve to be cared for regardless of that. Neither I nor Hizashi have ever thought that you're stupid or messed up-"

"That's bullshit because I am," Hitoshi snaps, his eyes narrowing as he sweeps his hand out, as though there's any real logic to what he believes. "That's the only reason I'm here, as soon as you find The Miasma, I'm gone, you can say I'm not going to some institution-"

"Because you're not," Aizawa argues, dropping his arms as he looks at the ground, trying to collect himself. Snapping back at Hitoshi won't help the situation. "Hitoshi, I care a great deal about you. I'm not going to let you be mistreated, ever again, and I've never seen you differently than you are... because you are a great person, a kind and smart person, and every aspect of yourself that you seem to doubt is in spite of everything you never should have gone through. You're not-"

Brainwashing him as a means to interrupt him is getting old, but Aizawa has no choice but to silently stew about it, as Hitoshi huffs and turns around, turning his back to him like he doesn't want to see him, as much as he doesn't want him to continue talking. Hitoshi's hand runs through his own hair, before he growls. "You're seriously so full of shit. Full of absolute shit, you really think that I... Like I'd believe that."

Aizawa knows it's useless to try, but he fights to move just his hand. Just his finger, to break out of Hitoshi's hold, to do anything to convince Hitoshi to see what Aizawa sees.

He sees a kid who has been through hell, but has never let it become him, never let it change who he is as a person in any way that matters. A child raised by monsters that still clings to his morals, that still has boundless kindness inside himself. A kid who was taught to fight before he learned how to read and has more enthusiasm for his studies than his own students do.

None of that is the reason that Aizawa cares about him. Aizawa doesn't need a reason to care what happens to Hitoshi, to care for his wellbeing, he just does. It's only rational to care about him.

Hitoshi turns around, tucking his hands in his pockets as he looks at Aizawa, a tight frown and a glare with no heat behind it falters into something unguarded and unsure, before he speaks. "Raise your right hand if... you like coffee."

The static inside his skull roars to the point that Aizawa feels sick, and though he can't feel much of his body, he can feel the tips of his fingers while they twitch. This is worse than when Hitoshi speaks without a command, it feels nauseating under a strain he can't fully feel, while his mind seems to struggle to understand a complex command.

He isn't the only one made uncomfortable, as he watches Hitoshi's softly glowing eyes wince like he's trying to sneeze, before he pulls a hand under his nose, and there's blood under his nostril, smeared on the edge of his hand. He's pushing too far against his limit.

But Aizawa feels the static cut out, even if the hold on his body doesn't yield. Hitoshi looks up, and to his right. Aizawa can't feel his hand, but it must have risen.

Hitoshi has a quirk perfectly suited for interrogating him, if he needs to test whether Aizawa likes coffee or not. And if Hitoshi wanted to hone his skill with that quirk, Aizawa might have agreed to it, admittedly wary about what Confession would force him to say. "Hm. That wasn't fun."

Hitoshi's casual admittance of some apparent discomfort is all the reason he really needs to drop the control, but instead he steps towards Aizawa, ignoring the nosebleed still steadily trailing down his lip. When Hitoshi stops, he looks away to wipe the blood off with his sleeve, but when he looks at Aizawa again, his eyes seem wider. Caught between innocence and accusation.

"Put your hand down if you care about me," Hitoshi commands, his eyes glowing again with Confession's influence, and Aizawa can practically hear the migraine building from the back of his head forward, alongside the static he can hear as deafening white noise. He can see Hitoshi wince and curl forward, clearly in pain as he cups his nose, he could just stop this and Aizawa fights to use his quirk to stop it himself, before Hitoshi hurts himself.

But the static finally quiets. Aizawa can't feel whether he put his hand down, but he knows he did. He waits for Hitoshi to look up to see it.

When Hitoshi does, his eyes watering from the pain, his upper lip covered in blood and speckling his chin, he knows from how low he's looking that he sees Aizawa's hand is down. He cares about this reckless kid who has a perfectly good Confession quirk to use if he doesn't believe him. "Raise your hand, and put it over my head."

Aizawa can see his hand hovering over Hitoshi's mess of purple hair, the command flowing so easily it feels natural in comparison to those conditional commands. Hitoshi still glances up at it, his shoulders rising before he tucks his chin towards himself, almost as though he's trying to hide inside a scarf he's not wearing.

"M-move your hand up and down," Hitoshi says, and Aizawa wonders why he wants that, his numb hand flapping the ends of Hitoshi's hair outside of his control, until he understands. Right before Hitoshi says it. "Pat my head. Like you do with Eri."

The last part of that, almost growled under Hitoshi's breath, sings with a ghost of that nauseating static before his hand lowers to the top of Hitoshi's head. He doesn't pat it, not like Hitoshi originally ordered, but Aizawa watches with trepidation as his fingers comb through Hitoshi's wild locks, ruffling his hair in a way he hopes is still gentle. Given that Hitoshi has complete control over him, he shouldn't be the one full of fear with this.

He doesn't avoid touching Hitoshi like this, like he does with Eri, because he cares less about him. He knows that it's new that Hitoshi can stand to be touched at all, in any casual way. He knows what Hitoshi went through from the bleach bath torture, how that bastard Chronostasis had grabbed him by his hair and forced him underwater. He knows that Hitoshi has dissociated from someone touching his hair like this.

But Hitoshi is allowing it, not exactly asking but forcing Aizawa to do this. The teenager's shoulders tense further at first, as though he's expecting a blow, until he relaxes.

Despite the blood on the lower half of his face, the scabs still burrowed inside the scars already earned from that mask, the bandaids wrapped around his fingers probably made bloody again when he tried to clean himself off, the kid in front of him is a mess of reckless self-destruction probably spurned on by self-hatred. But when his eyelids start to fall further closed, his eyes focused on Aizawa's chest, his head still bent and the circles of exhaustion so dark, he just looks tired.

Like a tired kid, who's fought alone too long for any moment like this. A moment where he feels safe, and cared for. And that kind of relief, even if it doesn't look pretty right now, is all that Aizawa has ever wanted for him.

It seems to be too relaxing, Aizawa realizes, or else the strain of misusing his quirk was too great, when Hitoshi starts to tip forward, and Aizawa's hand follows him. Sensation rushes back to him in full color, as he realizes he has a teenager pressing their full weight on his chest, his hand still trapped in his soft hair. He wasn't able to realize how soft it feels while he was under Hitoshi's control.

But Hitoshi springs back, eyes wide with panic, as though he didn't realize the control had dropped that quickly. As though he thinks any part of that was a misstep or mistake, and even if it was, Aizawa doesn't have any intention or ability to reflect on it. "Hitoshi-"

"Why is your face stupid?" Hitoshi blurts out in what seems to be an obvious panic, in what seems like an attempt to use Confession with his eyes flashing violet, and Aizawa wishes that his throat wouldn't tighten out of his control when it seems to work as such.

"I forget to shave unless Hizashi reminds me that my beard is too long, and I don't have much opportunity to sleep with either of my jobs, or you or Eri. And my eyes are bloodshot on a good day, due to overusing my quirk for years," Aizawa answers, pointing out the few insecurities he'd hardly call that, given how little he cares for his physical appearance, before he falls into static again.

This time, when he blinks and finds his faculties restored to him, Hitoshi is nowhere in sight. He ended the control on his own, Aizawa's memory is completely lost to him for that time, and Hitoshi is missing.

"Hitoshi," Aizawa calls out, the echo of Gym Gamma taunting him because he knows it can't be that simple. "If you're in the vents again-"

"I'm not," Hitoshi's voice answers this time, from a slight distance but lacking an echo that would have been dangerous. Aizawa has no idea if Nezu has programmed the robots in every building to recognize that Hitoshi is allowed to be in the vents, and he'd rather not find evidence that he hasn't.

Aizawa finds himself grateful for Hitoshi's insatiable need to be argumentative, as he throws his capture scarf to the railing of the walkway overlooking the grounds of Gym Gamma, pulling himself over to see Hitoshi sitting on the floor, his arms wrapped around his knees. Glaring, but Aizawa can't put the image of an offended kitten out of his head when he looks at him. "Are you okay?"

Hitoshi pulls a hand to wipe under his nose, the blood still leaves a stain but at the very least it's not still flowing. “M fine. And that means I’m actually fine, my head hurts a little but it’s fine.”

Aizawa honestly thinks that Hitoshi could put his head in a woodchipper and still argue that he’s ‘fine,’ but he winds the capture scarf back around his neck and walks slowly towards his ward. Slow, measured steps, keeping an eye out in case the teenager bristles. Exactly the same way he’d approach a feral cat in a foul mood.

Aizawa manages to sit beside Hitoshi, still at a comfortable distance, and imagines that it’s also easier for the kid if he doesn’t have to look at him. Or his ‘stupid’ face.

“I care about you,” Aizawa says, testing the waters for receptibility for further conversation, and when Hitoshi seems to be more interested in glaring at the railing in front of him, he takes that as permission to move forward. “Hizashi cares about you. We both want you to be safe, be well, be happy at UA, and as much as we can accommodate that, we try our best to achieve that.”

“But I have to talk to him,” Hitoshi argues, pulling his legs tighter to himself as he does. “And... you don’t get how that... I don’t want to see him like that.”

Hitoshi’s voice nearly falls into a whisper, the pain beneath the anger pulled into the open, as vulnerable as it ever could be. More painful, even illogical as it may be, than Aizawa assumed it was.

“If you’re wrong about the hearing aids, and I have to see him like that, if I take control of him.... I just don’t want that, I don’t want to do that to him,” Hitoshi says, his arms winding tighter around his legs as his eyebrows furrow with fear and hurt that seems so much lesser than what he’s been through before, but Aizawa knows that it’s not. “I hate how it looks, what my quirk looks like. With you or Eri... it’s just worse seeing it on him.”

“You haven’t seen it,” Aizawa reminds, Aizawa has to remind Hitoshi of his reality when he knows that he’s creating monsters worse than they could ever hope to be in real life. “If that happened, you know how to break the control. You wouldn’t have to see Hizashi like that any longer than you wanted to, you have control over your quirk. And you have control over what you do with it.”

It’s a mere glance, Hitoshi’s eyes wandering to him so full of vulnerability. Aizawa doesn’t know what he’s done to deserve it, doesn’t know if he can meet Hitoshi’s needs where they are, when he needs someone to convince him that his world won’t come crashing down if he uses his quirk on Hizashi. If the test fails, when Aizawa knows it won’t, they have evidence and logic to prove it.

But Hitoshi’s worries run deeper than that. As much as he still hates and fears his quirk, he hates and fears something else. “You won’t hurt Hizashi with your quirk. I know that for a fact, as much as I know that if you did, he would forgive you. There’s nothing you could do to change that, or make either of us turn away from you.”

“That’s not true,” Hitoshi argues, the weakest attempt at it he’s ever made as he turns away, shaking his head. “If I killed someone, or if I broke the law. You don’t even know what I did before, even if you say it wasn’t my fault, I still did it, and you’re both heroes so you’d hate me for doing that.”

“I’m aware,” Aizawa says, leaning a bit further against the wall as he tries to get comfortable, to force himself to look more open as he stretches out his legs. “That there were a few more bags of chitose ame that Eri had at Shichi-Go-San than we bought. I don’t hate you for that.”

Hitoshi doesn’t take the bait, he almost seems to ignore Aizawa completely, but the lack of panic for being found out is probably as promising as Aizawa could hope for.

“Hizashi and I being heroes has nothing to do with how we feel about you. I know you well enough to know that you wouldn’t kill someone, you wouldn’t hurt someone intentionally and without reason like that,” Aizawa says, seeing Hitoshi’s arms relax just the slightest amount, because even if the teenager did doubt that Aizawa and Hizashi knew him that well, he knows for himself that he’d never cross that line. In complete spite of the circumstances he suffered, Hitoshi has a higher code of ethics that he clings to with the same passion that he holds for Furokage Muzuki’s memory. That fleeting kindness that woman gave him was enough to shelter his humanity this much. “Even if you did, even if you didn’t have a reason, Hizashi and I would still care about you. You would have to face the repercussions of your actions, but even then, we wouldn’t abandon you.”

“Even 50 would,” Hitoshi mutters, his fingers picking at his own sleeves. “I’m not going to do that, but I know that there’s a limit. I could do something unforgivable like that, and you can’t say that there’s nothing.”

“There are a lot of unforgivable things you could do,” Aizawa says, and he doesn’t like to reflect on them. He’s always known how easy it could have been for Hitoshi to give in, and accept that his quirk was villainous, to allow himself to be used for the worst of intentions. “And I know that you would never do them. In spite of everything, you’re one of the kindest people I’ve met, and you sell yourself too short to ignore that.”

“Better than selling me cheap, like my mother did,” Hitoshi says, pulling a hand to wipe under his nose again, and Aizawa can only hope this won’t be a new habit for him. “I’m sure Midoriya really thinks I’m a kind person, and Monoma. I’m sure you’re not just making that up to make me feel better, or something stupid like that.”

“That would be pretty stupid,” Aizawa agrees. “I’m sure there’s no reason for Midoriya to accept your apology and want to talk to you after that, or a reason for Monoma to agree to leave you alone because he was worried he made you uncomfortable.”

“He doesn’t care about making me uncomfortable,” Hitoshi argues, tilting his head with an attempt to glare, so poor it’s almost pitiable. “And Midoriya is insane, he doesn’t count.”

“I can agree to an extent,” Aizawa says, even if his stomach drops when he realizes that he shouldn’t be encouraging one Problem Child to bond with another. If Hitoshi and Midoriya became friends, they’d get themselves killed in a matter of months, if he’s being generous. “You can hurt people you care about, and still be forgiven. You can forgive yourself too, and I don’t believe you’ve ever done that.”

Hitoshi looks at him, as though that’s any revelation for a kid who still blames himself for what he had to do, under the threat of death. When he didn’t have an escape, or any sign of salvation, when he was failed by heroes for years and yet somehow, still believed in them enough to hope Eri would be rescued.

A kid who has been through enough pain, and needs to learn how to stop dealing it on himself. “If the test fails, and you take control of Hizashi, he won’t see it as something you did intentionally to hurt him. He knows how difficult it is for you to do this, and we both wish it wasn’t necessary. It won’t fail, and it won’t be your fault even if it does. You were forced into this, and I’m sorry.”

“It’s... better,” Hitoshi mutters, tipping his chin forward to rest on his knees. “I’m not mad about it. I know that’s how it works, and I know it’s not going to fail. I just... wish it was easier.”

Aizawa wants that too. More than anything. “Tomorrow won’t change anything, about how either of us feel about you. It might be better to take your mind off of it.”

Aizawa reaches up to pull the capture scarf from his shoulders, immediately feeling too bare with that. But somehow, it’s grown less uncomfortable to hand it over to Hitoshi, especially at times when his well-guarded interest isn’t as hidden as the kid would probably like it to be.

‘Hold it,’ Aizawa signs, reminding Hitoshi that the scarf always responds violently when someone talks around Hitoshi, his quirk can make mastery over the capture scarf more difficult, but in ways Aizawa can hardly imagine, more powerful. “The scarf reacts to your quirk, and follows the emitter signals that it makes. I want you to hold the scarf at its end, and see where it will fall.”

Hitoshi rather wisely tosses the loops of the scarf away from him, holding onto the end he’s selected with a bit of trepidation that Aizawa tries to guard. The scarf reacts wildly to Hitoshi’s quirk, but Aizawa has to trust that he’s adept enough at ceasing its movements, given that Erasure isn’t entirely effective on him. “Okay.”

There’s nothing, until Hitoshi turns to look at him. Almost asking why it isn’t working, until Aizawa realizes it’s a question of permission. “Alright.”

And the scarf flares. As soon as Aizawa speaks, it nearly makes a perfectly straight line to the walkway on the opposite wall. The sheer force of Hitoshi’s quirk acting on that, from that simple word, is a force that Aizawa struggled to manifest for himself for nearly a year.

He sees Hitoshi squint, his hold on the scarf adjusting as he stares, and Aizawa sees the opposite end veer to the right, before it finds a rail and starts wrapping itself around it like it’s acting on sheer memory. But Aizawa doubts that it’s something so simple. “Did you just-”

The guilt pulls as the scarf does, Hitoshi yanked forward to stand with his hand braced on the railing in front of him. Aizawa stands too, a hand on his shoulder to catch him, but the scarf is now bowed limp towards the floor below them.

There’s a smile on Hitoshi’s face, so open and honest that Aizawa is awed that it doesn’t falter when he turns to look at him.

“I did. I was trying to use the smallest end, but when it’s like that,” Hitoshi huffs, looking back at the scarf, and what he’s done completely on his own. “It’s so much easier.”

“The capture scarf reacts as a whole to your quirk. Manipulating a small part of it, even with the railing,” Aizawa says, and still has to stare because he can’t believe it. “Is a difficult technique.”

Something that Hitoshi just did. With barely any training, with a quirk made powerful and unwieldy in ways that Hitoshi struggles to control fueling the scarf, Hitoshi manipulated the scarf that intuitively. “It... was kind of easy.”

Then again, with the nature of Hitoshi’s quirk, he might have an advantage for asserting his control over the scarf. He only needs the confidence that he can, something earned by doing it. Something Aizawa could easily accommodate. “Try unwrapping it from the-”

Aizawa blinks away static again, and turns to make sure that Hitoshi hasn’t run away from him again. Instead, he sees that victorious smile is gone, the capture scarf is laying on the middle of the floor below them, and the guilt at the way Hitoshi refuses to look away from it with his head bowed is unbearable. “Sorry. Slipped.”

“That’s fine,” Aizawa says, his hand rises before he thinks about it, but when he thinks, he hesitates above Hitoshi's shoulder.

It's a bit awkward, to hold his hand out and in front of Hitoshi's forehead, but he imagines there should still be some warning offered, some means of consent. With a cat, Aizawa knows the method of introduction, and when Hitoshi glances up at it, he half expects him to butt his head against Aizawa's offered hand.

It's almost more confusing when he almost does, leaning forward a bit instead, but Aizawa tries to convince himself there will be no repercussions as he rests his hand on Hitoshi's head, as confidently as he would with Eri. Though he can't deny there's more warmth under his palm than he expects. "You're learning. And you're an undeniably quick learner. You'll have full control of your quirk in time."

Hitoshi's half lidded eyes fall further shut, the undeniable proof that Aizawa honestly needs to know that Hitoshi is fine with this new boundary. But despite the tension falling away from Hitoshi, slowly enough that Aizawa worries yet knows it isn't affecting him like he fears, he's startled completely when Hitoshi starts to lean towards him. Almost falling to the side, but slow enough to make Aizawa wonder if it was intentional.

Aizawa pulls his hand away before he makes that connection, and whatever semi-hypnosis Hitoshi seemed to be under breaks as he rights himself. Still refusing to look at Aizawa, but it seems more to do with embarrassment.

Something that still makes Aizawa's guard rise, because he knows Hitoshi hasn't reacted well to feeling embarrassed lately. "I'm... just tired."

Aizawa nods, not that Hitoshi would risk looking in his direction right now, but he'll accept Hitoshi's understandable exhaustion as a reason that he didn't try to pick a fight to distract from that moment of vulnerability. Aizawa checks his phone for the time, pulling a grimace as he does. "It is getting late. I should take you back to the dorm."

"You're going to the 1-A dorm?" Hitoshi asks, his voice wavering when he makes it a question. Something shy enough that it's nearly painful to know that he's trusted with something that vulnerable, especially now.

"I am. It's my night," Aizawa answers, quick enough to show no hesitation. Even if the relief is hard to see, he still hears it when Hitoshi sighs, probably unintentionally. "You can come with me, but you'll rest better in your own bed, instead of the cot."

"With you," Hitoshi nearly mumbles, his hands tucking into his pockets when he steps back from the railing, his posture so oddly loose that Aizawa can't help but notice when it stiffens for a moment. "I'm not avoiding Yamada, I just... would rather."

"That's fine," Aizawa says, even if he doubts that Hitoshi is telling the truth. Even if he says he's not avoiding Yamada, there's little other reason for him to pick a cot rather than his own bed, to choose the Safe Room over the dorm, or trade breakfast with Eri and Yamada's company for a jelly pouch and coffee. "Do you want to get another set of clothes?"

That seems to bring the familiar glare back, as Hitoshi's expression hardens, his hand insultingly possessive when it falls on the blurry picture beneath the 'Delete Face' logo. "No. I'm wearing this, and I'm not changing."

Aizawa fights not to roll his eyes, even if he loses the argument to not fall into another argument with Hitoshi. "It doesn't seem comfortable to sleep in."

“I’m going to sleep in it,” Hitoshi argues, frustratingly pointlessly. If Hitoshi wants to defend the point that jeans are comfortable to sleep in simply because he wants to try to irritate Aizawa with that damn shirt, Aizawa has no choice but to let him. “Actually, I’m going to ask Santa to get me a lot of Delete Face shirts. I’m such a huge fan of Delete Face, I’d love to wear those shirts every day. That’s exactly what I want for Christmas.”

“Do not tell Hizashi that,” Aizawa begs, and he doesn’t know how much he’s exaggerating when he does. He doesn’t know if his husband would buy 14 or twenty shirts if Hitoshi told him what he wants that plainly, but he knows that he would buy them.

Aizawa doesn’t know how many are on the market, now that Shiori isn’t selling them anymore.

But somehow, Hitoshi’s insistent fondness for that shirt continues to whittle away at that association. Maybe, Aizawa should feel guiltier to begin to forget her like that, but he’s learned that forgetting isn’t a violence to the memory. It’s living afterwards, in a way that the dead would like to see.

And Shiori would no doubt be pleased to see him suffer like this.

How It Feels

Chapter Summary

Shinsou has a nightmare the night before his appointment with a quirk specialist, where he will have to test whether his quirk affects Yamada in order to remain at UA as his ward. Midoriya introduces Shinsou to a new face whose reputation precedes her, Bakugo attempts to make amends, and Aizawa finds himself too flattered to dole out a strict punishment.

Chapter Notes

Trigger Warning: Blood, 50 mentions, Nightmares, Dog mention, Bakugo's POV has an insinuation of self-harm/suicide not committed by himself, Previously on Wards of UA: In the interrogation with Chisaki, Chisaki said that he had Shinsou fight other members of the 8 Precepts of Death because Shinsou was violent and he had to give him an outlet, or else he would hurt Eri. Shinsou recently Brainwashed Midoriya to make him run into a wall, which injured Midoriya's hand. Shinsou's name had been changed to 'Dog' when he was at the 8 Precepts. When Monoma Copied Shinsou's quirk and used it on Shinsou, Shinsou recognized the feeling as being the same as when he dissociates. Midoriya recognized that while he had accepted what Bakugo had done to them throughout their childhood, he would like an apology. Hagakure was arrested recently for being the UA traitor, a blow that unsettled most of 1-A and especially Bakugo. Shinsou had been worried that his quirk causes Mental Quirk Abuse Syndrome with repetition, but Midoriya sent him several articles on the subject and tried to convince Shinsou that since Eri is the most susceptible to the condition due to being a child and she doesn't have it, that Shinsou can't cause that. Shinsou cut his fingers when he ripped the vent cover off the ceiling in his room. Shinsou has been trying to threaten Midoriya by saying he will 'hurt him without hurting him physically or emotionally intentionally,' as the rules that Yamada, Aizawa, Eri, and Hitoshi agreed to forbid intentionally hurting someone with those two methods. Bakugo's nickname for Kaminari is 'Dinky shit,' playing off of 'Denki.' Bakugo messaged Shinsou on their chat that he obtained his provisional license while Shinsou was in the mountains, after the 127 attack. The last time that Shinsou slept a full night's sleep was when he got black-out drunk at Shoga's cabin. When Shinsou threatened 1-A, he neglected to mention exactly how Confession works, or that it was a separate quirk from Brainwashing. Someone holding Bakugo's wrist is a trigger for him that often makes him violently dissociate.

He's standing in the training room. There's a knife in his hand, and he knows who put it there. He knows his hand shouldn't be that small.

He knows that there shouldn't be that much blood on the knife. It's bleeding. "Hitoshi."

Yamada is kneeling in front of him, staring at his arm braced on his knee, squeezing his arm tight to try to slow the bleeding. He knows it's too much, as the wound keeps growing, the blood keeps soaking through Yamada's sleeve, running down his arm, pouring off of him and pooling on the ground.

When Yamada looks at him, he doesn't smile, his face twisted in pain he can't hide. His eyes are white. "Hitoshi, it's okay."

It's not. It's not it's not it's not, he hurt Yamada, he cut him like that, he didn't want to but it doesn't matter, he hurt Yamada, Yamada will never want to be around him, it's going to be so cold now- "Hitoshi."

It's 50 now. 50's voice. 50 kneeling on the ground, her thumb pulling at her skin to look at the cut on the curve of her arm, a fresh wound among all those scars. He still put that one there, that's his fault.

"It's okay," 50 says, smiling like she wants to laugh, like it's funny. It's not, it still hurts. "It was just an accident, not worth crying over. Come here."

He has to go to her. He feels like his arms are growing smaller, that he's shrinking more and more as he tries to hold her tighter. Tight enough to feel it. Tight enough to feel warm.

"It's just something to remember you by. You're too sweet, you know. You better keep that," 50 says. He knows she's stroking his hair, her fingers catching on the lock for the mask, even if he doesn't feel it like he should. "I'm gonna leave, but it's not your fault."

It is. It is, he wants to tell her that it is, it's his fault, he shouldn't have hurt her. But even if the mask feels loose his jaw is locked too tight. He can't tell her.

"I forgive you," 50 says, and she shouldn't. She shouldn't forgive him, he's just going to do it again. Even if he doesn't want to, the knife is still stuck in his hand. She should just get away from him, he doesn't even know where the knife is, if he's stabbing her now. "I'd forgive you even if you killed someone. Even if you killed 127. Even if you killed everyone. That's fine."

50's voice is wrong. Her words are wrong.

He tries to pull away, but she won't let him, her arms wrapping tight around him won't let him escape. "It's fine if you kill them. You could do it. I know you could, I know you want to. You want to ruin everything, you want to hurt everyone, if I let you go you'd do it, you're a monster, you'd hurt them, you just want to hurt them-"

"No!" He screams, he tries to fight to break free of this darkness that holds him, the darkness that isn't 50's quirk, she's not here anymore. Those aren't her words.

"Violent," Chisaki drawls, his hands slowly clapping as he walks closer. "Violent, I had to give you an outlet. I couldn't let you hurt Eri, hurt Yamada-"

"Go-" The mask clicks shut, his mouth shuts, his teeth won't open, he can't get out.

"Shinsou," Midoriya says, his voice is unsteady, he's still holding his hand where he hurt him, making him run into that wall. His fingers broke off against it, and despite the pain, he's just staring at him with those green eyes, his voice becoming odd. "Shinsou, Shinsou, Shinsou, Shinsou-"

"It's fine," 50 says, the darkness swirling around him, sure to devour him. He's going to be ripped apart, and 50 thinks that he's fine?

"Why? Because I am here!" All Might bellows, too close to him, his face is too close and Hitoshi just-

"It's okay." Aizawa's voice. Bedsheets, too warm, a dark room. The computer screen, he's in the Safe Room. Aizawa is hovering too close to him, his hand pulling away. He looks worried, and Hitoshi is breathing too quick.

He pulls a hand to his face and realizes that he's crying, scrubbing the tears away while he tries to stop. This is just stupid.

"It was just a bad dream," Aizawa says, like it's perfectly normal to wake up crying like this, because of that stupid dream. Hitoshi hears the springs creak, he feels Aizawa sitting down at the foot of the cot. He wants to talk about it, and it's stupid.

"All Might," Hitoshi says, his voice cracked and weak to just make it worse, and for some reason he can't stop crying. "Fucking All Might, and-and him, and-"

"Hitoshi, just breathe," Aizawa says, and Hitoshi hears the springs creak again before he feels it, Aizawa's hand on his shoulder. Even if he flinches away at first, he tries to take that back, he tries to convince Aizawa that he didn't mean it by pushing back into his palm, and he can only breathe again when he feels it. Warm. Solid. Aizawa is here. "It was... a bad dream. But it's over now."

"I ca-can't stop," Hitoshi gasps, and this is just stupid. He can't stop crying like a brat, like an idiot, he's such a worthless piece of shit, he's probably forgotten how to breathe and everyone can laugh at him because he's finally fucking gotten that stupid. "Stop."

Aizawa moves closer, and Hitoshi lets his head fall against his shoulder, still flinching when he feels Aizawa's other hand on his back, too gentle at first. Too warm. He still can't stop crying. "I've had nightmares about him too," Aizawa mutters, as though that's not the stupidest fucking thing he's ever heard. It wasn't even about All Might, even if his face was horrifying in that dream, it still wasn't the worst part.

Hitoshi tries to drive it out of his mind but it sticks, he can feel the blood on his hands, even when he knows it's just tears and snot. He can't gather his breath, he can't stop crying, he feels like he's drowning. He can't stop shaking.

He knows he's wasting Aizawa's time, he supposed to be watching his students, not wasting his time with him. Not over such a stupid dream, what he knows isn't real, he doesn't need Aizawa to tell him that. "You're alright. It was just a bad dream."

Hitoshi closes his eyes, holding onto his breath even as his lungs seem to thrash inside his chest, trying to escape, trying to sob. When that broken gasp escapes, he just holds his breath again, trying to force himself to be steady. Trying to feel Aizawa's arms around him.

To feel where it's warm, real. He didn't hurt Yamada. 50 would never say that.

It was just a bad dream.

Aizawa starts pulling away, recognizing that Hitoshi has calmed down. He's tired enough that his head just falls off of Aizawa's shoulder, enough that he can't raise it to face Aizawa's judgement, just staring at the sheets below him. Twisting his fingers in the cloth, to remind himself that he's real. "Do you want to talk about it?"

Hitoshi shakes his head, and pulls a hand he hardly feels to his face, the edges of his scabs burning from the mess there. He should wash his face but he can't stand the thought of moving that much. "50. When I h-hurt her. Yamada was there. Chis-s-s..."

He grinds his teeth and swallows, refuses to let this sting him too. He can be a fucking worthless idiot, but not that much. "The scar on her arm?"

Hitoshi nods, starting to run a hand through his hair before he remembers himself. A disgusting mess. "The blu-blood. Y-Yamada was b-bleeding. He c-cou-fuck."

His fingernails dig into a scab before he can think about it, but Aizawa just takes his hand away, snot and all, like he's not allowed to do what he wants with himself. "Hitoshi-"

"I'm not fucking stupid! All Might wasn't even- and I can talk, I can talk like a normal fucking person, I'm not fucking stupid!" Hitoshi yells, even if he feels half numb as he does, as he swats his hand out of Aizawa's and glares him down. The fucker doesn't bat an eye, because he doesn't care, no matter what he says. "Oh, but that's going to be hilarious when I have to do that, when I have to talk to Yamada, everyone's going to laugh at the stupid fucking Dog who can't talk right-"

"Hitoshi," Aizawa says, his voice low enough that everything grows cold. Too cold, Hitoshi looks at the cot and doesn't know why the fuck he looked up, why he said that. Any of that, anything.

Aizawa sighs, and gets up like he's going to leave, like he should, and everything goes colder. He should have just kept his mouth shut, shouldn't have said a single word.

He hears the faucet running, before it cuts off. Aizawa walking back.

A cold rag on his face, sharp enough to sting, but he's not smart enough to just endure it. He pulls it away from Aizawa, but Aizawa doesn't recognize that insult he's too stupid to keep himself from doing. Aizawa just sits down, further away.

Hitoshi wipes his eyes, and wishes he could just go blind in this soothing cold that helps the stinging a bit. He wishes he wasn't an uncontrollable idiot. "You're not stupid. Stuttering isn't a sign of stupidity. If Chisaki had told you that-"

"Everyone did," Hitoshi says, unable to bite the words back after they slip out, sniffing to keep the mucus from running out too. "I don't care. He's dead and I don't care. It's stupid."

"You can still feel hurt by that, even if you don't care about the idiots who had that opinion," Aizawa says, and despite himself, Hitoshi flinches at the tone. He just feels too weak, too vulnerable. He wants it to stop. "You had a dream that you hurt Hizashi, the same way that 50 was hurt. I know you're worried about the test today, but you won't hurt Hizashi. I can be there with you, if that will help."

Hitoshi digs his fingers into the rag, dropping his hands into his lap. He's worried, the test is today, it's inescapable. Aizawa's quirk won't help, it doesn't work on him, on Nomus.

Aizawa is still too far away, when he drops his head a little further. That shouldn't irritate him so much. "What are you feeling right now?"

"Weird," Hitoshi answers, sniffing again and he'd rather stop. He'd rather have the energy to get up and blow his nose, if Aizawa won't leave him alone so he can blow it into the rag. "Cold."

He feels like his skin is burning and freezing at the same time, like he's outside in the snow without any clothes, even the ones he knows he's wearing. Aizawa still takes him too literally, grabbing the blanket that was tossed to the side as though Hitoshi is too stupid to do that. “Tired?”

He is, but he shakes his head. His eyes are irritating, still burning from those stupid tears. He wants to just close his eyes but he can’t stand the thought of being less aware now. He trusts Aizawa, and he doesn’t, even when he tries to convince himself.

He wraps the blanket around his shoulders, even if it feels barely warmer, it helps. The blanket is too light, but it thaws him enough to consider moving. “Thirsty?”

Hitoshi pulls the blanket around him tighter, but that does nothing to cool the heat rising under his skin. “If this is an interrogation, I’ll start asking questions too, and you don’t want that.”

Aizawa just turns his head away, scratching the back of his head. He looks tired, and Hitoshi should probably stop being a dick to him. “You seem frustrated, and being aware of what’s making you uncomfortable can help the situation. It’s usually deeper than feeling ‘weird,’ but being aware of the ‘weird’ feeling will help.”

“Like not being aware of my physical limits,” Hitoshi says, remembering how Aizawa wanted to prove he can’t run like Mirio can, despite the fact that he’s trained longer than him. But somehow, he keeps the anger out of his words just enough. “I just feel weird. I’m not even cold, I don’t know why I said that.”

“Maybe you’re not cold anymore,” Aizawa says, looking back at Hitoshi. And that makes him feel cold. “But it might be something else. Just take a moment to recognize what you’re feeling, instead of what you feel like you should be doing.”

He should stop bothering Aizawa. He should just go to sleep, because he is tired. He should put the rag back in the bathroom, because it’s making his hands cold. He should just crawl inside some dark space where no one will find him, and no one will force him to talk to Yamada, he won’t have to see how Yamada’s face changes and his smile falls off his face and his eyes go white because he used his quirk on him and made him dissociate and Yamada won’t forgive him because he’s lying.

He’s not a forgivable person, and they’re just waiting for a better excuse to hate him than the ones he’s given, as though they don’t know what he knows, how rotten he is to the core.

Hitoshi forces his eyes closed for a moment, tilting his head towards the cot. His hands are still cold, and wet, his eyes don’t hurt as much but his head does, a bit. He’s tired, but he can’t scrub the feeling of that oppressive darkness from his skin, that wrong version of 50’s quirk trying to choke him, destroy him. Her voice turned so wrong. “Coffee.”

He’s thirsty. He doesn’t want to sleep, even if he’s tired. Aizawa has coffee right there, right on the desk, so he’s not bothering him. “I can get the decaf from downstairs-”

“I want to,” Hitoshi insists, scrambling to his feet faster than Aizawa can stand up. He doesn’t want Aizawa to go through that effort, he doesn’t want to be taken care of like a child, like he’s Eri.

Something falls out of his pocket, but he catches it in time. While his fingers trace the plastic of the shutters, he hopes that Aizawa doesn’t see it. He hopes that’s not why he’s looking at him like that. He only breathes when Aizawa looks away, to check the monitors. “Midoriya is downstairs.”

“I’m not scared of him,” Hitoshi insists, almost like he means it. That only draws Aizawa’s eyes back to him, and they see too much. “He was in that nightmare too. I just.... I’m not going to talk to him.”

Aizawa nods, like that’s all he needs from him. Just Hitoshi vomiting out every feeling and weakness he didn't want to share in the first place, especially to him, before he goes back to sit at his desk. "Blame me if Midoriya mentions that it's supposed to be for the students."

Aizawa was telling him to steal the decaf coffee, that he doesn't own, that he has no right to. A hero telling him to commit a crime.

Hitoshi doesn't care about that, of course. He's stolen plenty of things, the least of which would be coffee that will make him feel better. He doesn't care if Midoriya blames him or not, he'll just have to deal with it.

He's not afraid of leaving this room, and seeing Midoriya.

He just feels cold, so he wraps the blanket around his shoulders a little tighter.

*

Midoriya looks in the refrigerator, just to close it for about the fifth time. He shouldn't, he knows that everyone figured things out yesterday just fine, no one seemed to really miss Kacchan making that overly-spicy breakfast for everyone. Even Ochako was fine with splitting some hearty oatmeal with him, and the cheesy omelette that Aoyama shared with anyone who would accept a piece was really good. It's not his fault.

It's not his fault that Kacchan hasn't come out of his room since he asked for an apology.

It's not like Midoriya wants a big, grand gesture. He doesn't even want Kacchan to feel bad. Just two words, 'I'm sorry,' even if Kacchan didn't mean it would mean a lot to Midoriya. He knows that Kacchan has changed, in some ways better. And he's pretty sure these community breakfasts were a way for him to lift everyone's spirits after Hagakure was arrested. Maybe, he wanted to keep that tradition going after Mic-sensei insisted on doing that while he was at the dorm.

Midoriya knew that Kacchan would be mad. He knew he would yell, he would use his quirk, he would call him 'fucking Deku' the same way he does when he's really upset. Midoriya knew that he caused that, they were having a good spar together and then he said that, and then Kacchan screamed his peace and left. And he hasn't come out of his room since.

And he knows that everyone's worried, especially since Kacchan missed training yesterday, even though they don't know it's his fault.

He tries to tell himself it's not his fault, Kacchan is just being too stubborn again, too prideful. What he's asking for is small, and what Kacchan did to him over all those years was horrible. He knows he wouldn't tell someone else that it was their fault, if Kacchan bullied anyone else like he did to Midoriya. He knows it was wrong.

It's not wrong for him to ask Kacchan to admit that.

It just feels like it is.

It feels like someone is standing right behind him, and when Midoriya glances over his shoulder and sees someone there, he jumps. Probably yells. He feels like he has a heart attack in that split second.

Shinsou just stares at him, with a blanket wrapped around his shoulders. With red eyes, kind of like he was crying. But he doesn't say anything before he turns away, and starts opening a cabinet.

Midoriya can't bring himself to say anything to him. Shinsou clearly looks like he doesn't want to talk, and he's probably going through a lot. Maybe he didn't mean to scare Midoriya, but there's still a good chance that he did. And it's pretty early, so maybe Shinsou just doesn't want to talk right now, not until he drinks some coffee, or gets whatever he's trying to get from the cabinet.

Shinsou puts a coffee cup on the counter, and then picks through the tea and coffee bags until he finds one of the communal bags of decaf. He pours the coffee grounds into the coffee mug. Puts the bag back.

Goes to the sink. Pours water into the coffee mug. Swirls the mug around a few times.

Drinks it. "Are... you okay, Shinsou?"

"I'm not sharing," Shinsou says, and that's really fine. Midoriya really didn't want to try it. But he turns around, his hands still around the coffee mug. His eyes seem too wide somehow, it's almost a little scary. It's almost like he's scared out of his mind. "No."

The way Shinsou whispered that, is almost painful to hear. Something is really wrong with Shinsou if he sounds like that, looks like that, his fingers keep grabbing at the coffee mug like he's trying to squeeze it into another shape somehow. "Do you want to talk about it?"

"I'm not supposed to talk to you," Shinsou says, taking another drink when Midoriya would really rather he didn't. "I'm... weird. I shouldn't talk. I'm a jerk, I'll just take control of you. Kill you, I don't know."

"I... think you would know that, Shinsou. I don't think you want to kill me," Midoriya says, and he would probably feel more certain about that if Shinsou hadn't threatened to kill him before, with One For All, his own quirk. "And, it's okay if you take control of me. I know you've been having trouble controlling that. I don't really mind it."

Shinsou scoffs, almost laughing, still staring at that mug of water and coffee grounds, which he's sure Shinsou knows isn't coffee. "I hate it. Hurting people."

Midoriya flexes his hand, knowing he could probably count every single time that Shinsou has hurt his hands, intentionally or not, on one of them. And he would really rather not move on to the second hand. "But, that's a choice with your quirk, whether you hurt someone or not. Just taking control of someone won't hurt them. You know you can't cause Mental Quirk Abuse Syndrome, because Eri doesn't have it. You... read those articles I sent you, right?"

Shinsou nods his head, but still won't look at him. "Right, they have to test that too. The quirk specialist. And seeing what my quirk does to Yamada."

"Oh," Midoriya says, before he puts it together, his fist meeting his open palm as he remembers what Iida said about wardship policies. "Oh! Your quirk has to be tested to make sure that Yamada's quirk can cancel it out, right? Even if you're worried about that, Aizawa-sensei's quirk can still cancel yours-"

"It can't," Shinsou sighs, and he almost sounds angry about that for some reason. "I can Brainwash him too, because I have Nemoto's quirk, because I'm a Nomu, and if the speakers don't work, I'll Brainwash Yamada, I'll have to go to an institution-"

"Shinsou-"

Midoriya blinks, and he feels a static receding that feels kind of familiar. He can see Shinsou crouched on the ground, picking up the pieces of the shattered coffee mug as he wipes at the corner of his eye. His voice trembling and weak. "I'm sorry."

Midoriya was trying to get him to calm down. His hand was shaking so bad, the more he kept talking. The more upset he was getting. “It’s okay, Shinsou. I know it was an accident.”

Shinsou still flinches when Midoriya crouches down to help him, a jolt that makes him pull back, almost dropping the pieces of ceramic in his hands. His hands are still shaking, just a little better now, and Midoriya hadn’t noticed the bandaids around his fingers until now. He can’t stop looking at the scars on the backs of Shinsou’s hands.

He knows Shinsou is scared of things that he shouldn’t be scared of when he’s safe, when he’s at UA. When he’s been rescued. More times than he should have been. “You’re really a strong person, you know.”

Shinsou looks up, his eyes watering, but he hangs his head before he shakes it. He doesn’t seem like he wants to argue further than that, he doesn’t want to risk talking. But when Midoriya sees his hands start to tighten around those broken shards, he’s thankful that Shinsou doesn’t pull away when he takes Shinsou’s hands, the scars on the backs against his palms, his thumbs crossing Shinsou’s. He knows that Shinsou likes to hold someone’s hand when he’s scared, when he needs to know he’s not alone.

Eri does the same thing too. “I know that... you’ve had to go through a lot of painful things. And I know that things should have been easier for you, so you wouldn’t have had to. But someone who wasn’t as strong as you wouldn’t have made it this far, and you shouldn’t be so hard on yourself for making mistakes. There are a lot of people who care about you, who want to protect you, and won’t let anything bad happen to you. You’re at UA, protected by heroes, after all!”

Midoriya smiles, when Shinsou finally looks up. Even if he looks afraid at first, maybe he sees that things won’t turn out as bad as he thinks. Even if Shinsou’s quirk affects Mic-sensei, he’s sure that another teacher at UA would be able to keep his wardship. He’s sure that Aizawa-sensei and Mic-sensei wouldn’t let Shinsou be moved somewhere else, especially somewhere as ominous as an institution. “Punch me in the throat. So I can’t talk.”

Midoriya pulls his hands away so he can cross his arms over his chest, trying to convince Shinsou that he’s not going to do that before he has to risk that happening anyway. Outside of his control, if Shinsou really means that. “I don’t want to do that! And Recovery Girl would probably heal you in time for the test anyway, so that’s just going to make things worse but not solve the problem!”

Shinsou looks a little horribly disappointed with that. Midoriya just hopes he’s made a good enough argument to convince him not to Brainwash him and do it anyway. “There’s another way to solve it.”

Midoriya isn’t really sure if it’s a problem that can be solved, or needs to be solved. Shinsou talked about speakers, and it is common for vocal type quirks to have a loss of efficacy in their quirk or have their quirk’s effect completely nullified when they aren’t heard naturally. “You’ve tried to use your quirk with Present Mic’s speakers, and it didn’t work, right?”

For some reason, that comes off as embarrassing for Shinsou. Even though he turns his head away and keeps picking up the pieces of the mug, his face looks a little red. “I don’t know why Aizawa told you that, but he’s a dick. But, it doesn’t.”

And since Present Mic is one of very few hard of hearing or deaf heroes in Japan, he probably wears hearing aids most of the time. And Midoriya is decently sure that’s the same, even if he’s not sure.

But when he pulls out his phone to check, he can see that someone in particular is active on LNE, and he thinks that she might be able to explain things better than he can. And maybe even test it, if Shinsou is still worried.

And definitely be distracting enough to keep his mind off of it. “I have an idea, if it’s okay to go to the Support Department studio?”

*

Hitoshi isn’t supposed to leave without asking for permission, without Aizawa escorting him, but Izuku has an idea. He has a solution. Maybe, he knows how to find the ‘Commission rep’ who is forcing Yamada to do this, and they can just kidnap them. Kidnapping isn’t against the house rules after all, as long as Hitoshi doesn’t intentionally hurt anyone.

Of course, Izuku is a hero, but Hitoshi can still be hopeful.

Dawn is still barely breaking, and Hitoshi doesn’t feel much more awake than how he started. For some reason, he feels more settled, even if it’s cold even with the blanket serving as somewhat of a coat. Izuku isn’t wearing a coat at all.

Like Hitoshi suspected, he’s insane. Completely, undeniably, insane. He’s barely human.

He’s still smiling, and he offered to hold Hitoshi’s hand. Insane.

He still doesn’t know what Izuku plans to do in this ‘Support Department studio,’ but when he opens the door, Hitoshi’s thoughts darken with suspicions of what it could be. The place is dimly lit, the hard edges of metal scattered around, it’s almost like a torture chamber but he doesn’t even have the solace of knowing what torture implements are laid out here. “Hatsume! Are you still-”

“Duck!” Some woman with pink hair rushes from the right, one of the vent robots clinging to her arm. She grabs both of their shoulders to force them to crouch down, before she lifts the arm with the robot and Hitoshi can hear something ricochet off of it.

Are they getting shot at?

Two bullets, Hitoshi’s mind numbs as he waits for more, unable to peer around Izuku to see where the gunman could be without risking the cover that the pink haired woman has established. A third, and then she stands up, sighing. Hitoshi and Izuku are still crouched on the ground, and Hitoshi imagines that Izuku is probably rattled from this. “Ah, Yuyu-sempai almost got me with that one! Tranquilizer darts, programmed to fire when anyone enters this building between midnight and 7 in the morning, but try as she might, she can’t stop inspiration!”

“A...are we supposed to be here? Allowed to be here?” Midoriya asks, and Hitoshi would have appreciated it if he made sure of that sooner. He has no idea who this ‘Yuyu’ person is, but he doesn’t want to get on her bad side. Or get tranquilized.

“May-be,” the pink haired woman practically sings, with a too wide grin on her face. The goggles over her eyes hide what they look like, but when she slides them up to reveal those yellow irises and oddly shaped pupils, they just make her smile look more unhinged. “But, you’re here! Here to see my newest babies! I know we’ll get a lot of orders in after the internships for costume changes, but it’s best to get ahead of them, do the thinkin’ for you hero guys!”

She clicks her tongue as she mimics shooting them with two guns, and Hitoshi looks at Midoriya, who really needed to explain why he brought him here, to this crazy lady who had-

Babies.

“You were the one who made that sign language translator,” Hitoshi realizes, remembering that thing. She scared Yamada when it sparked and nearly electrocuted him, before he even put it on, and she wanted Hitoshi to wear it.

“Did I?” Hatsume asks, before she scratches the back of her head, trying to look more like a dolt instead of an attempted murderer. “Oh, I kinda remember that! Just a little last-minute project before Midterms, I think you might have saved my butt on Literature! Did it work out? I didn’t really get time to test it-”

“You’re planning on using her to take out Yamada,” Hitoshi asks, turning to face Midoriya, who must have had a misunderstanding that Hitoshi was that desperate to keep his place here. He wouldn’t stoop to that level, to hurt Yamada and knock him out to avoid the test.

But Izuku looks just as horrified as Hitoshi feels, so maybe he didn’t. “No? I-Hatsume, can you make something that can mimic hearing aids?”

Hatsume looks disappointed when Izuku asks, and Hitoshi hates her. But she hums, drumming her fingers on her chin. “Mimic, so you don’t want actual hearing aids, even though we have a few pairs of those. What... do you want my new baby to do, though?”

“Uh, to see if Shinsou’s quirk works on hearing aids?” Izuku asks, and Hatsume stops drumming, whatever that means for her. “He has a vocal type quirk, and it shouldn’t work through speakers-”

“A speaker... in my throat,” Hitoshi says, not sure if it’s possible, but Hatsume grins at him like it is. And she’s excited about it. “It wouldn’t work anymore, and I could be quirkless.”

“Right!” Hatsume cheers, clapping her hands together, and even if Midoriya looks horrified, he’s wrong. If this works, practically all of Hitoshi’s problems would be solved just like that. “Oh, but I can’t do minor surgery anymore, and that’s a little more than minor, I think.”

Hitoshi barely holds himself back from collapsing, because that shouldn’t hold her back, that could solve everything. He could know that his quirk would never slip from under his control, he wouldn’t have to worry about Brainwashing Yamada. He wouldn’t lose his place here.

“Okay, step one! Let’s make sure that your quirk truly loses efficacy during digital conversion, so just step into my office!”

It’s not an office, it’s more like a separate room full of benches, most of them cleaned up. And Hitoshi isn’t really hiding behind Izuku when he sees what’s there.

There’s just a mountain of things, illuminated by the only bright lights in this place, wires and metal and bottles of liquids that he doesn’t want to identify, tools that he’s sure have different purposes he doesn’t want to endure. And while Hatsume digs through the pile like it has any kind of organization at all, Hitoshi tries not to feel like his spine is tingling. Like someone else is there.

He doesn’t like the dark, for several reasons. But this dimly lit place reminds him of one of them.

“Ha! Microphone!” Hatsume says, but that tiny button must be a bug of some kind, it’s not at all like the microphone at Yamada’s radio station. “And speakers!”

It’s another vent robot, but it looks like it’s seen better days. Some of its legs are missing, the dome that’s supposed to protect it is gone. Instead, there are two blocky cubes attached to the top.

He wonders if this crazy lady hunts the vent robots for sport or something. He wonders if it’s okay for him to feel pity for them, and want to protect the one that talks to him in the vents above his room. “And, to make sure that there is no natural sound from your quirk influencing us, we can use this.”

It’s a mask. It’s black, and it’s weirdly floppy, like it’s entirely made of rubber. There’s six protruding holes that look like it’s supposed to hold something cylindrical between them, and maybe Izuku recognizes it, because he looks horrified. “Hatsume, Shinsou can just stand outside, he doesn’t have to wear that-”

“I can... breathe in this,” Hitoshi asks, and he shouldn’t have to ask, but when he picks up the mask he can see that there’s foam on the inside, molded to make it even more form-fitting. Those tiny holes probably don’t allow enough air inside on their own.

“Whoops! Almost forgot the air supply!” Hatsume says, going back to the pile to grab something that looks like a spider, already filled with a weirdly shimmery liquid. “Okay, it’s not normal air, but unless you have a pre-existing lung condition, you can breathe it in for up to four hours! And while you’re wearing it, we won’t be able to hear a thing! Even if you scream!”

That sounds incredibly useful. Hatsume puts the spider thing in its place, attaching each of its legs to the holes, then finds what looks like a wad of gum to attach the speaker to the inside of the rubbery mask.

The thick rubber loops dig into the back of his ears, and though he’s a bit wary of breathing in once the tight mask is in place, practically suffocating him already, he tests it and doesn’t really notice a difference. Maybe she’s lying. “Are you lying about this being dangerous?”

He can only hear his voice from the speakers, and it’s weird. He can’t hear it from his own mouth, and he didn’t realize how weird that would feel. “Nope! That was a big red warning on the box when we got a shipment of that stuff, but Komori wanted to test out some more lethal spores with her Mushroom quirk, and didn’t want to get caught in the crossfire!”

There’s nothing. No string, Hatsume’s eyes are still unhinged but not white, it doesn’t seem like Confession worked on her. He didn’t see a flash from his eyes, and he didn’t feel like Nemoto possessed him. “Are you angry at me for breaking your fingers?”

“Wha- no! That was an accident, and I kind of broke my fingers on my own, even though I didn’t really mean to, but that wasn’t your fault!” Midoriya is able to lie to him, so Confession really can’t be used at all.

“It’s working,” Hitoshi says, which makes Hatsume grin with her fists raised in triumph, and maybe it should be that simple. Maybe it should be enough to convince him.

It’s not. “It’s working, or you can’t use your quirk at all? Total loss of efficacy or partial?” Hatsume asks, and Midoriya seems interested too.

“Total, I can’t use it,” Hitoshi says, and he knows this mask should feel like a muzzle because of that. It should feel like the mask, the one he’s used to.

But it doesn’t, and it makes him want to ask. “Okay, so your first question of whether the hearing aids will affect your quirk has been tested and it’s a total loss of quirk efficacy. Hearing aids usually come with enough ambient noise suppression to completely nullify your natural voice, and sounds are heard from directional microphones that transmit the sound through speakers within the ear canal. There may be partial efficacy if you’re trying to use your quirk on someone with partial hearing loss who doesn’t have that ambient noise suppression dialed up enough, but-”

“Yamada is deaf, so it won’t work,” Hitoshi says, relief coming when he realizes he doesn’t need to worry about the noise suppression. Yamada is deaf, so his quirk won’t work at all. It should be fine. It should feel fine.

“Yep, Present Mic is equipped with some of the best ambient noise suppression technology we have to make sure that his hearing aids are secure while he’s working, the microphone automatically adjusts to suppress the frequencies his own quirk reaches too,” Hatsume says, nodding with her hand cupping her chin. She seems like she’s already thinking of it. “But with the speaker in your throat, that’s not gonna work. Even if I made a tongue-ring, there’s enough vocalizations that come through your nose, I’d have to clamp your nostrils shut-”

“Hatsume!” Hitoshi can tell it’s a woman yelling, and he can tell that she’s angry by the sound of the front door slamming. He can tell that she seems to stumble over something, until she comes to the doorway of this separate room. She at least doesn’t look like she’s trying to attack Hatsume, with her soft blue pajamas worn under a heavy coat. “Hatsume, it’s bad enough that you keep sneaking in here, but what are you doing with Shinsou?”

Hitoshi has never met this person. He would have recognized her short red hair, the piercings in her ears, she looks like she could do some damage in a fight. Even if she doesn’t seem obscenely muscular, she just looks like she wouldn’t back down from a brawl unless she drew blood. “Yuyu-sempai! I’m trying to make a baby for him! You know my best ideas come from 2 AM to 5 AM, so this baby’s gonna be-”

“No,” Yuyu growls, she seems to almost collapse against the doorframe she’s holding onto. “No, you can’t do that to Shinsou. Nejire would kill you, and I don’t want her to go to jail. She’s too cute for prison!”

This is Yuyu. The woman behind the tranquilizing darts, the woman that Hatsume would fear if she wasn’t completely insane. But he’s protected from her, because of Neji. Because her alliances seem to rest solely with Neji.

Neji is probably more powerful than Mirio in that regard.

“I don’t think we really need a baby, though,” Midoriya says, like he fears it. Maybe Hitoshi should fear it too, but he doesn’t. And he doesn’t want Midoriya to speak for him.

“Can you make a mask with speakers?” Hitoshi asks, before he takes off the one he’s wearing, the clunky and rubbery prototype of what he wants, but he’s sure that Hatsume can make a better one. Maybe it will electrocute him, but that’s a risk he’s willing to take. “A microphone on the inside, and speakers on both sides. Padded, like Yamada’s neck speakers.”

Hatsume hums, her fingers drumming on her chin again. “A self-contained unit, a hearing aid kinda fixed on your face. Padded, I wonder how those force absorption foams would work with elastic coating for suction- are we talking about long term use or short term? Under four hours? Because if we want to eliminate any partial efficacy, I still need to seal up everything and that means breath-”

“Shinsou, I don’t think that’s a good idea,” Midoriya says, because he doesn’t think any of Hitoshi’s ideas are good, he thinks he’s stupid. He just looks that worried because he thinks Hitoshi really is an idiot. “You don’t have to wear a mask, no one is going to be mad at you for using your quirk. And if you wear a mask like that...”

“If it’s padded, it’s different,” Hitoshi says, even if he doesn’t know.

He doesn't know what that weight will feel like again, but he wants control. He wants it on his own terms, he wants to stop worrying about his quirk every time he speaks, and he has to feel that sting in his chest as people talk to him, when he feels that string and has to force it down. He just wants silence.

"It was fine when I wore Yamada's neck speakers. I could still breathe in that," Hitoshi says, because he really doesn't want to have to risk suffocating like Hatsume seems to want him to.

And Hatsume looks disappointed with that, kicking one of her feet onto its heel when she bows her head, a fist raised more in frustration and despair than triumph. "Ugh, that's so simple. Placing the microphone is the most challenging part, don't you really want to go wild with it?!"

"Speaking of wild," Yuyu says, her eyes seem narrowed at something in Hatsume's mountain, like she's done something horribly wrong before she let them get involved to take partial blame for it. "That better not be the Guardian Angel system that Powerloader-sensei was working on."

"It's a new shell!" Hatsume cheers, she practically glows with her hands curled in front of herself, leaning towards Yuyu like she's begging for praise already. "I didn't touch the internal system, but I saw this video about magnetic origami robotic exterior capabilities! See, after all that back and forth about making a unicorn or a cat, we could do both with ceramic plating-"

"Pinching," Yuyu says, even if her anger has cooled, she says that word like an accusation of murder. "I know you're going to say that the felt exterior would be enough protection, but when those panels shift, there will still be a risk that Eri's fingers will get caught, and that's not a risk anyone is willing to take. The expectation creep is always the worst with you when you're not supervised, and that's why Powerloader-sensei didn't want you to be involved. You'll equip GA with lasers."

"Safe lasers," Hatsume argues, with a finger raised like she knows she's making a good argument. "The plasma force field can only sustain itself for an hour, and lasers that are only set as a deterrent would just drain power from the maximum life to reduce the active time to 50 minutes, but if we went with a fusion cell-"

"Hatsume," Yuyu says, like she's said that name in that tone a lot. Maybe it's 'expectation creep,' whatever that means, but Hitoshi agrees with giving Eri lasers to keep her safe. "If you touch GA, I'm disowning you, which means that I'm taking my toolbox with me when I graduate."

"Yuyu," Hatsume practically wails, almost like she's crying. Hitoshi has to look to make sure she's not. "How cruel."

"Very cruel," Yuyu says, before she reaches into her coat, and pulls out what looks like a bomb trigger. Her steady gaze, her professional expression, betrays no fear about using it. "I know you routed the power to the emergency generators to get in, but I made a kill switch. The lights are going out in five minutes, and you're not coming back in until GA is done."

"Yuyu!" Hatsume screeches like she's being murdered, and this time she is crying. But Yuyu is a professional at this, she isn't moved at all. Her eyebrow ring hasn't so much as twitched. "You're mean!"

That tantrum ends in a stomp, before Hatsume becomes a flurry of limbs trying to gather up bits and pieces out of her mountain, apparently to take with her. Hitoshi notices the vent robot with the speakers goes along with her too, and he tries not to be too expectant about it.

"My coffee-"

“Two minutes,” Yuyu interrupts, again in that cold tone, and even Midoriya seems to be able to tell that their luck might run out, they might be caught in the crossfire of this. Hitoshi allows himself to be pulled away with Midoriya’s hand on his shoulder guiding him out of this dimly lit place, to the door outside that probably shouldn’t have been left open.

Hitoshi hears an oddly loud click, then a scream. He finds himself frozen as he waits for Midoriya to respond, hopes that the worst hasn’t happened while they weren’t there. Midoriya looks just as horrified as he feels, his lips a tight frown and his eyes too wide, focused right ahead.

They didn’t see anything, and it’s probably wise to decide they didn’t hear anything either. They were never here.

Hitoshi turns his head when he hears whimpering, and with her arms laden with stuff, Hatsume comes out sniffing. Yuyu just closes the door, and locks it with a key. Maybe he should take it from her pocket for Hatsume, so she can get back in. “It’s just a day, Hatsume. You should spend some time in your dorm room instead of living in here.”

“But inspiration is in there! My babies!” Hatsume turns to pretty much scream at the locked door, she looks like she’s considering just running into it, but instead she just crumbles to her knees to sob.

Yuyu looks at them, and at least the mild surprise is warmer than that coldness that was so intimidating. Especially when it seems to tilt closer to panic. “And don’t tell anyone about GA! It’s supposed to be a surprise!”

“I’m sure that Eri will be really happy with it!” Midoriya says, and Midoriya can have such an enthusiastic opinion. A force field is a good idea, but lasers would be better to protect her.

Yuyu just smiles, before she starts walking back to her dorm, it seems. Hatsume is still crying, but he’s not finished with her. Maybe, he should be.

But he digs a hand into his pocket, and crouches down beside Hatsume so that Midoriya hopefully won’t see it. “If... you can make the part that holds it in place like this, too... Whatever you want in exchange for that....”

Hatsume sniffs again, but the tears seem quick to disappear once she looks at the goggles in his hand. “Is that the color scheme you want? Bright yellow-”

“No,” Hitoshi says, less confident than he feels the more that he thinks of it. “Just the band being the same... if that’s possible.” Hatsume starts to reach out to take the goggles, slow with her arms being overburdened, but his hand tightens over them and pulls them back. She can’t take these, they’re his. “I’m not giving these up. They’re mine.”

“Fine. I know the design, it’s easy to recreate. Easy,” Hatsume says, before she snorts loudly, standing up with a watery glare. “Too easy! If you want my name on this, you’re getting a first class baby! State of the art! I don’t care if I’m locked out of the studio, a genius is never appreciated! I will struggle and persevere, and you!”

It seems to take her a bit to realize she can’t point at him, but she kicks out a foot to carry out the gesture in some way.

“You are getting a state of the art baby! Mark my words, this one won’t electrocute anybody!” With that, Hatsume seems to have said her peace, even if Midoriya tells her goodbye, and thanks her for her help. She seems too deep in thought over being banished from this place to hear him.

“Did Aizawa-sensei give you his goggles?” Midoriya asks, and Midoriya shouldn't have seen them. Even if it's too late, Hitoshi tucks them back into his pocket regardless.

“No, I stole them. He didn't even realize it,” Hitoshi says, and ‘idiot’ is a word that hangs on his tongue, but he doesn't say it. He doesn't feel like he needs to. “If you tell him, I'm going to-”

“‘Hurt me without hurting me intentionally physically or emotionally,’ but you can really just tell me not to tell, Shinsou! I don't want to betray your trust or make you feel bad,” Izuku says, smiling a bit nervously, like he still fears it. He still offers his hand to Hitoshi, to supposedly pull him to his feet, and while Hitoshi doesn't let him help, he still doesn't let go of his hand. “The mask that you want Hatsume to make would be different... because it's made with the people who are important to you.”

Hitoshi hates when Izuku looks at him like this, smiling like this, the breaking dawn catching on his hair and face. He hates his green eyes, being seen by them.

How much he looks like 50.

“It's just... different,” Hitoshi says, it's different if it's padded. If there aren't any sharp edges digging into his face, leaving scars and wounds, it's different. If it can't hurt him. If he can't use his quirk, he can't feel it, but he can say whatever he wants. He doesn't hurt anyone. “I had a dream that I hurt you. It's stupid but... I feel better knowing that you're not.”

“That sounds like a painful dream to have,” Izuku says, still holding his hand as they walk back to the dorm. Maybe he doesn't notice that Hitoshi's fingers twitch, beyond his control, when he remembers that Aizawa will be angry at him for leaving. “You know, Tokoyami says that if a certain part of a dream really sticks with you, even when you wake up, it might mean something. Dreaming about hurting someone might mean that you're angry or frustrated with them, or that they're standing in the way of your goals.... I... hope I'm not making you feel like that, but if I am, you can tell me.”

“It wasn't that,” Hitoshi says, his voice snapping more than he meant it to, cracking like frost in this early morning. Too hurtful. “I'm not frustrated or angry with you. All Might was the part that... stuck. It was just his face, it wasn't even scary.”

It was, but Izuku would probably think he's a coward if he said that. “Oh! I know that meaning! I've had dreams about All Might too!” Izuku says, and he looks too excited about that similarity. Probably just because he likes talking about All Might, who might not be his father like he claims, but everything else points towards it. “Dreaming about All Might is really lucky! Since he's been the Symbol of Peace for so long, dreaming about All Might means that you're going to do something brave and heroic!”

Heroic? That doesn't make any sense, but it definitely explains why he would have never had dreams about All Might before now. When he definitely wasn't going to do anything heroic in his waking life. “It fits. You dreaming about him, at least.”

Izuku laughs quietly, looking ahead with a fond look in his eye. Probably remembering all the dreams he had that came true, the promise of doing something so grand and powerful made true by his quirk, by his chosen path as a hero. Maybe he had that dream before he saved Eri, or maybe he didn't even need to at the time. “I think you're still going to do something brave today, Shinsou. With everyone at UA standing behind you, and supporting you.”

He doesn't feel brave, when it's terrifying enough to walk through the door and back into the 1-A dorm. He definitely doesn't feel brave.

Especially with who he sees in the kitchen, waiting for them, it seems.

*

Bakugo is really fucking, fucking done. Done, done with all of it, all this shit, he's fucking done.

Fucking Deku really had to just. Bring up that shit. Throw it in his face, out of fucking nowhere. Bakugo knows for a fucking fact he didn't do shit, hasn't done shit, has purposefully not thought about that shit because that shit? Is some shit he doesn't fucking need.

But fucking Deku had to bring that shit up.

Kacchan, do you remember... how it was before? And back in middle school, when you told me that I should jump off a roof-

Of course he did, but he doesn't think about that shit. He says a lot of shit, and shitty Deku knows he didn't mean it. It's not worth worrying over, it's not worth bringing up like that, he can be the first to say that he has said some messed up shit, and did some messed up shit because Deku was so fucking obsessed with him back then. It's over now, now that Bakugo can fucking breathe without Deku scribbling or muttering about how long he exhaled or some dumb shit.

I'm bringing it up because... don't you think that was wrong? Don't you think you should apologize at least?

Apologize. Deku wanted a fucking apology like everything else means nothing. He's kept the One For All secret better than Deku himself, he's set aside his own damn time to help him hone that shit, training and sparring with him, making sure the shitty nerd eats well enough, trying to make him a damn hero now that he can be one. Deku made him think he was going fucking crazy by pulling that quirk out of nowhere, for telling him in the vaguest and most confusing fucking way at the start of the year before he actually explained shit, after Bakugo pieced it out after Kamino.

And Deku wanted an apology. Useless fucking words, to talk about it, when talking doesn't mean shit, it never did, it didn't mean shit when he said that shit because he never fucking wanted Deku to just off himself. It was just stupid, and they're over it.

But Deku dragged it up, and now Bakugo is fucking unsettled as all shit. He feels everything twitching, he feels wrong inside his skin, he feels wrong inside his own room and the dorm, but he barricaded himself in there anyway because if he starts setting his fucking quirk off in training, he's going to go apeshit, and no one fucking needs that.

Fucking Dinky Shit was saying he was scared of training or some stupid shit, so now he had to prove him wrong and act like all this shit is normal under his skin, and maybe it will be. He's making everyone fucking breakfast because no one can fucking do it themselves, they're all too goddamn depressed to get up in the morning and think of themselves, or do some shit about that.

He's just.

He's not good at this shit, whatever Deku wants from him. If he hasn't made it perfectly fucking clear that he's a better fucking person than that asshole twerp of a carp who thought he was a goddamn shark in that small pond in middle school, then Bakugo doesn't know what to do. Words won't mean shit, if Bakugo is wasting his fucking time looking after shitty Deku and his incessant need to implode his own damn limbs or fling himself into any dangerous situation without even thinking, like a fucking lunatic, then Bakugo is out of fucking ideas. If that shit's worthless, then a fucking apology is just salting the wound, it's humiliating, Bakugo isn't going to fucking apologize.

And Bakugo has taken. One fucking day off from watching Deku's ass. And he walks in holding hands with Shitsou.

Because throwing his friendly ass at Shitsou the first time went so fucking swell, it only fucked up his hand horribly. And that was with Shitsei watching Shitsou like a hawk, coming down on his ass immediately, but going outside with the violent asshole who has made it perfectly fucking clear he's going to fuck shit up at the first opportunity, outside where no one can hear Deku screech.

That's just par for the fucking course for Deku. The fucker looks like he's survived, but both of them look fucking horrified for some fucking reason.

And Bakugo doesn't feel like running away like a spineless fucking coward, because he's got fish to fry, right in front of him. Real fish, and that means Deku and Shitsou don't fucking exist anymore, and they can hold hands all they fucking want, Shitsou can have any kind of fucking issue he wants to and probably not tell anyone shit like he never fucking does.

Or he's got fucking Deku taking care of it, with the handholding and shit. He's sure it's only going to take a couple days before Shitsou Brainwashes the fucker into self-amputating that shit so Shitsou can add Deku's fucked up hands to his creepy fucking collection. Fucking Shigaraki in the making over here.

Still staring too damn much. "G-good... morning, Kacchan-"

"Wanna spit that shit out of your mouth instead of chewing on consonants?" Fucker always stutters when he's nervous as shit, and it's not like he's got shit to be worried about if Shitsou's not feeling like committing assault. "If you lovebirds wanna take that shit somewhere else where you can't cry for help, you're fucking welcome to get out of my face."

Speaking of faces, Shitsou must have cut himself shaving or some shit. Who fucking knows, maybe he tried to cut his face off like his fucked up scars are just craft paper lines, Bakugo sure doesn't give a shit.

But he'll break his shit in half if Shitsou keeps walking over to him. "Say one fucking word to me, asshole, and I'll-"

"I'm sorry," Shitsou says, like he doesn't mean that shit at all. Just all exhausted instead of some heartfelt shit, but it still crawls under his skin like Shitsou can use his talking quirk to do that. And since it's fucked up and evolving like no one's fucking business, maybe it can do that shit. "I shouldn't have grabbed your wrist, and I shouldn't have told you to fuck off like that. Whatever you want to do to even the score, I'm fine with that."

Fucker. Stupid fucker, just saying that shit with his dead fucking eyes, when he won't fucking look at Bakugo because he knows he was off his shit and Deku fucking inseminated him with a conscience or some shit. And clearly, that shit feels awkward as shit for Shitsou to have.

"Congratulations on your license," Shitsou says, like he read the fucking chat, like he remembered that shit and didn't fucking say it but the fucker never reads the fucking chat. And he thinks he can just say that shit and turn to run away, like a little corpse faced fuck.

He almost rips the stupid blanket off, but Shitsou's going to have to explain his shit, and Bakugo has a spatula and a pan full of ignitable grease just waiting to go. But given how Shitsou's quirk is ramping up to be insane, Bakugo isn't going to do something stupid like answer the fucker verbally. ‘Corpse faced shit. Want to die? Say shit, get hit. Can’t run. Fuck head.’

Bakugo still doesn’t know a fuckton of sign because he’s got a lot of shit to do, more important shit, and the fucker just looks confused until he looks all fucking depressed and shit. That shouldn’t be fucking new, but the fucker doesn’t emote the same way he doesn’t talk unless he wants to make everyone feel shitty about his droopy stupid eyebrows. “I’m not going to use my quirk on you. And it’s probably against the rules to kill me, but if that makes you feel better-”

“You fucking moron!” Bakugo yells, and it takes every fucking bit of self restraint not to knock some sense into Shitsou instead of out of him, because too many fucking bastards smacked the braincells out of him. “Even if I say shit like that, I’m not gonna kill someone over that petty shit! Get your fucking head screwed on right for one fucking minute, because I’m over that shit, so don’t fucking cry about it. You said some fucked up shit, did some fucked up shit, but if your fucking psycho episode is over, we’re fucking good. You got that shit?”

Deku is fucking smiling like sunbeams are sparkling over a fucking meadow or some dumb shit, like he was involved with any of that shit concerning Shitsou coming to his fucking senses. He knows for a fact Deku rattled Shitsou’s skull pretty fucking bad in that sparring session, but he couldn’t have knocked that many braincells back in. Or pulverized all that violence out.

And Shitsou seems like he knows that, because he pulls back like he’s fucking offended that Bakugo’s touching his blanky.

“That’s not how it works, and I know you’re still angry, so just... do something, or make me do something,” Shitsou says, pulling his arms out like the fucking try hard martyr he fucking is, but Shitsou is fucked in the head and Bakugo is not. As much.

“I’m always angry, and you fucking know that,” Bakugo says, because he knows how the fucker pouts when he tries to treat him all civilized or some shit. This fucker actually got him, but the brain damage courtesy of Deku’s dumb ass probably fucked that up. “I don’t need you to cry and say you’re sorry and all that bullshit, just fucking put your money where your mouth is and don’t do that shit again. Alright? Because next time, I’m ending your shit. You get one free pass, and then I’m blowing your fucking skull into the drywall.”

Shitsou looks like he’s considering some stupid shit related to that, and if the fucker is really that far fucking gone, someone competent should probably have his ass locked down and away from sharp objects over Christmas break, and it won’t be Bakugo. He’s going to wreck his dad’s shit and make the best fucking gingerbread house ever.

“Bakugo...” And fucking Deku looks like he’s either wet himself or had a revelation, Bakugo has unfortunately known the shit long enough to notice the similarity. “Is it really that hard for you to say that you’re sorry?”

Deku looks. Like he fucking pities him.

And that shit just doesn’t fucking fly.

“Saying shit is too fucking easy, I’m not just gonna say shit when I can prove it, dumbass,” Bakugo says, but the fucker gets that look. That fucking look that no one else fucking sees, when Deku’s brain shifts into Shithead Mode.

“Ha, you’re right. Actions do speak louder than words, and you have been acting differently. You really have changed, Kacchan, and I know that every day, you’re striving to be better,” Deku says, and Bakugo’s dumbass almost fucking believes him for a second. “Not everyone can be as brave as Shinsou and admit that they did something wrong, or apologize-”

“I’ll fucking apologize the fuck out of you!” Bakugo answers with gritted teeth, he knows the manipulative little shit got him, but he can fucking apologize better than Shitsou. “You need me to spell this shit out? I was a fucking tool back then, I said and did fucked. Up. Shit. And I’m not now, and if I did repeat that shit, you can call me the fuck out, so get the fuck over it. Or don’t, I don’t fucking care. Fucking Deku.”

Deku just fucking grins, like he didn’t plan that shit, like he fucking needed to hear it, but he just said that shit anyway like some sick revenge. Fucking disgusting.

“You’re supposed to say ‘I’m sorry,’” Shitsou says, and he’s got the fucking blank stare again, but Bakugo’s pretty sure the walking corpse made too much connection with the living, because that sounds like some half-assed Shithead Mode shit. “If that’s too hard, you can sound it out, or just use sign language-”

“This doesn’t have shit to do with you, and I don’t have to fucking say it,” Bakugo says, because he doesn’t have shit to prove to Shitsou, and he has fish on the stove. And he’s not burning that shit. “So, we’re fucking good. Your ass better get some sleep ‘cause you probably haven’t slept in three years or some shit.”

“Sunday,” Shitsou finally fucking says, and it’s not really a fucking surprise that the fucker hasn’t slept in nearly a week. “But I was drunk. And I’m supposed to get coffee-”

“Fuck no, you’ve got three fucking addictions and that’s one too many,” Bakugo says, turning away from the stove to count that shit down for Shitsou. “Your little sister complex, your incessant need to fuck with people, your fucking phobia of eating right or drinking something that isn’t coffee, and now you want to add alcoholism? Shit ain’t gonna fly, you’re going to fucking bed, asshole.”

“Shinsou, have you really not slept since you were... and wasn’t Aizawa-sensei with you?” Deku squeaks, because he’s too chickenshit to say that Shitsou got attacked and shit, and he actually thinks that Shitsei is competent around Shitsou. Fucker can do a lot of shit, but he couldn’t fucking control Shitsou if his life depended on it.

“Not 8 hours, because that seems important,” Shitsou says, because he’s a fucking dumbass. “But I’m fine with two or five-”

Terminal dumbassery. Both of them. “Your grumpy ass is getting sleep, and maybe you’ll stop pulling dumb shit like fucking ‘I’m fine with five hours’ Deku over there. Fucking hell, did you sleep before you decided to run away from rescue when that scaley fucker tried to end your shit?”

“No,” Shitsou says, and the shit doesn’t click, but Bakugo swears if he could deck him, something might.

“Right,” Bakugo says, and has to size up Deku and trust that he won’t fuck up this simple fucking breakfast he’s laid out. “Deku, don’t burn my shit. Shitsou, I’m choking you out in the blindspot in the stairwell.”

Shitsou looks at him all wide eyed, with that tiny fucking lip thing and the fucker is actually excited about that. Bakugo is finally fucking finding the root of Shitsou’s dumbassery. He just needs to sleep. “If you damage my vocal cords-”

“Shinsou, it’s going to be fine, and Recovery Girl would heal you just like she would if I punched you in the throat,” Deku says, like that’s fucking normal. Like that’s a conversation he missed, and he’s fucking glad he did. “And you can be brave a little longer. Good luck!”

Whatever the fuck that means, Shitsou probably gets it. Shitsou has to get shoved to the stairs, because he doesn’t fucking want to sleep like he’s allergic to it, but this is baseline fucking treatment to all Shitsou’s issues. Sleep, he just needs to fucking sleep and then he’ll have enough of his shit together to start acting somewhat like a person.

Shitsou is still throwing his silent tantrum as Bakugo shoves him through the door to the stairwell, he’s ready to just lift the fucker and carry him up the stairs, but Shitsou turns his head to look at him and almost goes for Bakugo’s wrist again, like he doesn’t know shit about triggers or he wants to die.

But no, the fucker needs to hold his hand, because he’s fucking five. Actually, he’s fucking four, because Eri doesn’t need to do this shit as constantly. “If someone sees this shit, I’m dropkicking you down all six flights.”

Shitsou seems fine with that, and Bakugo could fucking bet he’s enthused by the dropkicking option. “You have a problem with stuttering.”

Shitsou won’t look him in the eye to explain that shit, but Bakugo just tugs him up the stairs because he’s got six flights to deal with Shitsou’s issues. “Of course I fucking don’t, Deku just does that shit and it’s fucking annoying. And do I have to remind you to fix your fucking grammar again?”

“That’s how it works. Confession. I can’t control it,” Shitsou says, and that explains some shit. Fucker really tried to bluff them into thinking that Shitsou already had those ‘deepest insecurities you don’t want to face’ already planned out, and even though he still said that shit to Ashido, he was pulling the trigger on a gun with no idea about what would fire out. But the fucker still owes her an apology. “If Izuku makes you angry-”

“Fix your fucking names too, don’t call him that shit. ‘Izuku,’ you know you shouldn’t get away with that shit like Eri-”

“I’m going to call him whatever I want,” Shitsou says, like Shitsou’s grown some balls. Shitsou looks fucking pissed, and Bakugo doesn’t need him to decide to throw his ass down the stairs. Probably telling him to do a backflip after he Brainwashes him. “You’re just....”

“Fucking say it,” Bakugo says, because if he’s got issues, he can learn to fucking talk about them instead of just threatening everyone or keeping that shit to himself. “Don’t pull that mute shit now, cat’s way out of the fucking bag on that one.”

“You’re an asshole and you can’t tell me what to do. You don’t rent me or own me, and if you try to act like you do again, I’ll...” Shitsou tries to go mute again, but that shit ain’t working for him anymore.

“Kill me or some shit? Break off our fucking friendship, if you’ve learned to deal with shit all healthy,” Bakugo asks, but he knows Shitsou didn’t read the Trauma Issues Book For Shitty Purple Haired Assholes, even if he made it for the fuckhead personally. “Just fucking say it when you have issues, and it’s a done fucking deal. I’m not going to be an asshole who triggers you with names and shit, unlike some people.”

“You’re still mad,” Shitsou says, because he wants to be flipped on his ass and Bakugo is about ready to make his Make-A-Wish dreams come true.

“I’m not mad, I’m waiting to see if you mean that shit or if you’re gonna go postal on our asses the next time you decide not to sleep for a week,” Bakugo says, because he’s going to keep bringing up the sleep issue until Shitsou stops being grumpy and starts looking like a person. He should probably start looking for ways to drug him consistently, because Shitsei doesn’t have that on his radar, per usual. “And I’m not going to be mad if you throw that shit back at me, as long as you’re not a raging dick about it. I don’t have feelings to hurt, I incinerated that shit years ago.”

Shitsou sighs, like he can’t fucking compute shit, and he fucking closes his eyes like he wants to trip himself and bring Bakugo down with him as collateral damage. Fucker’s got no chances of pulling that off, and he can throw him into a wall for trying. “I don’t want to go back to the Safe Room. I wasn’t supposed to leave without letting Aizawa know.”

“Again, no one fucking owns you, and definitely not Shitsei’s ass,” Bakugo reminds, because Shitsou might need a reminder about how everyone nearly got expelled to convince the dumb fuck that Shitsei was a shitty guardian but not complicit in nightmare human trafficking. “And if he tries to do something fucked up, not that he is because he’s not a fucking sadist to you, I’m killing him and Deku probably is too. Even if he’ll cry about it later.”

“Even though you’re still mad that I grabbed your wrist, and you’re afraid I’ll do it again,” Shitsou says, and Shitsou shouldn’t.

Fucking.

Go there.

“Listen,” Bakugo says, dropping Shitsou’s hand because Shitsou has lost handholding rights, even if he cries about it. “You knew that shit, you knew that shit would set me off, and if I fucking literally exploded in front of all those extras, I really would have fucking killed you. And probably wouldn’t even remember it.”

He’s working on that shit, not with a therapist or anything because he doesn’t have time for it and he doesn’t want to deal with his parents saying that they told him so, that he needs fucking help with this shit. But there was still a big fucking chance that he could have logged the fuck out of his brainstem and Shitsou was standing right there in the line of fire, probably would have looked enough like Shigaraki’s corpse-faced ass to whatever was left behind the wheel, and he could have killed him.

Bakugo didn’t, by the skin of his fucking teeth he stayed logged in long enough for Shitsou to let him go, and he said some messed up shit to Ashido but he made peace and all. He hasn’t felt fucking settled since, but he can’t pin all of that on Shitsou with Deku and Invisibitch’s antics making this dorm into a nightmare, but if someone wants to get technical about some shit, maybe he was fucking scared. In his lizard brain, because Bakugo brain doesn’t tolerate that shit, but lizard brain is stupid. “And I wouldn’t have fucking meant to, but that’s the shit that happens, and you know that. So if you want to talk about me being scared and mad and shit, I’d be pissed off and murdering your ass because my dumb bitch lizard brain was fucking scared. But I’m cool, as long as you’re not crazy. As crazy, because you’re fucking crazy on a good day.”

“You’re angry because you’re scared,” Shitsou says, like that’s the fucking revelation he should be having, and it’s honestly hilarious that he hasn’t heard that shit before.

“Oh ho, don’t you know? All the head shrinkers say ‘fear is the root of anger,’” Bakugo says, and he can’t help but laugh at the thought of one of those whiney ass guidance counselors seeing him now, or seeing him like that.

And Shitsou is probably not just grumpy, now that he thinks of it. He's just had other shit to deal with, it's not like he forgot that Shitsou nearly got his ass shanked on campus, really welcoming him to the UA experience and all.

"And that doesn't help at all, does it?" Bakugo asks, because he fucking knows it doesn't. He wasn't fucking scared when he was a twerpy little asshole getting into trouble, he just felt that shit burning in his veins from the nitroglycerin channels that were going to be used whether he wanted them to or not, because he didn't always have great quirk control. Not that anyone ever fucking got that, and he wasn't going to spell it out for them because that would mean everyone cheering for him to be a great fucking hero would have doubts when they shouldn't. He's gonna be a great hero, trauma shit and anger issues and all.

"Yamada told me that it's the part of you that doesn't want to be mistreated again," Shitsou says, and Micsei would spout off some flowery shit when he thinks the sun rises out of Shitsou's constantly tangled bedhead. "That doesn't help either."

"Then maybe you've gotta learn to deal with that shit. Like a quirk. Use it sometimes, but don't go apeshit. Learn some control, like you need to with your actual quirk," Bakugo says, because it's shitty, but what else is new with Shitsou? If the fucker doesn't get handed some fucked up shit to deal with, he'll start looking for it himself.

"Quirks," Shitsou says, all quiet like and it doesn't make fucking sense, but neither does the door opening up for the sixth floor and Shitsei standing there with his arms crossed, all intimidating and shit. Like Shitsei really wants to push Shitsou's buttons when Bakugo's there to twist his fingers for trying.

"Oi, you gonna do some fucked up shit to Shitsou because he wants to be buddy-buddy with Deku? And go for a walk like he's a person and he's not in prison?" Bakugo asks, and Shitsou grabs his shirt like he wants to yank him down, but he's just holding it. Pinching his shirt.

Like fucking Eri does, and holy shit are Shitsou's issues literally the worst. Probably no thanks to Shitsei standing there like he owns the place. "I would have appreciated the notice, but since I was aware that he left and he didn't leave alone, I'm not going to be unreasonable."

Shitsei might still be unreasonable, like locking Shitsou down for a few weeks in a hell version of grounding, which doesn't sound different from the shit he's already dealing with. But Bakugo looks over his shoulder, and even if Shitsou only looks mildly terrified, but he needs to either put the poker face back on and save his pride, or pull out all the stops and fucking cry to see if that will get him out of the shit he dug himself into. "Deal with your own shit, but the deal's not off if you need it."

Shitsou gives him a tiny fucking nod, and still walks up the last steps like he's expecting Shitsei to choke him out right there, but that's just because he's stupid. Bakugo isn't worried.

He's just worried that Deku fucked up breakfast and under seasoned everything, or worse, he's going to stick to his side like a wart and try to do some singalong shit just because he finally got it through his thick skull that they're good.

Fucking dumbasses, all of them, and the day that Bakugo stops trying to keep their asses alive, he'll probably finally find peace.

But fuck peace, along with Deku's dumbass smile, and the way he's just been staring at the fucking pan like that shit will go from raw to cooked instantaneously. Fucker should've picked this shit up from Auntie, but now that Bakugo has a choice in the matter, he needs Deku fucking surgically removed from the stove. “Here.”

Bakugo hands him the mango sticky rice plate from the fridge, maybe the rice has gone too cold or maybe it hasn't cooled off enough, who the fuck cares because he doesn't, he didn't bother to get the math right on Deku's dumbass running schedule and it wouldn't have mattered anyway.

And Deku just keeps staring at it, holding it in his hands, staring at a basic fucking dessert like it's talking calculus to him. “Oi, it's for you, dumbass! Learn to say ‘thank you’ and shit!”

“Wha- thanks, but...” Deku's really just going to stare like that, like he's absorbed Icyhot's inability to blink or fucking think like his grey matter's been converted to a loading screen. “Why?”

“Do I have to spell this shit out, dumbass?” Bakugo asks, because this is last fucking resort territory, if he really has to bring that shit up, he's ending Deku's shit to leave no witnesses. “Elementary school. If you still don't get that shit, get the fuck out of my face, I'm not saying shit else about it.”

The old hag was still trying to raise him and shit to be a proper respectable ass adult, and since she could still scare the shit out of him back then, he had to at least act like he was paying attention to her. So sometimes, Auntie would blab to his mom about the shit he was pulling on Deku, or maybe sometimes he would get whiney and shifty and shit and she'd smell it on him. And she'd force him to do this shit.

Trotting his ass over to Deku's place just to say he was sorry wasn't good enough, and the hag was always right about that shit. So she'd make him really fucking mean it, by making him cook something to prove it, and it always made it less awkward when he had to puke out an apology to Deku, who always started crying first. Always, Bakugo never so much as sniffled.

And since he was a rotten ass little twerp with tiny hands that couldn't do shit, his mom would keep shit simple. Sticky rice, just rice and sweetened coconut milk and some kind of fucking fruit, and Deku always lost his shit over it. That's probably why the hag stopped making him do it, not that it was effective and shit about stopping him from being an asshole during school hours.

And Deku is losing his shit again, getting all fucking sobby because shit hasn't changed, even if he's got a quirk now. “K-Kacchan.”

“Fuck off,” Bakugo reminds, because that shit was stupid and it's early enough in the morning that it's just them, no witnesses, so this shit didn't fucking happen. Exactly like he planned.

Deku added some fucking onions to the vegetable fry up, just to be an ass.

*

Aizawa isn't allowed to physically or emotionally hurt him intentionally.

Hitoshi isn't allowed to leave unescorted or without permission.

But Aizawa isn't allowed to physically or emotionally hurt him intentionally, and at the very least, if he breaks that rule, he won't have to ask Yamada to break ties with his husband and choose him over Aizawa, because Ms. Joke seems likely to defend him. Take him in, possibly.

Kicking him out of UA might be a ‘natural consequence’ to leaving without permission, and he can only hope that Ms. Joke would truly take pity on him, because the argument that expelling him like that would be intentionally emotionally hurtful probably wouldn't work.

Hitoshi stands close to the end of the cot, while Aizawa sits down in his chair, fingers threaded in his lap, and Hitoshi tries not to look at the coffee maker. Full of water, ready to make coffee with the coffee grounds he didn't even get, because he realized he was thirsty after he got them. And then broke the mug, which Aizawa should also be angry about, even if it was an accident. "It seems like you made amends with Bakugo and Midoriya. But you also left without letting me know, and I want to know why you decided to do that."

Izuku wanted him to. Izuku asked if it was fine, but he didn't want to say no, he didn't want Izuku to be angry with him. He wanted to know Izuku's solution to his problem, and he wanted to go outside. But he doesn't want the blame to fall on Izuku. "I felt like I would feel better outside, and I wasn't unescorted. I'm sorry."

Aizawa nods, humming in agreement like he already predicted that, like he's just been sitting here thinking about how to make Hitoshi suffer ever since he saw on the surveillance cameras that he left, because Hitoshi was stupid enough to give him that forwarning. "I am proud of you for recognizing that taking a walk might have helped clear your mind, and taking Midoriya with you, even though I didn't approve of him as an escort option. The consequences for not letting me know are already on your phone, on the LNE app."

Aizawa is staring at him, waiting for him to discover what he's done, and Hitoshi pulls his phone out and tries not to feel sick to his stomach that he's just destroyed the app permanently somehow. But everything looks normal, except for a new chat request at the bottom. From Aizawa.

"The next time a situation like this comes up, I expect you to ask for permission to leave through this chat. And since that option wasn't available to you before, your punishment will be more lenient this time," Aizawa says, but when Hitoshi opens the chat to accept the request he sees that it's not lenient.

This is just cruel.

Aizawa: Tap to download 22kB

Aizawa: Tap to download 22kB

Aizawa: Pick which cat is cuter.

Hitoshi has to look up, to make sure that Aizawa means this. This is emotionally cruel, this has to be against the rules. Aizawa's face divulges nothing, like it always does.

Hitoshi: No. They're both cute, equally.

Hitoshi: Tap to download 22kB

Hitoshi: Tap to download 22kB

Hitoshi: Pick which picture of Eri is cuter.

Aizawa frowns at his phone, before scratching the side of his face, and Hitoshi is unnerved at how loud the bristly hairs on his face sound. "You picked the right option."

Because both cats are cute, just like any picture of Eri is cute. And if Aizawa claimed any differently, he'd be wrong.

Aizawa sends him a cat video, this time of a yawning white kitten with pink toe beans stretched out beside its face. This one is so powerfully cute that he has to sit down, he doesn't think he can appreciate it properly if he's standing. "And I'm not angry with you for leaving. I forgive you, and trust that you'll let me know next time."

Hitoshi just hums, as another video is sent to him. A tabby kitten on its back, kneading its paws in the air while it sleeps. He has to stifle a yawn himself.

Aizawa is closer to him now, sitting farther away from his desk than he usually does. Hitoshi glances up, until a video with sound betrays how quickly he's tapping everything Aizawa sends, a loudly purring mother cat stretches out and pulls a kitten into her arms while it squeaks, before it settles. Aizawa is probably doing this on purpose.

He should face some punishment for it, Hitoshi realizes, before he rests his head on Aizawa's shoulder. If Aizawa is going to be cruel enough to make him tired, then he'll have to deal with his head making it harder for him to move his arm. Pinning him in place. Making him suffer.

He deserves to suffer, because when Hitoshi lets all of his weight rest against Aizawa's shoulder or his own legs, it gets harder to move his thumb to tap these things, or keep his eyes open. He taps, and hears purring, it's especially raspy. He doesn't know what the cat looks like.

It probably looks like Aizawa, but a cat. Aizawa's raspy voice coming through, black fur. White stripes around its neck for his scarf. Sleeping all the time.

Aizawa doesn't even sleep that much, he's not a cat. He's just.

An asshole.

Maybe.

*

Aizawa stretches his free arm above his head, once Hitoshi starts snoring, a sure sign that the teenager is completely dead to the world. Aizawa hasn't had much time to confirm it definitively, but he's starting to think that Hitoshi is becoming a heavier sleeper than he was when he first arrived to UA. Whether it's the persistent lack of sleep exacerbating that issue, or something else, he doesn't know.

But Aizawa takes Hitoshi's phone before it can fall out of his hands, and carefully uses his capture scarf to wind around Hitoshi's legs and back, creating a makeshift sling with his own shoulders as an anchor for support. It's difficult to carry Hitoshi like this, when his forehead is pressed to the back of his shoulder, but more logical methods risk waking him.

Aizawa lays Hitoshi on his back on the cot, one of the blankets still wound around his shoulders, but another is available to cover him properly. The teenager doesn't stir, but for a snore when he turns onto his side, reaching out towards nothing. Aizawa puts the phone next to him before he puts the blanket down, almost considering tucking the end under the mattress to make sure the goggles that fell out of Hitoshi's pocket wouldn't be out in the open when he woke up.

His own goggles, that apparently, Hitoshi wouldn't give up for anything.

Kiddo, We Gotta Talk

Chapter Summary

The wards are visited by quirk specialists to evaluate the mysteries in their quirks, and Shinsou must attempt to use his quirk on Yamada, to prove the validity of his wardship. Even after testing whether his quirk could work on Yamada through various means, Shinsou still hasn't been able to speak to Yamada since his quirk changed. But now, he has no choice.

Chapter Notes

Trigger Warning: 50 mention,

Previously on Wards of UA: Shinsou and Aizawa went to the 1-A dorm without Eri in the previous chapter, after Shinsou used Confession and Brainwashing to test whether Aizawa truly cared about him, and Aizawa patted Shinsou's head. Shinsou had a nightmare and went with Midoriya to the Support Department to ask for a mask that would nullify his quirk, specifically requesting padding similar to Yamada's neck speakers and a band similar to Aizawa's goggles. Shinsou had worried that Eri wouldn't feel as special to him if he talked to other people, after overcoming his selective mutism that only allowed him to talk to Eri. Shinsou had been wearing Yamada's hero costume jacket, which Eri likes because he 'matches with Yama.' Ashido and Shinsou had been friends before Shinsou turned 4 and was sold by his mother. Shinsou had been fused with Chisaki and Nemoto at the end of the 8 Precepts raid, and though Eri Rewinded all three of them to undo the fusion, Shinsou had Nemoto's tattoo under his arm, indicating that the Rewind wasn't perfectly effective. In the two times that Monoma tried to Copy Shinsou's quirk without accomplishing it, Monoma said that it felt painful, then was not able to Copy it when Shinsou was sick. While Shinsou had taken control of Eri in quirk slips, the first time that he ordered someone under his control to do something after the raid was when he took control of Midoriya the night he tried to escape, which happened the day of the second interview when Shinsou was compelled by a Truth Serum quirk to talk about The Miasma. When Shinsou Brainwashed Midoriya after Midoriya asked him to, Shinsou felt unnerved by how similar the sensation was to Brainwashing Eri, which Midoriya hypothesized was due to Shinsou being able to feel the difference between a willing Brainwashing target and an unwilling one. Monoma has said before that his father thinks he's wasting his time as a hero student, and that he should focus on following his father's footsteps as a quirk specialist. Ms. Saito, the Wardship Commission representative in charge of Shinsou's case, is quirkless with an older brother who has a quirk, and has been trying to see Shinsou as a child instead of a violent ward after talking to Mirio. There have been moments where Shinsou tried to speak to Yamada after he returned to UA, and was not able to, in a way more similar to selective mutism borne from fear than the 'mask being locked' incapability of speaking he had before. Shinsou had previously used Confession on Ms. Saito. Shinsou threw away his stash, including a purple haired Troll doll that Bakugo painted white to match Shinsou's pale skin.

Yamada finds that welcoming his husband and ward back to the dorm in time for a late brunch is an exercise in self-restraint. He knows today is the big day, a quirk specialist will be in the building and some representative from The Commission of Wardship Affairs will be there too, and it better not be the representative for Hitoshi's case, because he already has vengeful plans for her email address.

He had to welcome the missing duo back home, and not squeeze either of them to death in a hug, even if he truly wants to. He would have slept better himself if he knew for a fact how Hitoshi was sleeping, in his own bed, but from the looks of it no one slept nearly enough last night, and Shouta has that look.

Shouta can go several days on little to no sleep, but there's a big red E for Empty at some point, and he sees a husband who's going to crash into that wall any minute now.

But Yamada got Shouta settled at the kitchen table while Eri kept him in his place, describing the slightly too many cupcakes that were devoured last night and resulting tummy ache, thankfully not the sugar-coated tantrum about not being invited to go to the dorm when Twenny was.

Speaking of said teenager who's picked up a predilection for Shouta's company recently, it takes all of Yamada's effort to keep him in the kitchen if not at arm's length, but the kid will barely sign a word to him and won't look him in the eye. He's worried, and although Yamada knows this little wardship test is already the final exam from hell for his little listener, he still has the worst case of test jitters. He's outright skittish.

As soon as breakfast-for-some-and-snack-for-others has been eaten as a family, the little bean is thankfully in high spirits knowing that her 'one meal eaten together every day' rule requirement has already been fulfilled, and maybe sniffs out a little listener's pensive mood when she demands some coloring in her room needs to take place. That unfortunately means she'll be missing out with her favorite quality time with Shouta - napping on top of him - but Yamada thinks he might take an hour or so to snuggle and possibly nap in her place. He's decently sure that no chaos can erupt during that time.

Shouta can only drag himself to the couch, but he flops on the armrest to stare at the ceiling like he's forgotten how to close his eyes. He left his coffee mug at the table, which means he's absolutely going to take a nap.

Yamada honestly didn't have many intentions of talking when he took the liberty of flopping himself onto his husband's chest, wrapping Shouta's arms around him because he knows the poor soul has burned through his wick and can't find the strength to do that himself. But instead of snores, a sleepy drawl comes out. "Your ward is a cat. And a magpie. And incredibly reckless. That's apparently the secret to understanding him."

Yamada tilts his head to confirm those sleepy eyes are closed, and Shouta has made an adorable conversation partner while completely dead to the world on some occasions. He's only recorded half of them though, and it's wholly unfortunate that he can't reach his phone right now. "What took you so long to figure that one out, Shou? Don't tell me you two stole Todoroki's secret cat and stayed up all night cooing over him."

He gets a particularly airy sigh in return, which might be a sign his sweet prince is drifting off into dreamland before he fesses up, but not quite yet. "He didn't think I cared about him. Used his quirk to prove it. The wrong way. Snuck out to ask the Support Department to put speakers in his throat so he can't use his quirk."

"Shou," Yamada says, and it is a struggle not to yell when he knows Shouta is bordering on incoherent as it is, and he doesn't want to draw Eri's attention to him using some words he knows she knows, but doesn't want to reinforce. "What the fuck?"

"He wants a mask. And headpats," Shouta says, and Yamada. Struggles with that. Those two things, horror and something he can't even define right now, not in any language he knows, and even if he knows Shouta needs some sleep, Yamada won't be able to think until he gets a better explanation.

Yamada leans up, flicks Shouta's nose at just the right angle to get those beautiful eyes blinking and nose wrinkling, and he just needs Shouta to answer him properly this time. "What the fuck do you mean, 'he wants a mask?' From the Support Department? Did he seriously get someone that would-"

"Padded, with speakers. To nullify his quirk. And yes," Shouta says, and that sorts out some of the issues Yamada has, even if the dread sinks deeper and seems to get denser because if Hitoshi wants to stop worrying about his quirk when he talks, he can understand that. Too well. But a mask is still something he doesn't like, especially knowing why Hitoshi would insist that it has to be padded. "With the same band as my goggles. And padding from your speakers."

Oh no. It's worse than Yamada thought. It's even harder to fight, when there's still a part of him that wants to fight it with his bare teeth before Hitoshi puts a mask like that on his face.

Because that's also absolutely adorable and Yamada can feel his insides turning to goop at the thought. His speakers.

"He told you that?" Yamada asks, but as soon as the words come out of his mouth, he sees Shouta glance away and he really didn't need to ask. "You spied on him-"

"He left without telling me. With Midoriya. They're two of the greatest risks under my care," Shouta says, and since there was no injury report, Yamada takes that as a sign that this 'no friends' thing might have started to seem less cool to his little listener. And despite Shouta's grief and persistent superstitions about Midoriya, Yamada approves of that little friendship blossoming. "It's his decision. We should probably act surprised. Supportive."

Yamada hums, even if he doesn't feel particularly supportive right now. He'll have to see it for himself, if Hitoshi is really okay with that or if that's a quirk issue that needs better methods of coping. Instead of what could be a bad one, a bad reminder. Speaking of, "Headpats?"

Shouta thought he could close his eyes again, and isn't that cute? Not until that word is explained, in detail, so Yamada can possibly shake the green out of his eyes by shaking his husband. "He used his quirk to make me do it. I used cat introduction the second time. Seemed to go fine."

Yamada's not totally on board with Hitoshi using his quirk to make people do things like that, it's purely innocent now because he's sure Shouta has no qualms about dispersing headpats on that fluffy purple head, but there might be a little book about healthy boundaries that Eri got recently and Hitoshi might need to take a look at. "It went 'fine' as in 'not cataclysmic' or 'fine' as in you don't want to brag to me about how great it went?"

"He nearly fell asleep standing up," Shouta confesses, which does make sense with the one and only time Yamada got close to a headpat, when Hitoshi was pretty out of it on the last day of his big sick and insisted on cuddling up with him and getting his hair stroked under penalty of grumpy whines. Playing with his hair was the only way to coax the kid to sleep, it seemed, and Yamada might need to weaponize that in due time. Definitely deserves future testing.

“Did he smell your hand?” Yamada asks, because he has to ask. Shouta at least cracks an eye open to assuage his worst worries, because that would be a little weird. “So, you held out your hand-forehead height or nose height? Did you wait for a love blink before you went in-”

“Forehead, he looked, leaned forward. Goodnight,” Shouta says, because he doesn’t want to call it what it is. A cat head bop.

Something that Hitoshi also might have absorbed by proximity to his husband, who does have some sleep to catch up with. While Yamada has some snuggles to catch up on.

And some dreams that might become reality, once this test is over and Hitoshi’s nerves are less shot, and the kid definitely deserves some headpats for the trouble, which Yamada is happy to provide.

*

Eri has to sigh, and it’s such a big sigh that she’s gotta go around her drawing table so she can sigh and land on Twenny’s legs, because he’s not paying attention again. When Twenny and Zawa got back from sleeping at the hero dorm, without asking if she wanted to go, Twenny said he was sorry, and he was gonna make it up to her. And she told him after they ate breakfast together, he had to color with her as a punishment.

But Twenny’s not coloring, he’s just staring at his paper, and it’s probably ‘cause Twenny is a really bad listener. Probably ‘cause Yama calls him a ‘little’ listener a lot, so he only listens a little. “What’s wrong, Eri?”

“Twenny, you gotta stop worrying about your doctor appointment if you’re not gonna cry and make Zawa not take you!” Eri says, because she already told Twenny what to do, and he said he’s not gonna do it.

Last night, when she was sad and kinda mad about Zawa and Twenny not inviting her, Yama told her that Twenny was acting kinda funny because he’s worried about his doctor appointment. It’s a quirk doctor appointment, just like the ones that Zawa was supposed to take her to, but she cried until he stopped asking her about them, because she was really scared of her quirk. Now that she wants to use her quirk, she wants to see if the doctor can make it less difficult, and Yama said that he can see if she can see that doctor too. And she wasn’t supposed to, but she heard Mr. Nezu say that Eri seeing the quirk doctor for that ‘makes things easier’ when Yama talked to him on the phone this morning.

She doesn’t know what that means, but it should make Twenny less scared ‘cause she can be there to protect him, just like Yama and Zawa.

“I’m not worried, Eri,” Twenny says, but he’s lying ‘cause he hasn’t colored any more of his pony in almost forever, and Eri is almost done coloring hers. “I know it’s going to be fine. And you’re going to be fine. Aizawa and Yamada are going to be there to make sure nothing bad happens.”

Twenny says that, but he’s still frowny, and he’s still looking at the floor like he’s tired. But he’s not tired, ‘cause he said he didn’t want to take a nap with her.

Eri sighs, and rolls over on her back so she can hold Twenny’s hand, since he’s not using it to color with her. Twenny’s hands are bigger than hers, and he’s got a bunch of scars, even the secret little ones on his palm where he got hurt when he was little, when he was learning to use a knife. They don't have big grooves like his other ones, but when she stretches out his hand, she can still see them. They're kinda like secrets.

"Twenny, I wanna play the Secret Game," Eri says, and Twenny looks down at her kinda surprised, 'cause he probably doesn't know how to play it. Mizzy said that she made it up all on her own, but it's a lot of fun. "I'm gonna tell you a secret in your ear, and you gotta tell me a secret too. And then we gotta promise not to tell anyone our secrets, okay?"

"Okay," Twenny says, and he has a tiny smile on his face, but he's been so frowny all day that it makes her smile too when she gets up, and she has to stand up to reach his ear to whisper to him.

"I wanna fix Mirio's quirk for my birthday," Eri whispers, really tiny so only Twenny can hear it. But when she looks at Twenny's face, he's frowny again, and he's still not listening good. "I wanna do it by myself, so you don't gotta help! That's why I wanna go see the quirk doctor, 'cause they can help me learn about my quirk, and I can train better. So don't be worried, and don't tell Mirio!"

"I know, and I hope that you can. It might not work the first time, or on your birthday," Twenny says, and he puts his hand on her head next to her horn, kind of like he's measuring it, because it did get a little bigger, but she knows it's gonna get really big on her birthday, 'cause she's gonna be so happy. "But, you know you don't have to fix Mirio's quirk to stay here, right? You don't have to worry about that, because Aizawa and Yamada are going to take care of you no matter what."

"I know, Twenny," Eri says, 'cause it's not like it was before they were rescued. Yama and Zawa don't ever make her use her quirk, and Zawa only ever makes sure she doesn't hurt anyone on accident. And they just want to help her get better with her quirk 'cause everyone's gotta do that. "I just really really really wanna fix Mirio's quirk, so he can be a hero again! I was kinda scared at first, but now I'm not, 'cause I know I can do it!"

"I know you will," Twenny says, and he smiles and makes her toes kinda curly, just like when Zawa says he's proud of her. Twenny cups his hands together to whisper in her ear with his secret, but the air tickles her at first and she has to giggle. But she tries to puff up her cheeks the next time, and Twenny doesn't tickle her ear this time. "I... can talk to other people now. But I won't if you tell me not to."

Eri has to look at Twenny, to make sure he's not lying. Twenny just looks really worried, and kind of like he's sick again, but Eri throws her arms around him to hug that bad feeling out of him. "Twenny, I want you to talk to other people! I was really happy when you were talking to your friends, 'cause you gotta talk to do a lot of stuff!"

Twenny is really kinda slow when he hugs her back, but he hugs her right and really tight, like he was really worried about it, which is kinda dumb. "I just want you to know that you're always going to be special to me, even if I talk to other people. I'll only sing to you, if that makes you feel better."

"Twenny," Eri says, and she wants to stomp her feet, but she might stomp on Twenny's leg if she does it. "You sing really really pretty, and I want you to sing with your friends too! I want you to be happy, and I know I'm special because I'm Eri, and you're Twenny. And Toshi sometimes, and that makes you special to me, 'cause I only give two special names to the people that are special-est to me."

Twenny hugs her even tighter, and she knows that makes him happy. And she wants to make him even happier, so he can stop being so frowny and worried all the time.

“And you can use my special names for Zawa and Yama,” Eri says, and Twenny looks at her kind of like he’s surprised Zawa and Yama get special names too.

“What’s their special names?” Twenny asks, and his eyebrow goes up and makes her want to poke it, but even when she does his eyebrow doesn’t go down. But he should really know Yama and Zawa’s secret names already.

“Dad,” Eri says, because they are her dads, but she only has to call them that sometimes, ‘cause she doesn’t want them to forget the names she gave them first.

Sometimes, Zawa gets a little weird when she calls him his special name, but he’s getting better at it. He even smiled when he made her cereal yesterday and she called him that. But Twenny makes a face kind of like Zawa used to when she says that, ‘cause he already said he didn’t want to call Yama ‘Dad,’ even if he’s wrong. Or just scared to. “That’s okay, it’s different for me. It’s fine for you to do that, though. I know they like it.”

Eri tilts her head, ‘cause that doesn’t make a lot of sense. She knows she’s different from Twenny in a lot of ways, like him being big and older and he’s got different parts like her book said, and he can’t be the kind of mom that grows babies because he doesn’t have a uterus, even though some dads do have uteruses. Yama said he doesn’t have a uterus, and Zawa doesn’t either, but that still doesn’t make sense why they can’t be Twenny’s dads too. “Why’s it different? Yama and Zawa do a whole lot of dad stuff for you too, just like they do for me, and they’re okay with me calling them ‘Dad.’”

Twenny’s lips get kinda scrunchy, and he gets an itch on the back of his head. “It’s just different. Because I’m older.”

“Oh,” Eri says, even if it doesn’t make sense. Mirio’s even older than Twenny, and he still called Yama ‘Dad’ that one time. “But I still think you should try it, Twenny! Yama got really happy when Mirio called him ‘Dad!’ And you wanna make Yama happy!”

Eri hears a knock on her door, and Twenny looks at her before his face gets kinda red, and his lips get really scrunchy, but she remembers the rules that Yama told her about her room.

“Come in!” Eri says, Yama opens the door and he’s smiling kinda weird, really big on one side and kinda tiny on the other. Twenny is getting kinda shrinky, and it’s weird that he’s acting scared of Yama.

“Hey, little listeners! It’s time to get ready and get a snack before we get to meet some quirk doctors! And I think that we should start thinking about something real fun to do after that, maybe playing around in the snow then warming up with some homemade apple cider!” Yama says, and that’s such a good idea that Eri has to hold both of her hands up really high, ‘cause getting cold then getting Yama’s cider is the best idea ever!

“Yeah! Come on, Toshi, we gotta get ready so we can play!” Eri says, and she grabs Twenny’s shirt and pulls so he can stand up and stop being so shrinky. They’re already dressed, and Twenny’s hair is combed, but Eri wants Yama to put her hair in pigtails like Sailor Moon, just in case she gets scared of the doctor, so she can remember that she can still be brave even if she feels scared. Twenny’s just gotta pick a jacket to wear outside, and maybe he can match with Yama again.

But Twenny stops close to Yama, and kind of hugs him, even if it looks like he forgot how to hug people with his arms. Yama smiles kinda squinty, but hugs Twenny back to remind him, and Twenny kinda gets shrinky against Yama when he remembers to use his arms. “It’s gonna be alright kiddo, nothing to worry about. And it's not going to change a thing."

Twenny's face is kinda smushed on Yama, but he makes a noise like he's kinda not happy about that, or he's still worried, even everyone's gonna be there to make sure he can't be scared. And Yama just squeezes him tighter after he makes it.

But Twenny's smushy-noise also kinda sounded like he was saying 'thank you,' but in a kinda sad way. But that's just 'cause Twenny's scared, and forgetting that it's gonna be okay, and they're gonna have fun with apple cider and playing in the snow together after that.

And no matter how scary the quirk doctor is, he can't be as scary as the apple cider will taste good, so it's all gonna work out fine.

*

Hitoshi knows that Aizawa is only dragging himself along because Eri wants to see this doctor too. He knows that Aizawa really can't do anything to affect his quirk, to make sure he can't use it on Yamada, it's pointless.

He's not really mad about it, or at least he tells himself so. He's just tired. He's just jittery, like the first time he drank Aizawa's coffee.

He's just scared, and he can't get over it.

Rat Boss said that the quirk doctor was going to use Recovery Girl's office, and that they set up a bunch of equipment already. Hitoshi doesn't know what equipment they need, but he's not sure if he should be scared of it. If being scared of being tied down and tortured horribly in the name of getting answers could be a relieving fear, instead of the thought of being forced to leave UA if this quirk test doesn't work.

Even if he knows it will, he's proven it in every way he can. Everyone says it's going to be fine.

He can't believe it for himself until it's over.

Yamada opens the door, and Recovery Girl isn't there. There is a lot of white equipment, things he can't hope to name or know what it will do to him, but there's also two men in white coats holding clipboards who look like doctors, and they both look at them like opening the door was interrupting them. One of them has a scruffy face like Aizawa, circles under his eyes too, and black hair that's shorter than Aizawa's, but too much else is similar. And Aizawa seems to know him, when he takes it upon himself to name him. "Dr. Tenma."

But Dr. Tenma doesn't have time to talk, before the other doctor cuts him off. "Pleasure to meet you! I've heard we have a very interesting case--"

"Dr. Monoma," says the tired looking guy who looks way too much like Aizawa, in a way that Hitoshi really doesn't like, and he's definitely talking to Dr. Monoma.

He's older, a bit fatter, but they have the same hair and eyes. He's balding a bit, the gap where his hair is parted is bigger than it should be, and it's at least amusing to think that Quirk Thief will go bald too. He's even staring at Hitoshi and Eri with the same disturbing, slack jawed fascination that Quirk Thief does. "Of course, I don't want to rush myself. But I'm pleased to make your acquaintance! My colleague Dr. Tenma doesn't usually ask for my expertise, but rest assured, you're in good hands between the two of us."

Hitoshi doesn't look, but Aizawa must have given Dr. Tenma a look. Aizawa doesn't tend to like surprises, and he usually gets grumpy about it. Dr. Tenma sighs, and looks up from his clipboard to look back at Aizawa. Probably just as grumpily. “Given that I have a focus on adult patients in a variety of practices, I wanted to consult with someone more experienced in adolescent and prepubescent quirk morphology, and Dr. Monoma eagerly agreed. I’ll be evaluating from a neurological focus, among other things, while Dr. Monoma-”

“I’ll be doing what I do best,” Dr. Monoma says with a too fake chuckle, and Hitoshi wonders if Quirk Thief’s mother is just this annoying. She must not be, otherwise Hitoshi would have had to kill Quirk Thief by this point. He can’t even imagine how much more annoying he would be if both of his parents were this annoying. “I do have to admit, I did hear a bit about you before now. Neito hardly calls, hardly asks for my help for anything, but he’s certainly been interested in you for a while. I’d be delighted to tell him the details, but of course, that might be bragging. And breaking patient confidentiality, of course. Unless you’d be interested in being featured in one of my studies? I must admit that my previous articles about mental quirks have been absolutely groundbreaking-”

“Dr. Monoma, if you could,” Dr. Tenma says, with an exceptionally tired edge to his voice. It’s weird, but Hitoshi thinks he meant to say ‘if you would,’ like people tend to do when they’ve planned something and want the other person to act their part. But he might be right in wondering if Dr. Quirk Thief could do whatever he was supposed to do, when he’s just that stupidly distracted.

“Ah, yes, let’s not waste any more time, we certainly have a lot of ground to cover today,” Dr. Quirk Thief says, and he grins, a bit too much like Bug would when she knew she could do her worst to him.

He has to sit on the bed, and Yamada offers to stay with him, but Dr. Quirk Thief says something about contaminated testing, and Hitoshi tells him that he’ll be okay. Not that he’ll be fine, and not that he can bring himself to do more than sign it.

The more they fiddle with the equipment, the more they pull things over him and poke and prod, and make him give them blood on top of all the things they’re poking and sticking on him, he just hopes that he’ll be safe at the end of this.

*

Aizawa would have rather been able to stay in the same room as Hitoshi, to be able to reassure him in any way and help with the clear nerves that were getting worse as more monitoring equipment was set up, especially with how he flinched when his blood was drawn. Being able to see Hitoshi on one of many monitors set up in a slightly disorganized ‘observation room’ in the next office over, only heightens his own worries rather than soothes them. It makes the distance seem further.

Hizashi isn’t with him, only because after Eri and himself had each been pulled into the room for live demonstrations, Eri seemed to get fidgety, likely more restless with her own anticipation for being seen by Dr. Tenma, and Hizashi volunteered to take her on a walk around the abandoned classrooms and hallways. Hizashi asked if that was fine, in a way that might have meant that he wanted Aizawa to take the offer, but even if Hitoshi is Hizashi’s ward, he knows Dr. Tenma better. He’s just as equipped to do this, to be available for questions and to learn first hand what’s discovered.

But he would have truly rather this be conducted by Dr. Tenma, his own doctor, than this Dr. Monoma who seems horrifyingly similar to his son. “Tenma, you are seeing this, right? My god, what I would give to evaluate this young man before the secondary event, two astounding breakthroughs- it’s such a pity that neither sample is clean-”

“Dr. Monoma,” Dr. Tenma drones, looking up from a microscope where Hitoshi’s quirk factor cells had been isolated from the blood sample, back to Dr. Tenma who has been watching how the brain imaging changes each time Dr. Monoma changes the stimulus. Aizawa would rather be in another room, especially with Eri taking all of this in, unfortunately with Dr. Monoma’s excited observations, but he’s had to give Hitoshi’s ‘medical history’ while both doctors were looking at their separate evaluations. “Well. That is surprising.”

Dr. Tenma, as a rule, doesn’t break his usual tired monotone. It was honestly a relief after USJ, to see the man who dedicated his life to various medical practices to make efficient use of his passive No Sleep quirk, who broke the news that Aizawa’s vision would likely worsen more rapidly and his quirk had been weakened with the same tone he would to diagnose a cold. And that’s why Aizawa wants to know what’s so surprising.

He’s only too relieved to see Dr. Tenma turn around in his chair to explain it, instead of Dr. Monoma. “Shinsou’s quirk is a mental emitter, vocal type, according to the partial quirk registration report we received. Supposedly question-activated, but those registration reports filed at the age of development always have room for changes. Especially with his family history taken into account, and corrected now with his father’s quirk, Dr. Monoma is evaluating how the primary event may have affected it.”

The ‘primary event’ is the driest, politest, and almost insultingly vague way of describing how Hitoshi had a metal mask trapping his jaw shut so that he could barely speak for eight years.

“When pre-response, the part of Shinsou’s brain that processes communication doesn’t react as it should. There’s a marked decrease in the difference between the placebo white noise, Dr. Monoma’s test responses, foreign languages that shouldn’t be known to him, and videos of sign language than we would expect to see,” Dr. Tenma says, as though it’s not at all terrifying that on a neurological level, Hitoshi’s communication skills are stunted that drastically. “But, post-response-”

“The quirk factor enters the fray!” Dr. Monoma interrupts, beaming too wide at that. “This is classic nurture and environmental stunting, and I’m sure that Dr. Tenma could go on about-”

“I will, if you don’t mind, given that this is primarily neurological,” Dr. Tenma interrupts, clearing his throat. “The reason that Shinsou reacts differently after giving a response probably lent itself to the initial diagnosis that his quirk relies on questions being asked. I don’t have that analysis of Shinsou’s language skills at the time, but I would assume they were stunted. To think of it another way, Shinsou doesn’t recognize that he’s having a conversation with someone unless he responds, but earlier in his development, on a neurological level, he wouldn’t expect a response unless he was asking a question. This means that due to the primary event, Shinsou’s language skills are buffered by the pre-existing quirk structure in his brain, otherwise we would see far worse results from this. Given that Shinsou’s quirk was primarily used in instances of increased stress, when he was forced to use it, his quirk structure is also markedly present with other stress responses, to the degree that it’s unique from the usual baseline we would see in the average population. This may also explain the ‘quirk slips’ that were reported, as Shinsou’s quirk seems to ‘latch on’ to some degree after control is established once, but again, the secondary event muddies the results.”

Trades. It almost sickens Aizawa, to think that it truly ran that deep, it was hardwired into Hitoshi’s brain in a different way, that he didn’t expect to get something without offering something in return. The way Hitoshi would ‘trade questions,’ the way he would offer up something in exchange for what he wanted, to convince himself that he deserved it. How convinced he always was that he had to do something in order to remain at UA, be it controlling Eri or helping with the investigation. And how his quirk had been trained, on a neurological level, to activate alongside a fight or flight response.

“In the second phase of the primary event, which occurred three years ago, we’re going off the assumption that while Shinsou was able to speak more freely, it was still primarily for quirk usage.”

When Hitoshi was sold to the 8 Precepts of Death, he was able to talk to Eri, but he still wore that mask, presumably for it to be locked at certain intervals. And as Aizawa doesn’t know how frequently Hitoshi was forced to be mute, but does know that he was forced to use his quirk on Eri frequently. He imagines that he was still only supposed to speak in order to use it. But clearly, for Eri’s sake, he didn’t.

“During the month of October, he was diagnosed as mute, corrected to selectively mute at the end of October, and overlooking the influence of the secondary event, he was able to speak more freely with those he had used his quirk on,” Dr. Tenma says, and Aizawa would like to overlook the ‘secondary event’ altogether, but he knows that’s impossible. “This could be due to any manner of factors, as we don’t have definitive evidence either way. Quirk Rejection, traumatic response, the secondary event’s influence, but it may be due to how Shinsou’s quirk may not recognize that the ‘conversation,’ we’ll say, had ended. Even after 12 years.”

Hitoshi had been able to speak to Ashido, because he used his quirk on her when they were both so young that they didn’t even remember each other. Yet his brain still thought that they were still having a conversation, so he was able to speak.

“In terms of how this has affected Shinsou’s quirk development and where it will go from here-”

“Allow me to explain, this is my area of expertise, after all,” Dr. Monoma cuts in, clearing his own throat twice, to earn a particularly dry look from Dr. Tenma. “I do commend you for falling right into the treatment plan I would have recommended from the start! Strengthening Shinsou’s language skills in various means, both verbal and in sign language, introducing foreign languages as well, not only will this tackle the root of the issue in the ‘underused muscle’ so we say, but the most interesting facet of a call and response activation quirk is that the quirk can be trained to recognize different calls and responses! This may already be taking form, as Shinsou reacted the same way regardless of whether he responded with a statement, or a question!”

Aizawa had already wondered if that was the case. While he wasn’t a Quirk Specialist, he had to be educated well enough on quirk development strategies to oversee his students’ development and training, and evolving past questions and even into nonverbal cues seemed to be possible. It had happened with Eri, at least.

“And with the questions- well, that leads into the secondary event, which- I should mention I have consulted for-”

“Confidentiality, Dr. Monoma. And I’m still waiting for what we can gather of the history throughout the secondary event, in Shinsou’s quirk factor isolated solution,” Dr. Tenma interrupts, because it does seem like that’s his area of expertise, given that Dr. Monoma has been toying with Shinsou’s live responses and CAT scans. “The sample from the DNA filed in his missing child report is damaged, but pulling together the sample obtained at the hospital directly after the secondary event, and the one collected now, there are marked differences-”

“I do need to see that,” Dr. Monoma says, pushing his chair into Dr. Tenma’s space, which Dr. Tenma takes as an excuse to trade spaces. Dr. Tenma only pauses for a moment before he decides to change whatever stimulus is affecting Hitoshi right now.

“Dr. Monoma, if you could keep an eye on the stress responses-”

“What threshold did he hit before you- oh, nevermind,” Dr. Monoma grumbles, waving a hand before he turns back to the microscope, switching between samples.

“As I said before, Shinsou’s selective mutism may have been explained by the secondary event,” Dr. Tenma explains, in what might be a sneaky way to keep Dr. Monoma distracted from the conversation. “We have reports from the hospital that he was feverish, unresponsive but for bouts of delirium, and though most tests came back inconclusive, the quirk factor solution indicates that there were-”

“Three!” Dr. Monoma shouts, turning around to look at Dr. Tenma, nauseatingly giddy with that. “Two foreign quirk factors, do we have a sample to evaluate how the immune system could have- I’ve honestly never seen evidence of someone surviving this level of quirk factor injection in those human experimentation projects-”

“Dr. Monoma,” Dr. Tenma interrupts sharply, and it’s deserved. Aizawa has heard about possibly the worst thing that happened early in the age of quirks, how some countries had tried to see how quirks could be privately weaponized to the limit with a barely understood science. He honestly doesn’t have to wonder if whoever was creating Nomus had been taking notes from those projects, given that Nomus seemed to be the success those scientists over a hundred years ago had been dreaming of.

“Of course, Shinsou is quite lucky in this regard,” Dr. Monoma says with a handwave, before he tilts his head, his hand cupping his chin. “Were I to theorize what may have happened, I would say that the third quirk factor that was expelled was a type too dissimilar to what Shinsou’s body recognized as his own. You said it was possibly a touch-activated emitter, Overhaul, but the other foreign quirk was a vocal type emitter. The violent fevers in the hospital could be evidence of his body expelling the touch-activated emitter, but with comorbidity in the chemical pneumonia, the poor state of his body at the time due to chronic malnutrition - it’s truly a wonder he didn’t-”

“His body couldn’t fight off the more similar quirk factor,” Dr. Tenma says, rather than let Dr. Monoma describe yet another time that Hitoshi should have lost his life. Aizawa truly doubts Hitoshi was only born with only nine to lose, and he doesn’t want to know how many he’s lost so far. “The fevers were present throughout the majority of November, I would assume, but only when his body could manage it. The selective mutism may have been another symptom, with both quirk factors attempting to reach homeostasis, competing for space to settle in his body-”

“Painful, my boy said at first,” Dr. Monoma interrupts, pulling away from the microscope again to sigh, looking up at the ceiling. “Then nothing. I’m truly glad he’s not wasting away his talent at this school, I was truly worried he was becoming numb to the nuances of his quirk, how it could be used properly if he would just-”

“Taking into account outside observation,” Dr. Tenma interrupts. Thankfully, as Aizawa wasn’t sure if he should risk poking a bear if he clarified whether Dr. Monoma thinks that his son was wasting his potential to pursue heroics. “Shinsou’s quirk factor would have been unstable, possibly targeted as an infection he couldn’t fight off, and the immune response to that could have been aggravated when he attempted to use his quirk, as seen when he developed a migraine, when he suffered a strain and became feverishly unresponsive, but in those instances he hadn’t fully utilized or demonstrated control over the person he used his quirk on, not until the event that preceded the worst bout of illness-”

“Ah, you’re forgetting something, I’m afraid!” Dr. Monoma interrupts, raising a finger with a smug look that’s all too eager to lecture the admittedly younger physician, even if that physician has five more medical specialties than he does. “The introduction of another foreign quirk factor. Truth Serum, which according to our files, seems to be quite a marriage of the two competing quirks that were inside Shinsou at the time. Bodily fluids introduced into the target, to force them to tell the truth, a command from Brainwash and honesty from Confession, which now had a perfect DNA sample to blueprint how to align themselves-”

“We can’t evaluate how possible that is without examining Truth Serum,” Dr. Tenma argues. “But following that, Shinsou used his quirk and was able to speak in order to do so, to two new targets, and commanded one of them for an extended amount of time. The day following that, Dr. Monoma’s son did observe that he wasn’t able to Copy Shinsou’s quirk, indicating that the quirk factors were either strained to that point, or beginning to realign into this ‘fusion,’ or both.”

“And then he was sick. Extremely feverish, and it seemed to get worse when someone he had Brainwashed before was talking to him,” Aizawa adds, because he’ll never forget those harrowing days. Knowing that for all they could do to bring down Hitoshi’s fever, they couldn’t do what they should have done, and it all seemed to crash down when Hitoshi was deathly-pale, screaming and shaking in that bathtub.

“And after that point, he was able to use his quirk with no repercussions,” Dr. Tenma says, describing the incident that Aizawa was asleep for, when Hitoshi took control of Eri and even used her quirk to Rewind their pet fish back to life. “Shinsou also said, though it wasn’t evidenced, that he could speak freely without being selectively mute after that incident. This would suggest that the final bout of illness was a result of the quirk factors completing the fusion-”

“Though, I would argue the point for that,” Dr. Monoma says, raising his hand. “This isn’t entirely a true ‘fusion.’ I have seen... well, there are better ones to be observed. My Analysis quirk indicates the same, that there is still some fraying and fragmentation between Confession and Brainwashing, and to the point of that post-illness quirk usage, there was no demonstrable evidence of Confession until last week-”

“Which, is why I would like to propose some different models of testing, in the future,” Dr. Tenma says, and Aizawa breathes easier knowing that it’s ‘in the future.’ “In our exam with Eri as the subject, we saw that Shinsou did not use Confession, but instead used Brainwash, entirely under his own volition. This might be due to how Shinsou’s quirk reacts differently to her specifically, it may be that Confession is only linked to a stress-threshold, as that was observed with Dr. Monoma as the subject-”

“Asking such horrible questions about my son, it must be uncontrollable at this-”

“And it may be due to Confession still being treated as a semi-foreign quirk factor,” Dr. Tenma explains, checking the screens again before he continues. “Once Shinsou’s quirk factor has fully settled, and Shinsou develops a keener sense to the differences in his quirk, it should be possible to utilize the fragmentation still present. Over time, we may be able to create a plan where Brainwash is for all appearances Shinsou’s quirk-”

“Which, is admittedly-”

“What was specified in the goals of treatment, Dr. Monoma,” Dr. Tenma reminds, with a tone that Aizawa has heard a few times before.

Aizawa trusts Dr. Tenma, and appreciates all of his specialties that allow him to only see Dr. Tenma when he has a need for a doctor, because the man has an unwavering focus on the ‘goals of treatment.’ He’ll never argue that Aizawa should pursue treatments that prevent the eventual degradation of his eyesight at risk of limiting his quirk, because Aizawa has made it clear that his quirk is more important. Dr. Tenma will only ever get frustrated when Aizawa fails the metrics that Aizawa himself sets, and Dr. Tenma is the only quirk specialist he has ever seen that didn't practically drool on themselves over examining Erasure.

Which is why Aizawa would like Dr. Monoma to leave so that Dr. Tenma is the only one involved in examining Eri. "I believe that we have enough evidence to work with for now, and a more conclusive report will be made for you, along with suggestions for those treatment-focused appointments."

"Will the report cover whether his quirk is at risk for causing Mental Quirk Abuse Syndrome?" Aizawa asks, because he knows if he could hand that definitive proof to Hitoshi, written down and verified by experts in the field of quirk science, he would believe it. As much as Hitoshi might avoid using that word, as much as he seems to be getting closer to accepting his quirk, the nightmare last night may only prove further that he still worries about that beneath the surface.

And the way that Dr. Tenma and Dr. Monoma glance at each other before Dr. Tenma answers isn't promising. "It would, but the risk factor can't be definitively determined right now. But evidence seems to suggest that before the secondary event, and likely quirk usage that isn't under the influence of Confession, that risk was non-existent."

Aizawa straightens where he's sitting, because that means that the risk is not non-existent now.

"It requires rigorous testing to determine exactly where Shinsou's quirk would fall on the MQAS 10 point scale, but at the initial evaluation for mental quirks, we are able to determine a softer rating of mild, moderate, or severe risk," Dr. Monoma says, less enthusiastic to explain this than he has been to explain anything since the appointment began. "Like Dr. Tenma said, the evidence to suggest that Brainwashing would be rated mildly is right in front of our eyes, Eri being a young child in the greatest risk category. But, we were given access to view Confession's risk factor, specifically with the- the donor, I suppose, which had a determined risk factor of 7. Borderline severe. And while I would expect borderline moderate risk with Shinsou's quirk due to that, it actually falls into the mild category. While it's possible that Confession hasn't fully settled in yet, it's also possible, though rather improbable, that Brainwashing prior to these events had that specific reactive component that can actually be used as treatment for MQAS, though that's... that's highly unlikely."

"What Dr. Monoma means by that is, the nature of Brainwashing would be by itself at high risk for MQAS," Dr. Tenma explains, what Aizawa has honestly thought before, and what drove him to ask for that testing before Eri was discharged. "Mental Quirk Abuse Syndrome is the result of the human brain struggling to adjust to the changes that the active mental quirk subjects it to. A full cognitive dissociative state with loss of motor control is exactly the type of case I would expect to see a severe rating. But, I believe that with the quirk being a call and response quirk, primarily targeting the communication centers in the target's brain before overtaking motor control and memory retention, this reduces the effect. Instead of a bullet, it's a soft mallet willing to negotiate. And if it's true that there is a somewhat... empathetic link between Shinsou and Eri, and that Shinsou can feel a difference between an unwilling and willing target, that implies an even softer impact, so to speak. It's still a shared communication link, but probably far more diverse than Shinsou realizes or utilizes now."

"And the bullet," Dr. Monoma says, seemingly laughing under his breath at Dr. Tenma's analogy. "Is Confession. That quirk targets the communication centers in the brain aggressively, and I believe the terminology in the quirk registration report was that it more specifically targeted a 'perception of reality.' To put forth my own comparison, Brainwashing is akin to professional hypnosis at its core, there should be a greater risk of disorientation after its effect fades, an effect that would take its toll long-term, but demonstrably hasn't. Confession is holding the mind at gunpoint and forcing oneself to question the very meaning of reality, 'existential crisis' I believe was an actual symptom post-use. And while we would expect to see arsenic diluted in milk as the byproduct of those two quirks fusing, instead we see... I suppose--"

"It's not at a high enough risk for prohibition, but I wouldn't suggest prolific repeated usage on the same person. Anything less than 1,000 uses of Confession would be safe," Dr. Tenma says, and while Aizawa imagines he's still the person who has been subject to Confession from Hitoshi the most, it's far less than 1,000 times. "And if you're ready, we'd like to create a quirk registration file for Miss Eri."

Aizawa knows that Dr. Tenma has already received instructions about that, as fruitless as those previous attempts were, but he's not sure if he remembers, or if Dr. Monoma can be entirely trusted to comply. As brave as Eri is, she doesn't need to be tested further. "Can we go over what will happen in that exam first? And if you could take off your gloves--"

"Of course! I won't need them, they get in the way for me," Dr. Monoma says, too eagerly stripping out of his latex gloves. Dr. Tenma instead gives a wary look, folding his hands in his lap.

Dr. Tenma looks at Aizawa, there's almost an accusation there that he's being too overprotective, but thankfully that accusation is silent. "Eri has had previous traumatic experiences concerning her quirk, in a way that could be perceived as 'medical.' With that in mind, I've already discussed with Dr. Monoma the actions we should take to distance this visit from those experiences. Dr. Monoma sees more children than I do, and he's more adept at a painless and distracted blood draw, from a finger stick. I'd like to take an X-ray of Eri's skull to determine if there's any issue with her horn growth, given that there were some symptoms of her horn aching initially. Then we'll test the efficacy and range of emotional responses affecting her horn growth. Dr. Monoma already has some methods of quirk activation he'd like to test, sensory techniques that can help with visualization. And of course, I still have the cat patterned bandaids for her to choose from."

Aizawa would like to believe that Dr. Tenma forgot about that minor detail that Aizawa might have insisted on before he gave up on the quirk specialist visit, but apparently he hadn't. Dr. Tenma also remembered that a finger-stick would be better than asking Eri to roll up her sleeves, showing her scars so that blood could be collected from her once again, but all these measures to make this examination less like Chisaki's 'examinations' could still be too much for her now. "I'll ask if she's still willing to do this."

Dr. Tenma nods, though Dr. Monoma frowns as if a small child's opinion shouldn't matter, when in fact Eri's opinion is the only one that does. Aizawa walks outside the room, but finds it's easy enough to find Eri, given that exploring the empty classrooms must have gotten boring.

Given that she and Hizashi had already found a phantom to entertain their interest. Phantom Thief, who had probably earned his name in how he was able to get into this building, apparently undeterred by every door being locked with his mission of carrying out the advent calendar for Eri and Hitoshi. Monoma is kneeling on the floor at Eri's level, smiling as she recounts the entirely too many cupcakes she's eaten recently. "And I already picked my favorite, so you should come to my house and pick your favorite too, Mono!"

"Well, I'm not terribly enthused about taking sweets from a child, but I appreciate the offer," Monoma says, skirting around the issue of Hitoshi's issues with him quite impressively for Eri's sake. Hizashi looks at Aizawa with his arms folded across his chest, a look that seems equally impressed, but that only makes Aizawa want to close the door behind him before Dr. Monoma sees his son, even if he doesn't know the entirety of the issues there.

He's a bit too late, as he hears that voice he's starting to find absolutely irritating behind him. "Is that my Neito I hear, once again pestering my next patient?"

Aizawa has seen the way that his students change around their parents. It's sometimes uncomfortable to see how the teenagers he molds into heroes and better versions of themselves revert in some way to be more childlike in subtle ways, how often they look to their parents begging for praise, or just subtly moving closer to them throughout the conversation. He's even seen Bakugo become halfway docile with his parents and Mrs. Midoriya, quieter with his usual rough edges sanded away to show more of his responsible and helpful tendencies.

Monoma doesn't react that way at all. It's still subtle, but the smile he had been wearing for Eri dies in his eyes first, his mouth opening before he speaks in the barest indication of the fear he shouldn't hold towards his father. But when he stands, his eyes almost close too much, as though he doesn't want to see his father to that degree. "Ah, you actually are here on campus."

While Dr. Monoma wasn't invited to UA to visit his son, Aizawa doesn't think that either Principal Nezu nor Kan would have had an issue if he did so afterwards or before these examinations. But Monoma honestly didn't seem aware that he was here, a distance between parent and child that's almost unfathomable.

Almost, but Aizawa has seen that plenty of times as well.

"Of course, UA would only ask for the best, you know," Dr. Monoma says, standing behind Aizawa, and he isn't tall enough to reach his shoulder. Aizawa tries to keep the image of raising his arm just enough to block his sight out of his mind, knowing that would be petty and not at all useful here. "And of course, I shouldn't have to remind you that playing with an accumulation type quirk would be pointless. Though I'm sure you'll insist that you were just making friendly conversation, as usual."

Monoma has a convincing laugh at least to play that off, but Aizawa sees a tightness that hardly exists in this student that betrays how uncomfortable he is. It's enough to pry Aizawa's jaw open, to inform Dr. Monoma what exactly his son is to Eri, but Hizashi beats him to it.

"Oh, you didn't know? Your son has been hard at work on his own time and own dime, really making the holidays special to our kids," Hizashi says, our kids is a habit that Aizawa can overlook for simplicity's sake, but Monoma seems to jolt when he hears it, looking at Hizashi with an expression bordering on shock. "I hope you don't mind me bragging a bit, it's not totally my place since I'm just Monoma's English teacher, but you should be proud to know that Monoma here is more than just a great student, he's really working hard to reflect the best attributes of being a hero, and it means the world to Eri right here."

Eri seems to sense the stricken way Monoma stares at Hizashi, more honest in his expression because he's clearly trying to hide what he feels rather than mask it with grandiosity. Eri tugging on his hand seems to shake him out of it, it seems, smiling up at him as a means of honest comfort. "Mono is one of my best friends! And he's a really great hero! And since he's a great hero, you're probably a great doctor too!"

Monoma snorts as he turns his head, using his free hand to cover his grin, which Aizawa admits looks a bit menacing. "I'm happy to help bolster your reputation with my own, Father. I trust that you'll do well for Eri, given that I've given her reason to trust in your so very prestigious practice."

There's certainly a conversation that Aizawa is missing out on between father and son, but even Aizawa has to unfortunately admit that the smarmy look suits Monoma better than what he wore to first address his father. "A great hero who isn't in an A class--"

“Which literally makes no difference,” Aizawa has to cut in, because that’s his area of expertise. “As the homeroom teacher for the first year Class A, I can tell you that there is no difference between hero courses. Unlike some high schools, UA doesn’t accept anyone that falls below the cut, and only the best in the country can enroll, and fall into either Class A or B, depending on which instructor would best suit their needs. Not whether that student is better suited to heroics or not. As diversified as heroics is, it’s pointless to try to weigh that at all.”

Dr. Monoma only clears his throat, as though he doesn’t want to argue or insult an adult when his own son is clearly his preferred target. Something that Aizawa won’t forget easily. “I’m pleased to hear that. And if it’s alright to proceed with Eri’s quirk registration exam?”

Aizawa looks at Eri, to make sure that she’s still ready for this. Her hand still holds onto Monoma’s, but he can see the nervous shuffle beginning in her feet, before she asks. “Is Dr. Monoma gonna get my horn too?”

“Ah, so Neito wasn’t telling another tall tale,” Dr. Monoma chuckles, before he tries to slip past Aizawa, something that Aizawa doesn’t yet feel like he’ll allow. “No, my quirk is not ‘Copy’ like my son’s, I’ll simply be examining how your quirk factor feels, how elastic or-”

“He’s not allowed to have a horn,” Dr. Tenma interrupts, from the other side of the room, apparently still monitoring Hitoshi’s test results and overhearing the entire conversation. “Other than the two he already has on his head when he gets a bit too excited about certain things.”

“Hitoshi, Hizashi and I can stay in the room with you,” Aizawa adds, because he’s not leaving Eri alone with this, and he knows she will need all the reassurance she can get to be brave.

But he’s still awed by that very brave nod that he sees, before she turns to Dr. Monoma. “It works with a high-five, still?”

“Of course, of course,” Dr. Monoma says, before shaking his head, laughing under his breath. “Thank you for that, Neito. It’s good to know that you haven’t forgotten everything you’ve picked up.”

Honestly, Aizawa trusted Monoma to examine his wards more than his father, but he hopes that Dr. Tenma can continue to keep him contained a bit. But while Monoma stoops down to wish Eri luck, he doesn’t overlook the fact that there’s still two new gifts that he’s left with them. The wand in Eri’s hand, and what looks like a white envelope tucked under Hizashi’s arm.

Aizawa can still hold out hope that Monoma isn’t outright trying to bribe Hitoshi with cash to find his way into his ward’s good graces, but at the very least, he can tell that Monoma is a far cry from his father. A clearly superior man in the making, in every way.

Even if both could stand to tone everything down a little, which he knows is rich coming from him, a man that willingly married Hizashi.

*

Hitoshi was all too eager to help get those sticky things off of him, and get away from that weird dome. He was getting a bit of a headache after watching that TV screen, listening to all those sounds, seeing all those weird pictures.

Why did he have to look at a picture of Quirk Thief that long anyway? What the hell was Dr. Quirk Thief playing at, when they must have been able to read his mind somehow in that weird machine, knowing how irritating it was to look at him?

But Hitoshi makes sure not to show his irritation when he looks at Eri, because he knows she needs to do this. They haven't told him anything about his quirk, but the way that Aizawa looks a bit more frown-y than usual, they must have discovered something. He can't bring himself to look at Yamada to confirm it, he knows that he'd be able to tell, but he doesn't know if he can stand to know for certain. But if they found out something wrong about his quirk, they might be able to help Eri learn to use hers. "It wasn't that bad at all."

"Pick one," the scruffy younger Aizawa doctor says, while he holds out a bunch of bandaids. Hitoshi doesn't know if this is some kind of secret test that Aizawa will have to tell him the answers to, but he picks the purple one that has a cat on it. The doctor takes it back from him to put around his finger.

Which... wasn't where he was hurt in the first place.

"Miss Eri, if you could sit where Shinsou is right now," Dr. Quirk Thief says, and when Eri sits down beside him on the bed, he frowns like he wants to say something.

"Good. Now, let's pick a bandaid," Dr. Quirk Thief says, while Aizawa hovers at the foot of the bed with his arms crossed, and watches while Eri picks a pink cat. "Then pick a finger, and hold it out. And we'll be quick, it'll be over in one, two, three-"

Eri flinches when something snaps with that tiny thing the doctor was holding on her finger, and Hitoshi holds her closer to his side as he gets a little vial from the rolling tray beside him. At least Eri doesn't have to get stabbed in the elbow to fill up those vials, like Hitoshi did. But she still shouldn't watch them fill up. "Hey, Eri."

Eri looks at him, and he knows she's worried. He knows she probably knows that she's bleeding into that little vial, but as long as she looks at him, she won't see it.

"I saw some cool animals with Aizawa, while we were gone. Foxes, and deer, called a serow. It's really weird and hairy-"

"Scary too," Aizawa chimes in, because he's an asshole who never learned how to let things go.

"It didn't-"

"Did you have fun with Zawa?" Eri asks, kicking out one of her legs. She doesn't like some part of this, and Hitoshi knows it could be the part that's happening right now, with those vials of blood that she thankfully hasn't looked at. And it could be the answer to that question.

"Not..." Hitoshi doesn't really know what Eri wants to hear. If she'll be angry that it honestly wasn't as bad as he expected it to be, that it was kind of a nice break. That it seems like Aizawa has somehow changed in the way he sees him, how annoying he is and yet how much Hitoshi doesn't hate it. "It wasn't the worst thing."

Hitoshi finds himself rubbing the back of his neck, knowing that it's more awkward to describe how he feels about that weird trip with Aizawa standing right there. Maybe Aizawa had a great time, maybe he's insulted that Hitoshi won't say that he enjoyed it.

The doctor moves away and takes the vials out of sight quickly enough, handing Aizawa the bandaid to wrap Eri's finger up. It makes Aizawa too close to him, which Hitoshi doesn't like. Especially when he can't tell what Aizawa means by that, or if he's lying.

"So, we had that concern about the sinus cavity," Dr. Scruffy says, after putting those vials in a machine that Hitoshi recognizes from the room The Chair was in, but he hopes Eri doesn't. "If you could lay down like Shinsou did, we'll be able to use that machine that's overhead to take some pictures of what your horn looks like on the inside."

Hitoshi has to stand up for Eri to do that, has to stand too close to Aizawa, and feel too useless when she looks so small on that white bed, especially under that white domed machine. Dr. Scruffy hits some buttons on a remote that's on the side, while Dr. Quirk Thief hums annoyingly as he starts writing things down on a clipboard. Hopefully, this will be over soon.

"Very good," Dr. Scruffy says, pulling the machine away from Eri so that she can sit up, and drawing her attention when he taps on a screen mounted on the wall, with white images of her skull showing up, her horn definitely marking it as hers.

But the rows of teeth she has above and below the others is really weird to see.

"So, this is your horn, and we can see that it's hollow on the inside, along with this part right here at the bottom, with what looks to be cartilage, which is a fancy word for 'softer bone' that doctors like to use," Dr. Scruffy says, pointing at the screen, and talking to Eri like she's stupid.

"Like in my nose, or my ear! Momo told me that, and Yama talks about his carty-lage when he gets sore ears," Eri says, because she's far smarter than this scruffy doctor seems to have assumed. He should learn not to make those assumptions.

"The opening for the cartilage right here explains the uncomfortable feeling that led to 'Horn Tricks,'" Dr. Scruffy says, and somehow he's allowed to talk about that when Eri gets mad at him for even trying to say the word. "When your horn would grow rapidly, it would cause fluctuations in sinus pressure, but I would recommend using warm compresses rather than forcing expulsions, as that can exacerbate the issue."

Oh.

He's been hurting Eri. For years. Making her feel worse. For years.

Eri looks up at him, and it barely even looks like she blames him. She should. She should know what that means. He's the worst person in the entire world.

"I can also see that we may be losing some teeth soon," Dr. Scruffy says, drawing Eri's attention eagerly back to him while he points them out. "We can see the permanent teeth drawing closer to these milk teeth, ready to push them out-"

"Like with the yogurt and the apple! Momo showed me!" Eri says, and that's good. It's good that she has heroes. Who don't hurt her. Who just make her smarter, and tell her not to believe the things that Chisaki told her. Who stop her from clapping or thinking that she's cursed, who make her smile and be normal. Who will never let her leave the place that she's happiest, or make her go to an institution, ever.

It's great. That she has that. "Right. This one will probably be the first, but these two are also close, along with this one. There might be a great deal of yogurt in your future, along with some tooth fairy money."

Eri is going to lose all of her teeth now. This is great. "Those are incisors, and that's a canine!"

Eri's so smart, Dr. Scruffy is smiling at her now. He's impressed. Eri's doing so well. She's so healthy, and happy.

"Yep, that is a gold mine for the Tooth Fairy right there!" Yamada says, and just his voice is almost painful, knowing that he's here. Knowing what's going to happen next, and Hitoshi doesn't know if he wants this test to pass anymore.

He hurt Eri. He hurt her for years, when he thought he was helping, and even after they were rescued, he kept doing it. He enjoyed it, because he's literally the worst person alive, he would smile and wipe Eri's nose and she'd cry but he wouldn't fucking realize what he was doing to her-

There's a knock on the door, and Aizawa moves to answer it. Aizawa seemed to expect someone else, but Hitoshi already had a feeling that he knew who it was.

The Commission lady. For the test.

"We're not done yet," Aizawa says, politer than Hitoshi would like, but he can't expect Aizawa to really threaten her when Eri is right there. Aizawa can't tarnish himself with threats in front of her eyes.

"Right, because it's so convenient that there's a quirk registration exam to be had on UA's campus today, completely explains why two quirk specialists were scheduled to come here last week," the Commission lady says, and she shouldn't say it like that. She shouldn't sound so bitterly angry when Eri can hear it, when Eri is already scared enough.

"I'm sorry," Eri says, pinching at the end of her dress as she looks down, and it's fine to kill that Commission lady now, right? She made Eri sad, she wants to take him away and put him in an institution, but more than that she made Eri feel bad and she shouldn't.

"No! It's-" The Commission lady tries to look around Aizawa, to look at how she's making Eri feel bad, but Aizawa purposefully doesn't move to let her, so she just sighs. "It's fine, sweetheart, you're not doing anything wrong. But I'd like to get this over with, because some of us have to justify what they do on the job."

Yamada's hand on his shoulder makes him jump at first, but he's glad that Yamada doesn't pull away at that. "You wanna get this over with kiddo? Totally up to you, we can stick around here and Ms. Saito can hang tight for a bit."

Yamada has a way with words and inflection that Hitoshi truly envies right now, with the threat that Eri can't catch hanging on that one word - hang.

But he looks at Eri, and she tilts her head at him. She doesn't seem bothered about him leaving, because she knows that Aizawa is better equipped to protect her. She knows that she's going to be okay, and he almost envies that. 'Over with.'

Yamada claps his shoulder gently, a nod with his hand almost, but Aizawa looks at him like he wants to say something threatening. But he doesn't, he just moves away from the door just enough. "We'll be right here."

"Oh, don't worry, Shou! Just a little chat, nothing to worry about, and I sure am a professional talker," Yamada says, and that's another silent threat that Ms. Saito is probably too stupid to catch.

Because when Yamada talks, he can choose to be loud, and louder than Ms. Saito can handle because of it. "Good luck, Toshi!"

Hitoshi doesn't know if that name or if Eri's voice is enough to let the relief wash over him for a moment, before it goes numb. Before it all sinks into dread, when he looks at that Commission representative again, and he knows what it all means. What he deserves, really.

He doesn't deserve to stay at UA after hurting Eri for so long, but he probably won't get what he deserves. And Yamada doesn't even see it.

*

Yamada could kill her. Just open his mouth, hit just the right decibel, cover Hitoshi's ears, and kill her. He knows it would just be the first shot in a one man war, given that he doesn't want to rope Shouta into it, Shouta would need to be there for the kids but Yamada is fine with going to jail to make sure Hitoshi stays put. To make sure he keeps his promises to a kid who has suffered from too many broken ones.

Yamada sighs, and tries to remember what he knows, what he hasn't seen for himself, but what he knows. Hitoshi's quirk doesn't work with hearing aids - that's why the owner of the bookstore that he was shoplifting from when he was held at the 8 Precepts reported him, that's why it didn't work when Hitoshi tried to use the HAM radio to talk to Eri, it didn't work with his speakers either. He knows how his hearing aids work, and he knows it's going to be fine.

He can feel how not fine it is to his ward, Hitoshi's shoulder might as well be sculpted from marble under his hand, because this is the part where the test jitters really set off. Ms. Saito tries a door that isn't unlocked, because she doesn't have permission to use it, and Yamada opens up the nice little observation room that the quirk doctors set up just to throw it in her face, not that they really need privacy or to drag this out.

The woman huffs when she crosses the threshold, but Yamada has bigger worries when his kid stops in his tracks, staring at a monitor showing Eri kicking her feet, jabbering away. He doesn't try to read her lips, but it kind of looks like she's singing. "We'll be back there in no time, kiddo, and looks like she's over the nerves already!"

Yamada is standing behind Hitoshi, so he can be that hand on his shoulder that he needs, so he can block that huffy Commission rep from seeing him right now, but he feels Hitoshi's shoulders jump before he hears that sharp intake of breath.

Yep, Yamada's back to thinking about murder, even as he pulls his kid into a hug, because all those nerves are crashing down hard enough to make the poor kid cry, to make him doubt that this is going to work even with the evidence, to make him think that Yamada would ever let him go or let him get carted off to some place else. "Hey, hey, it's alright. It's just a little bullshit test, it doesn't even matter-"

"Bullshit?" The neurotic bureaucratic upstart with Mom Bun squeaks, like she has the right to criticize the most pleasant things he thinks about this. "This is part of the wardship procedure, and I would say we've been extraordinarily lenient to allow postponing it thus far, not to mention the quirk specialist visit you've just been treated to."

Three fucking months too late, Yamada would love to add, because if someone in that hospital could have caught that his kid has extra quirks or if Naomasa's many requests for a quirk specialist could have been seen to in a timely fashion, a whole lot of bullshit could have been avoided. "It doesn't change a thing, you know? We've got plans for snow and apple cider on the other side of this, and whatever else happens, it's up to you. Totally up to you, little listener."

If anything, Yamada's attempt at reassurance just stirs the tears up deeper, Hitoshi pushing his face against Yamada's chest before his shaky hands come up to sign 'Horn.' Horn, which doesn't make sense, until the sense smacks Yamada right in the face and almost makes him join in on the tears. Not that he was doing too great trying to fight them off earlier, mostly distracting himself with thoughts of homicide to do that.

“Hey, hey, you didn’t know that. You were just trying to take care of her, you weren’t trying to hurt her-”

“Hurt who? Is this an unreported incident?” The rep cuts in, when she shouldn’t, and Yamada can’t turn his head to look because he knows that would be far too tempting with his greatest weapon pointed at her face, but he hears her damn clipboard flipping pages. “Did he hurt the little girl-”

“Eri’s horn would hurt when the crazy bastard who was holding both of them captive for years would force her quirk to build up, and Hitoshi would tap her horn to make her feel better,” Yamada says, and if it wasn’t for the poor kid almost sobbing on his chest, he’d have quite a bit more to say about it. Max volume. “And the doctor said that there’s better ways to take care of that, but you didn’t have those better ways, kiddo. You didn’t know, you were just trying to help her out, and Eri’s out on the other side, singing her little heart out in that room, because of you. Because you took care of her, and the next time that little horn starts aching, I know she’ll want her ‘Toshi’ getting a warm compress to make it better. Alright?”

Hitoshi does another one of those ‘half nods,’ something he hasn’t seen in a while, since the beginning of this wardship. That chin going down but not up, his breath catching for longer but not settling, the kid is trying his best to be convinced but the blame is just too big for his shoulders. He knows it has to be for Hitoshi, especially with Eri, especially with that dark time.

“You know,” Ms. Saito starts, and if she’d like to stop, Yamada would appreciate it. “I convinced my brother that I was going to have a flying quirk when I was a kid. And he used to help me get on top of tall things, like trees and playgrounds, because I thought I just had to jump to activate it. And the last time we did that, I jumped off of a shed, and broke my arm in two places, but I didn’t want to tell him I got hurt because he was crying so much. So it’s... really not a bad thing, tapping her horn and all. It’s not like you broke it.”

Yamada hates her, because as goofy as that attempt to imitate a human was, it actually seems to work with Hitoshi. The kid’s next sob sounds more like a laugh, and he pulls a hand to wipe at his face. Yamada reaches over and has to reach pretty far, but he grabs a couple of tissues off the nearest desk. “You see? Not a single person in the world will fault you for trying to take care of Eri, so don’t change that by blaming yourself. Because I’m pretty sure those horn tricks came to an end because someone got too old to be snotty, and it’s worth mentioning that certain someone would never let anyone else do it either. Not Shou, not me, not Mirio, it’s gotta be her ‘Toshi,’ which is exactly why I’d bet a million yen that it’s gotta be ‘Toshi’ with the compress, because no one else will do.”

Hitoshi takes the tissues with still watering eyes, and has to do an awkward squeeze instead of blowing his nose, as though Yamada has polite sensibilities or Ms. Saito’s should matter.

“Ready?” Yamada asks, and tries to keep in mind all the ways the worries don’t have a place here. Hitoshi has talked to him before, even when he was mute but out of it from sickness or from stress, and he got that muffled ‘thank you’ earlier, just to prove that this test doesn’t mean anything, whether Hitoshi wants to talk or not, it will always be his decision after this. They both know it’s going to work, and if Hitoshi doesn’t know that Yamada will absolutely go rogue if it doesn’t, then that’s probably better for his claim to innocence after the fact.

Hitoshi nods, a solid nod, a good one, and wipes the corner of his eyes one more time before he takes a step back. Yamada looks at Ms. Saito, because he knows that clipboard has some regulations and requirements, and he wants to get through them quickly.

“It is December 19th, 2:25 in the afternoon, on UA’s campus,” Ms. Saito says, holding up her phone to face Yamada and his ward, probably recording for The Commission of Wardship Affairs records and all, and Yamada has to look and verify that the glare is still potent with watery eyes, because he knows how Hitoshi feels about pictures and now video. “I, Saito Hikaru, will be witnessing the demonstration of Shinsou Hitoshi using or attempting to use his quirk, Brainwashing, on Present Mic, legally known as Yamada Hizashi-”

“Legally, ‘Present Mic’ is my name too, y’know? Trademarked and everything,” Yamada says, just to get a little bristle that he feels he deserves for his restraint so far, and he gets it.

“The parameters of the test, as agreed by the Commissioners who serve the Commission of Wardship Affairs, will include two portions, the first of which being with Present Mic’s hearing aids on his person, and the second with his hearing aids out. The requirements of the test for each portion will be a question in Japanese, and a statement in Japanese,” Ms. Saito reads off her clipboard, a whole lot of legalese for a whole lot of bullshit.

But Yamada takes a look at his kid, and sees by the bottom lip getting smaller the more he chews on it, that the test jitters aren’t solved yet, and decides on which portion to start with when he raises his hands to his ears. “How about we start with the deaf portion first? I won’t even lip read to spy on ya.”

“That is the second portion of the test, as I’ve already said-” And Ms. Saito can keep saying, because Hitoshi finally looks at him with a little nod, the tiniest bit of relief, and Yamada doesn’t hear what she says afterwards.

It’s always a relief to pop his hearing ability out of his poor abused ears, but sometimes it’s a bit of a hassle to keep track of what he’s missing out on. He can see that Ms. Saito is rattling on about something, but when Hitoshi looks at her and says ‘it doesn’t matter,’ he can see quite vengefully that her lips seal shut.

That’s the wrong vocal quirk to fear, but Yamada has to stop himself from smirking when Ms. Saito looks over at him, flapping her hand like he’s supposed to talk. ‘Doesn’t matter at all,’ Yamada says, or at least knows he mouths, probably badly. He’s mostly over the embarrassment that comes when he knows that his words probably slur a bit when he’s not able to hear them, but he still looks at Hitoshi to see if there’s pity, or maybe some shock.

Instead, he sees Hitoshi glancing away, a bit of a pout in the making when he points out ‘No lip reading.’

Yamada nods, and signs ‘Sorry,’ but can’t beat the grin off his face because he knows there’s four portions, but the first one went over smooth enough to knock those nerves flat on their butt and get a bit of sass out for it.

But when he pointedly turns to look at Ms. Saito for his cue, he can’t help but feel a bit of pride, for a kid that was offered some control over this pretty horrible test, and actually took it. Enforcing what he wanted, even to Yamada.

Instead of a cue, Ms. Saito just looks at him like she smelled something unpleasant, then pointed to her own ears before she made a little check on her clipboard. A question with no answer, a question he didn’t see at all either, but whatever it was must have peeved the Commission rep off.

And as Yamada comes back into the full audio experience, he can see that Hitoshi looks a little miffed about something too. Just at the corner of his mouth where it turns down, but when he looks at Yamada, his mouth opens and the words.

Don’t drop out.

“A statement and a question,” Ms. Saito says, like Hitoshi doesn’t know, like she has any right to butt into this.

Like she has any idea how it feels to have the weight of one’s future hinging on talking, just saying two things, when it never should come down to that. “You know how hearing aids work, right? Hitoshi’s quirk can’t work through electronics, this bit really doesn’t matter.”

“It’s for the record, it’s procedure,” Ms. Saito argues, ‘procedure’ and ‘record’ and ‘bullshit,’ quite frankly, and Hitoshi calls it like it is.

“It’s bullshit,” says one surly teenager, and Yamada feels his own adolescent self nearly burn with envy for the fact that this is now on record as required by procedure, Hitoshi’s words will forever be kept in the Commission of Wardship Affair’s archives.

“Ah-greed,” Yamada says, beaming at Ms. Saito who probably hates to check that off, but, procedure and all.

“A question,” she all but hisses, and the last leg of this should be a breeze, Hitoshi has said two statements and one question to him already, broken the ice with the second statement. He’s got this, Yamada knows it, and he tries to smile encouragingly at Hitoshi, even when the teenager’s eyebrows are doing some interesting twitches and that corner of his lip is getting very frowny.

“Why did you tell me I would stay when Aizawa said that I won’t?” Hitoshi asks, and there’s absolutely no worries about Confession affecting him. Absolutely none at all.

Because Yamada can’t say a goddamn word to that in response, any more than he can look away from Hitoshi’s frigid stare. Hitoshi’s words came out calm, or seemed calm on the surface, but Yamada married Shouta and he knows what a deadpan sounds like when it’s honestly a scream.

And Yamada honestly feels a little like screaming at his husband right now.

“That concludes the test, don’t bother walking me to the gate,” Ms. Saito says, tucking her phone and clipboard away and definitely ready to leave as much as Yamada almost wants to grab her by the shoulders and make her face the music, that all of this is bullshit.

“Didn’t you say I was going to an institution after all this is over?” Hitoshi asks, turning his head to glare at Ms. Saito as she leaves, that deadpan-that-just-wants-you-dead breaking into a full demand for answers, and Yamada would like them too.

But Ms. Saito just clears her throat, tapping on something inside her ear canal as she takes the doorknob in hand. An earpiece, to make sure she would be immune to that Confession quirk too. “Congratulations on your wardship placement.”

The door slams, loud enough to kick the words that were fighting to come out from the back of Yamada’s throat, and that glare is all directed at him because this clearly is not over. “Hitoshi, you have every right to be upset about this-”

“Oh, that’s great to know. I can be upset, but I still have to do this, I still have to find The Miasma and whittle down my time here, because you’re a goddamn liar,” Hitoshi says, and Shouta was not kidding about the escalation here, how his kid swings hot when his blood gets heated. He’s known all week that Hitoshi was not happy about this whole thing but to know how much deeper it was for him, Yamada is also not happy. “I’m going to stay, I’ll get to stay, ‘you don’t have to do anything to stay here, kiddo,’ that’s bullshit, and you knew it then, and you lied to my face, but now you’re stuck with me for what, three months? Congratu-fucking-lations on that.”

“Yep, I feel like throwing a party. The worry’s over, you are sticking around,” Yamada says, because he is relieved to have everything in order, no risk of taking his favorite little listener out of his comfort zone, and even if the venom is dripping pretty heavily off those words, those are voluntary words being said in his direction. And Hitoshi is telling him how he really feels, something that Yamada has usually had to pry out of the kid with no less than three crowbars.

But that’s probably not what Hitoshi wanted to hear, as Yamada earns that ever-deadly “Oh yeah?”

Oh no.

*

That Commission rat scurries off because she knows how his quirk works, how it doesn’t, she gets to run away but Yamada is stuck here, with him, and he wants to keep lying because his quirk won’t force him to tell the truth. He’s not mute, not muzzled, Yamada thinks that he’s stuck here for those few months, but that’s not how this is going to play out.

Now they both know, and they can stop lying. “You really think I’m that stupid.”

“I don’t,” Yamada says, and that’s probably the most hilarious thing he’s ever said, Hitoshi laughs under his breath, almost numb to everything as the world almost tilts under his feet, like he’s bleeding out of his own body and every pulse under his skin is bleeding red. Yamada said he didn’t have to do anything to stay here, and Hitoshi was stupid enough to believe it. “Hitoshi, I don’t think you’re stupid, I think you have plenty of reasons to be angry when I’m saying one thing and apparently Shou said another, but that’s something between us that you shouldn’t worry about-”

“I shouldn’t worry about my life?!” Hitoshi yells, raising a hand and he doesn’t know what to do with it, he just feels cold, he doesn’t know whether he wants to stop talking or never stop, he doesn’t know what to do with everything he’s bleeding, if he can ever stop. “That’s right, I’m not in charge, you get to do whatever you want to me. I was rescued but I’m not like Eri, this is how it’s always been and I’m a fucking idiot for thinking you were different.”

“You’re not an idiot for believing me,” Yamada says, quiet. It should feel like he’s won, like he’s beaten Yamada down, but those words just cramp in his stomach as it twists and it feels like every meal that Yamada has ever given him was poisoned, he just hadn’t realized it yet. “I know it’s confusing-”

“And I’m too stupid to know it, so why don’t you spell it out? Everyone but you has said that I have to find The Miasma, you heroes raid them, and save the day, and then two months after that I’m gone, to an institution, whatever the fuck that means, but it definitely means I can’t see Eri anymore, and that’s what you’re really worried about,” Hitoshi says, but after he says it, he has to laugh. He almost doubles over with it, he can’t believe he didn’t see it before. He really is stupid. “And that’s why you told me I would stay, that’s just your game, so I’ll do whatever you want and I won’t hurt Eri because you don’t fucking believe that I wouldn’t, and why would you when I’m a monster-”

“You’re not,” Yamada says, and it’s cold. His voice snaps like frost and it’s not funny, this isn’t fun, he was really that fucking stupid, he can’t move like Yamada is using his own quirk on him, Brainwashing him, but he can’t escape and it’s cold. “Hitoshi, you’re not dumb, you’re not a monster, and I know you’d never hurt a single hair on Eri’s head. And I know you’re upset, I’m honestly upset for you too, and by all means, you have every right to call me every name in the book for not keeping you out of this like I promised, but every time that you call yourself a bad name, I just want to... I don’t know, squeeze it right out of you with a hug and tell you how amazing you are until you believe it.”

“That’s stupid,” Hitoshi says, or at least feels himself say, but he immediately regrets it. He regrets ever opening his mouth, if he had just said nothing, the Commission rat probably would have taken him away right there and he wouldn’t have to look at Yamada anymore. He wouldn’t have to hear these things.

He wouldn’t have to feel this numbness start to shatter like ice, into a deep river he can’t fight, drowning as his breath chokes up and he has to bite his lip to keep from crying. It’s stupid. “It’s true! You’re a pretty amazing kid, and you deserve to be angry about having to go through this, having to go through a bunch of other bullshit, and definitely deserve to call me out for adding to it. But you don’t deserve to be called a monster, or stupid, or anything like that by anyone, especially yourself. Because you’re not that, you’re the opposite of that, you’re still one of the kindest and smartest kiddos I’ve ever met. Even when you’re calling me out on my bullshit.”

This is just playing dirty, Yamada just wanted to shut him up so he said the perfect thing to make him cry. Now he can’t even breathe because he knows if he does, it will come out with a sob, the blurry floor he’s staring at will spill over. It’s just humiliating. “I’m not.”

Yamada just has to make it worse. “Hug?”

Hitoshi can’t answer him, not after that broken, humiliating word came out wrong, he doesn’t want to make Yamada hug him. But he just feels so cold.

He forces his face against Yamada’s chest before he can even wrap his arms around him, after he nods. He could have shook his head, but he messed up, this doesn’t mean anything. He’s only holding Yamada so tight because he might be able to strangle him from his ribs if he humiliates him further. “We’re good, you know? You can tell me how you really feel, any way that comes out. And trust me, you can’t get loud enough to hurt me. And as your number one fan, I’ll probably agree that what’s going on is bullshit.”

Yamada is only smiling like that, so much that Hitoshi can hear it in his voice, because he’s enjoying how he’s forced to sob with every word. Yamada is the worst.

“You deserve to know what the future’s gonna look like for you, what your life is going to be like, and I can tell you that as long as you’re on board with it, it’s gonna look just like this. You, me, Eri, and Shou, at UA. And Shou isn’t the best communicator, but that’s between me and him, and trust me, we’ll be having words about it,” Yamada says, and Hitoshi shifts his arms to hold him tighter, just wants to suffocate himself into unconsciousness at this point, because he shouldn’t have said anything. Especially like that, yelling at Yamada. “Is that why you’ve been helping out with the investigation? Trying to rip the bandaid off of it?”

Yamada should sound angrier than he does when he says that, and it’s because he doesn’t sound angry like Hitoshi knows he is, he’s just angry enough to hide it. He knows Yamada is going to yell, if he’s lucky, but he nods.

He just wanted to get it over with. “And maybe ditching some friends, or getting rid of the stash?” Hitoshi nods, because Yamada just really wants to make him admit everything, absolutely everything he’s done that’s stupid before he starts yelling about it. “Maybe... being a little distant from a little bean’s birthday bash plans too?”

“I’m g-going to ruin i-it,” Hitoshi forces out between sobs, it sounds so stupid and pathetically weak to his own ears, he has no idea how Yamada hasn’t shoved him to the floor and started beating him for it yet. “I ca-can’t... do anyth-thing.”

“Buddy,” Yamada says, so softly that it forces Hitoshi to hold his breath, he knows if he doesn’t he’s just going to sound worse. “You’re not going to ruin it. You being there is going to make the little bean’s big day, any way that you are. Because we love you, and we want you to be there, and next time we can talk about these things so they don’t hurt so long. Any way you say it, I’m always listening for my favorite listener.”

“Ok-kay,” Hitoshi says, and he can’t stop nodding, can’t stop smearing the snot and tears and mess all over Yamada’s shirt because he’s so fucking done with crying, but he can’t stop. It just hurts.

It hurts that he believed that for so long, and it was all just stupid. “And I’m sorry you had to do this, kiddo. But as much as I can put your life in your hands, I’m gonna do that. Whether you talk to me or Shou or anyone, that’s always up to you, you know. I’m fine either way this plays out.”

“Toshi!” Eri yells as soon as the door opens, and Hitoshi tries to pull away but Yamada’s arms trap him. “Toshi, why are you crying? Dad-”

“It’s alright! This test thing was just pretty nerve wracking, it all went over swell but it’s still a lot,” Yamada says, lying in a way, but not entirely. He shouldn’t cry, he shouldn’t worry Eri.

“M’ fine,” Hitoshi argues, but his words are proven wrong by the way he sounds, and he knows Eri can see right through it. He’s not surprised at all when her small arms wrap around his leg, trying to comfort him.

“Twenny, it’s okay! Yama says it’s good to cry, just like blowing your nose, and you always sleep real good after getting all that yucky stuff out!” Eri encourages, and Hitoshi almost blows his nose on Yamada’s shirt on accident when he starts to laugh, because Yamada would say it like that. Eri lets go of him for a moment, but he feels her small hand tugging on his pants for his attention before he looks down, and sees that she’s holding another tissue up to him. “Blow!”

It’s stupid, but he nearly has to hide his face against Yamada again, instead of taking the tissue and blowing his nose as ordered. Whenever he tapped Eri’s horn for a Horn Trick, he had to press that tissue against her nose, and tell her to blow, exactly like that.

And Yamada thought that he would be the one taking care of her. “Better?” Eri asks, and he nods, even if he can still feel unsettled by the way that Aizawa’s eyes fall on him from the doorway, from everyone, including Eri, staring at him with concern. “Now, you need to take a nap, so you can feel better!”

Hitoshi frowns, the disappointment that Eri is hiding well behind her stern look still sinks like tar inside him. “We’re supposed to play in the snow. I’m not tired.”

Yamada gives him a weird look, like he knows he is tired, and Eri puts her hands on her hips like she’s angry that he wants to do what he knows she wants to do. “Twenny, the snow’s not going anywhere, and I’m tired, ‘cause I got to use my quirk, and I wanna take a nap, right now. So we’re taking a nap together!”

Hitoshi sniffs and wipes his eyes, he has to crouch down to Eri’s level to see, and even if it’s small, her horn is a bit smaller. “You used your quirk on your own?”

“Yep!” Eri says, grinning as her excitement boils over, the nub of her barely-grown-in tooth on full display as she does. “I’m a flower too! I just gotta feel warm and think about being outside, and being happy, and singing! And if I practice real good, I can sing to know when to stop so I don’t make Mirio get too small, like the flower!”

“I’m so proud of you,” Hitoshi says, and even if he knows that Eri is still probably a bit upset with him beneath her pride, he has to hold her close in a bid not to start crying again. He’s so proud.

“I think we have several accomplishments to celebrate,” Aizawa says, smiling at Eri, because Hitoshi knows he’s proud of what she did too. Even if that means that Eri doesn’t need him, or Hitoshi, she’s learning control on her own. She’s honing her own power. “But it would be illogical to do that regardless of whether everyone feels like celebrating. And a nap is always a perfectly good method of celebrating.”

“Agreed, and it’ll give me enough time to boil up some apple cider!” Yamada says, and even though he offers his hand to Eri to hold, Eri holds her arms up for Hitoshi to carry her.

The test is over, and he’s staying. He’s still able to carry Eri in his arms, to take care of her.

And he doesn’t know why, but he still feels like crying.

*

Out of all the times that Aizawa has had to reason with himself to be there for his students, this training exercise seems to be the most difficult.

Despite the many opinions he has concerning Dr. Monoma, it’s evident that he is a brilliant quirk specialist. He listened while Eri explained her feelings about her quirk, how it felt for her to use it, how it felt when her horn built up, and asked for a demonstration of the ‘Quirk Song,’ and those efforts paid off well. Experimenting with sensory feedback along with Eri’s quirk, just reflecting on how sunlight from the window made her feel warm to connect to her feeling of happiness, allowed her to manifest part of her quirk to Rewind that practice plant, completely on her own with no need for him to step in, to do more than encourage her growing smile.

Admittedly, Eri’s mood didn’t seem entirely unaffected by this. But rather than a screaming tantrum, Eri being slightly more bossy than usual seemed to indicate an improvement on that end as well. The more power that Eri obtains over her quirk, the less it frightens her, the less of an emotional outburst that follows.

He can never put to words how proud he is to see such grand accomplishments in the matter of months.

And with Hitoshi, he knew this was difficult. He knew that Hitoshi was going to be forced into the measure, once again forced to speak by The Commission, and he knew that Hitoshi was afraid of both success and failure in that regard. If he failed, there was a risk that Hizashi and himself wouldn’t have suffered to pass, that Hitoshi could be removed, but even with success, he would see that as being forced to change his relationship to Hizashi, taking away one method of control that he needed at this time.

But Hitoshi did it, he spoke to Hizashi, and Aizawa is proud to see that bravery, after seeing how much the fear had affected him. More than that, he was proud that he had seemed to open up to Hizashi afterwards, finally communicating his wounds instead of hiding them. Even if Hitoshi was able to stifle that eerily quickly when Eri walked into the room, something that still worries Aizawa, though he can’t blame Hitoshi for not wanting to worry the child that he practically raised. But allowing Eri to take care of him too, in some small way, was progress.

While Aizawa will most likely miss the fun activities that his husband promised the wards, and he’ll definitely miss the opportunity to get more sleep than the small nap he took this morning, he does need to supervise his students’ training exercises, to make sure that Toshinori doesn’t allow them to slack off too much.

As soon as Aizawa closes the front door, Hizashi opens it just to close it behind himself, and Aizawa can tell from the look on his face that this is not a demonstrative scolding for leaving without letting him know. “So, you told Hitoshi that he’s gonna be gone by Valentine’s day, huh?”

That is probably the explanation behind Hitoshi sobbing in Hizashi’s arms, Aizawa realizes.

And the guilt sinks like a stone when he realizes how badly he communicated Hitoshi’s situation to him, when he was trying to reassure him. Aizawa had placed the blame for Hitoshi’s emotional volatility on this impending test, on the continued stress from the attack that nearly took him back into Miasma’s clutches, but to know that Hitoshi thought his time at UA was so short and he was grieving that this entire time. He knows it’s his fault.

“At worst. But Miasma is tied with the League, it’s logical that they’re also a threat to him, so we have no definitive timeline for when this will end. I just wanted to reassure him that he would have that time at least,” Aizawa explains, and he knows that Hizashi doesn’t want to hear that explanation. He knows Hizashi’s opinions on Hitoshi’s future, that they should ignore logic and rationality and allow their own emotional impulses dictate a child’s future, without thinking of the responsibility that entails.

“Cool, yeah, he was super reassured and definitely not worried at all that he’s going to be kicked out on his face and into an institution in a couple months,” Hizashi says, and Aizawa knows the sarcasm does not bode well for him. And he thought he made his opinion known to Hitoshi about the institution that Ms. Saito planned on multiple times. “So, the idea about ‘clean slate’ and ‘it’s better for him’ for this whole thing to be temporary? Isn’t, because the kid has been torn up about this for a while, and apparently all the help he’s been giving the investigation is because he’s sick of having the sword of Damocles dangling over his head. We need to talk.”

“We’re talking,” Aizawa says, as he folds his arms and wonders if he could feel any worse if he was just outright stabbed. Hitoshi said he wanted to help the investigation for his own interests, his own protection, possibly to earn his way back into Aizawa’s good graces or perhaps revenge, but Aizawa should have known better. To think that he wrote that night off as Hitoshi trying to make amends for a petty fight with Midoriya. “You’re right that he deserves to have a deadline, but we don’t have one yet. Especially when we have no idea whether this operation will effectively end the League of Villains or not.”

“That’s not what we’re talking about,” Hizashi says, folding his own arms in turn, and Aizawa knows that’s not what his husband wanted to hear, but that’s what the situation has to be. “Hitoshi wants to stay here, I want him to stay here, Eri absolutely wants Hitoshi here. We can’t separate these kids, and Hitoshi would do well here-”

“We have no way of knowing that,” Aizawa interrupts, because he knows the basis of his husband’s argument, he knows what he believes about this, but he isn’t considering the whole of Hitoshi’s future. Neither child can realize that what they want in the moment isn’t equal to the foresight and responsibility that both their caretakers should have. “Nothing about this wardship should be something for him to look back fondly on, and he needs more care than we can provide. Hitoshi needs normalcy, for the first time in his life, and he won’t find it here. He will always take Eri’s feelings into consideration, more than his own, and he needs to adapt beyond that to recognize his own needs.”

“Eri won’t find normal here either, but she’ll be happy, and I can’t see Hitoshi ever being happy without knowing that Eri is okay,” Hizashi says, as though that’s the sum of what they should hope for in Hitoshi’s future. As though Hitoshi should always see himself as a caretaker and guardian for

Eri, despite how much childhood he's already missed due to his circumstances, and due to his responsibility to her. Eri will outgrow that need, Aizawa knows, but Hitoshi deserves to have independence for himself. "He's getting to be more open when she's not around. Trust me, there were plenty of waterworks and fireworks before the little bean came in and shut that down, and he can learn to--"

"He can learn the things he needs to learn with therapy, support, stability," Aizawa says, three things that they can't provide now with the constraints of the wardship, things that Hitoshi still needs, and promises that they can't keep, despite any desire to fulfill them. "Those are things that he needs and we won't be able to provide. You know what our schedules look like, I will be going back to my patrols and so will you, and we shouldn't commit to taking responsibility for Eri until we know we can provide for her."

Hizashi looks stricken, as though Aizawa had just spit in his face, before he says, "That's why you wanted to wait a year.... To make sure we can take care of Eri, after Hitoshi leaves."

That wasn't... entirely what he meant. To say, at least.

That's what he felt would be appropriate at the time.

Hizashi is continuing to ignore that the needs of the two children under their care are meant to be their highest priority, they shouldn't take responsibility for these children's futures unless they can meet the task to guide them to the height of their potential and happiness. He knows that Eri is happy at UA, he can see a future where she easily thrives, but he still knows he hasn't fully seen what that future will look like. Hizashi still worked nearly full time during the first month of her wardship, he cut down a few of his patrol hours, but they both relied heavily on Mirio to fill in the gap and be there for her. Mirio will be graduating in a matter of months, and if they cannot be there to adequately supervise a child at night, they shouldn't commit to guiding her future. They can't willfully neglect her.

Neither Hitoshi nor Eri have been neglected thus far, but Hizashi barely works as a hero and Aizawa hasn't been able to go on patrol since Hitoshi's wardship began. He can see the argument that Hizashi wants to make, that if things work well now, it is only the barest reflection of what it could be after the pressure of the investigation is over with, but Aizawa still intends to be a hero and he doesn't think that his husband will give that up easily either. And they can't rely on others to fill in that gap for two children who need care and attention, from their parents.

But if Aizawa were to put that logic aside, and devolve into the irresponsible thinking that his husband holds. If it were just a question as to whether he wants to keep Hitoshi and Eri in his life, he does.

He doesn't want to worry about either of their safety, their happiness. He wants to provide for them both, he wants to feel that pride swelling at every achievement. He wants to see that unguarded smile that Hitoshi had when he surprised them both with maneuvering the capture scarf, and despite his own frustrations about Hitoshi's reckless nature, he wants to see him grow, to boldly put forth his own desires, to open up to others even when it apparently embarrasses the teenager to the point of running away.

But this isn't about what Aizawa wants. This is about what's best for Hitoshi. "This was always meant to be temporary, and it was irresponsible to tell him otherwise. There is a better placement waiting for him, to give him what we can't provide. It's for his best interests."

"You don't really get it, do you Shou?" Hizashi says, his green eyes burning behind his glasses, and Aizawa can hear the slightest catch in his breath that restrains his husband's Voice quirk with great effort. “I get it, because I’ve been kicked around homes like a soda can down the street, and it is torture to wait around for that boot to drop, to know you are temporary. I know what Hitoshi’s chances look like, he’s not going to find that good home with his age and his quirk and his needs-”

“We would have control of that, I’m not letting him go to an institution,” Aizawa says, because he will do anything for Hitoshi’s best interests, and he does mean anything. If they find a placement that should have been permanent, Aizawa will still keep watch to make sure it is, that there are no issues, that Hitoshi will be happy and free and supported like he needs to be. “We will have two months, in the worst case scenario, to fully vet his next placement and make sure that it will be permanent. And I’m not in agreement with severing communication after that, especially with Eri, but we cannot give Hitoshi what he deserves. And arguing that he’s happier here doesn’t mean that he will thrive later on, this is a bigger commitment than you can recognize because you’re not thinking of his best interests, you’re thinking of your own.”

The heat in Hizashi’s eyes cools, too much when it almost hurts to look at him. Hizashi said what Aizawa has known for a while, that his husband wants that permanent home for Hitoshi like he wanted that permanent home when he was in foster care, but he has to realize that it’s different. Hitoshi is different, he’s not the child that Hizashi once was, and further to the point, they are not Hizashi’s mothers. They aren’t qualified, or experienced, they didn’t plan to adopt for several years if not a decade, when they can’t promise that they won’t be killed responding to a villain incident before next year.

If Aizawa were looking at themselves objectively, as a future placement for Hitoshi, he would reject them without a second thought. That’s the same logic they should apply, for Hitoshi’s sake. Not for their own, not for their own desires. For Hitoshi.

“A year,” Hizashi says, nodding to himself as he glances at the ground. “A year to decide whether we adopt Eri, to see whether she thrives or not. And you’re not going to consider Hitoshi at all, you’ve already written him off-”

“I’m not favoring Eri, it’s logical that with how far she’s come, she could continue to thrive here. It’s not the same for Hitoshi, and that’s the only consideration we should take towards his future,” Aizawa argues. He hasn’t written Hitoshi off, he just knows that he will never feel safe in the home of a man that he thought owned him.

“But, that’s the thing, Shou,” Hizashi says, raising a finger before he points it at him, before he looks up with a smile that’s anything but. “Hitoshi has thrived, he’s just had the worst starting point imaginable. Can you even- we call him Hitoshi. Because that’s what he wants to be called, we have a kid who has gone from accepting that his name is Dog or 27, and now he knows he can call himself his own name, and get people to respect that. The kid was terrified of us, terrified of this whole place, thought he was a criminal, and now he wants to stay here and he’s not afraid to tell us off for it! When’s the last time he had a panic attack, or a nightmare-”

“Last night,” Aizawa says, but he catches the demand for explanation in his husband’s eyes, even if he knows exactly what he’ll say if he admits it. “A nightmare.”

“Which definitely doesn’t exclude anyone from being here, but you have to admit, is an improvement. ‘Thriving,’ you might call it,” Hizashi says, and he doesn’t have to say it so smugly. “Hitoshi has come this far, in just a few months, with all the investigation bullshit hanging over him. But you don’t want to see how far he’ll come with that weight off his shoulders, and even if you say it’s in his best interests... you’ve never asked me what I’m willing to change to be there for him. Because I am ready to be there for these kids, I love being a teacher, a hero, and a DJ, but I love being a dad more. I can cut down to on-call for my hero work instead of patrols-”

“Can you promise him you won’t die? You won’t be killed in the line of duty?” Aizawa asks, because he remembers Hitoshi’s worst fears. Don’t be 50, please don’t be 50, this child has suffered enough loss, and they can’t add to it. “That’s what ‘normal’ looks like for us, and bringing a child into that risk is irresponsible.”

“I can’t promise that, Shou,” Hizashi admits, but he’s clearly not taking it seriously if he still wants to argue the point. “But no one can promise Hitoshi that. On the day that I married you, I promised that I’d live for you, and you still took me on that promise, and I took yours, that we’d live for each other before we did our part for the greater good. I don’t see why we can’t include our kids in that promise, because the fact of the matter is, Hitoshi could go to this perfect home and family you have in mind, and still have to deal with someone getting hit by a car and not coming home that day. We can’t say we’ll be perfect-”

“We’re a risky placement, looking at it objectively,” Aizawa argues, because while Hitoshi’s biological father was killed in a car accident and any civilian family could be touched by death, they are far more at risk when they put their lives in the line of fire, they step in the gap and risk their lives every day. They can’t promise that they’ll come home at the end of a patrol, and Hizashi knows it.

“But we can’t promise that we will die because of that risk, and if both kids are doing well here, it’s in their best interest to consider the facts all objective-like,” Hizashi says, waving a hand in the air as though he really has any objective argument to offer. “Hitoshi leaving here will hurt him, because he needs stability and safety, like you said. And we have two months after the raid in the worst case scenario, like you said, two months where we can see if we would be a good fit. So, I’m not asking you to sign the paperwork now, but I’m asking you to look at things objectively and with an open mind.”

Two months, but Aizawa wouldn’t be surprised if it’s far longer than that. The League of Villains is a slippery organization, they’ve evaded capture with very few casualties on their side plenty of times, and while he’s sure that Miasma will be taken down, he’s also sure that Hitoshi will still be at risk if The League sacrificed their greatest chess piece in Shiori and Hagakure’s information leaking to obtain him. “I’m asking you to look at this objectively as well. Even if Hitoshi says he wants to stay here, we have to be the responsible adults in his life who will act in his best interests, not necessarily his desires.”

“Agreed,” Hizashi says, before he puts his hands on Aizawa’s shoulders, fingers tangling with the capture scarf. “But, I think I’m gonna out-logic you, Shouta. I think that’s really gonna sting, and I think you’re gonna owe me when I win.”

Aizawa sighs, because this was the opposite of a responsible adult's demeanor. “You are not going to bet that we agree to adopt Hitoshi-”

“Bet,” his husband says, leaning closer to whisper something in his ear that’s entirely tempting. Quite adult in nature. But not quite tempting enough to sacrifice a child’s future, especially Hitoshi’s.

Especially when Aizawa knows that it would be even more difficult to fulfill those promises with 4.5 jobs and two children between them.

That’s not why he would decide against or decide to become a permanent fixture in either child’s life, to take on that responsibility. He will only decide to do what is right for each child’s best interest, logically. Rationally.

And it is completely irrational to consider skipping training entirely to make Hizashi make good on some of those promises, but as they agreed in a different matter, it deserves to be revisited later.

*

When Hitoshi wakes up, he's alone. Eri isn't there, her side of the bed is cold, but he can smell the faintest traces of cinnamon in the air from the apple cider.

When they woke up, he felt hollow, and he tried to fill that void by making that apple cider with Yamada, building snow bunnies with Eri. She tried to start a snowball fight between the three of them, but any snowball he threw at Yamada was meant to miss, and he couldn't bring himself to even do that to Eri.

When they drank that warm apple cider at the kotatsu, he felt warm there too. Warm enough, but still hollow, half-asleep almost when Aizawa came back just to get ready to go to the 1-A dorm. Eri wanted to go. He didn't. He was tired enough not to care that he said so.

He's still tired, but it's not a weariness he can mend with sleep. When he looks around his room.

It's empty.

There's no box underneath his bed for the pieces of other people, people that he abandoned thoughtlessly. Even if Bakugo said that he's forgiven him, he hasn't, and he'll never make another doll that mockingly looks like him with its jaggedly white body or purple hair standing on end.

There isn't a pile of things that Monoma gave him under his mattress, and he's been a coward, but the image of Monoma that he had to stare at under that weird dome still haunts him.

His room haunts him. Everything that he severed, because he didn't want to lose it in a worse way, in a way he can't control. Yamada said that it's 'something between' himself and Aizawa, but he promised that he'd stay.

And three months....

Is still too long to live in fear, if this is all he has. If this is the closest to freedom he ever finds, if this is the kindest cage, he wants to have better memories than the ones he's made. He doesn't want to condemn himself to this lonely place.

Hitoshi can still see those empty spaces with his eyes closed, and sighs as he takes the purple mochi plushie in his arms, to the kotatsu. Mirio said the smell would help him sleep, and while Eri's bed might be more comfortable, more full of things he thinks fondly of, he just wants to feel warm. He wants to feel enough.

But when he passes by the office door, he hears music quietly playing. He knows Yamada is in there, and he might be working on his radio playlist. He might be working on a playlist for Eri's birthday for all he knows, and he should know more than he does about it.

He probably shouldn't bother him.

But he does.

And as soon as he opens the door, he sees Yamada taking his headphones off and putting his hearing aids in, smiling at him fondly like he expected this, and Hitoshi is just late, instead of unwanted. "Hey kiddo, having some trouble sleeping?"

Hitoshi shrugs, his mind can't find the proper words and his tongue feels too thick to say them. If he's invited this far, he'll invite himself to Aizawa's chair, pulling it in front of the edge of Yamada's desk. He puts the mochi pillow there, keeping his arms wrapped around it, and he can't deny that the 'squish' and the smell is pleasant when he buries his face in it.

"Pretty rough day, I definitely feel ya on that. I couldn't sleep too great myself, so I decided to get some work done on my playlist, do a little research while I'm at it. I can pull the headphones out if you want to listen too, kind of get our usual radio station visit this week if you feel like skipping, so you can be the first to tell Eri 'Happy birthday' at the stroke of midnight. I'll wait thirty whole seconds before I put it on the air, and you can Brainwash Shou to make sure you beat him to it," Yamada says, and just the sound of his voice in the silence that the late night brings is enough to soothe and rattle him all at the same time. He feels like his body is shattering again beneath the surface, but somehow the edges feel softer this time.

"I'm sorry I yelled at you," Hitoshi says, even if he can't bring his head up enough to say it so it isn't muffled. He feels the plushie catch the edge of his words, but they still don't seem to come out soft enough to be meaningful.

"It's alright, kiddo," Yamada says, his hand falling on Hitoshi's shoulder and he closes his eyes when he doesn't flinch, when his body remembers this time. If he closes his eyes, he can practically feel 50 saying those words. "The rules that we all live by don't include volume control, and even though there are some people who might not like getting yelled at, I'm not one of them. Can't hurt these ears, they are literally bulletproof. I've never had to test that, luckily, but if they're built to handle my decibels, I can take yours pretty easy."

"It's still wrong, even if it's not against the rules," Hitoshi says, because even if he's broken those rules, they're too easy to keep. He should be able to keep himself from hurting others, including with his words, to not intentionally break things, to let people know where he's going. To not say swear words in front of children, and at least that's the only one he hasn't broken. But he's still broken too many, he's done too many horrible things, and he can't trust himself to stop. "I hate this."

"Hm, what color are we feeling?" Yamada asks, like that makes any sense, but when Hitoshi tilts his head to look at him, his green eyes are almost laughing at him. "It seems to me like you're feeling a little gray, kind of tired but not really tired, maybe worried about something. Maybe a little lonely. But you're the one seeing it in hi-def, so maybe if you tell me what you're seeing, we can sort it out so you don't hate it."

"Gray," Hitoshi agrees, but the way Yamada puts it sounds better. "Red, I don't... I wasn't like this before, and I hate it. I never... yelled, I wouldn't have said those things. I cry too much, and I don't... like being crazy. Er."

"Well, funny thing about that," Yamada says, tilting his head to the side to look at the ceiling, still laughing with the crooked smile on his face. "You probably didn't let yourself feel those things, because you couldn't feel them. That really wouldn't have helped you get through the day back then, but now that you're here, and you kinda know it's safe, the floodgates probably seem way too open to those annoying things called 'emotions.' I know Shou would like to convince you he got those things surgically removed, but it's pretty clear to see he's got a lot of feelings, he just thinks he keeps them secret. But, crying, yelling, being mad, those are part of the human condition and all, and if the little bean gets to tell all of us how she feels, I don't see why we can't all join in on the communication there. And if a little bean happened to destroy my favorite pair of glasses in a fit of fury, that'd be out of line, but I'd never be mad that she got mad, I'd just want to figure out that failure to communicate to save my fashion sense."

Hitoshi didn't break anything. He broke the mug at the 1-A dorm, but that was on accident. Eri does get to yell, and pout, and cry, but he shouldn't be like that. He's older, and he has more to lose. "I still don't want to do that. I want to stop. I don't... know what to do. About that."

Yamada just smiles, his fingertips stroking along his shoulderblade in a way that is almost distracting with how much it's soothing. "Well, stop is a great word, that's what we'd call a 'time out.' I'd do it all the time, I'd realize when I'm getting worked up and then I'd say, or sometimes not say, that I've got to take a break, and I'd take a breather from it. That way I could come back to the situation and say my peace on it with a clearer head, and lower volume. And I probably could have pointed out before that you should take that time to peace out of the conversation, but I guess I didn't know that 'letting it all out' like that would be more trouble than it's worth, because I don't want you to feel bad afterwards. Which brings us to... The tantrum planning board!"

Hitoshi huffs, and wants to bury his face in the plushie, because he doesn't want to call it that, even if he's sure that's the proper name for it. He's having tantrums, like Eri.

"So, we can have some trial and error, to figure this thing out, but the options off the top of my head include - screaming with headphones when you're alone, that's something very Eri approved. We've got ripping up paper, screaming into a pillow, going on a run- oh, we could get a treadmill in here, or a stationary bike! I just need to make a new rule that Shou can't use it as a coat rack, like every other little home gym I've tried to invest in. Let's see here," Yamada hums, rubbing his mustache as he looks at the laptop, in a way that's so like Izuku that Hitoshi can't forget the association.

"The music you showed me. When we were making cupcakes," Hitoshi prods, and Yamada snaps his fingers at the idea, shaking his finger too.

"That is a great way to do that. Let the greats do the yelling for you, paired up with some rocking riffs- did we ever get your Spotify account set up?" Yamada asks, and Hitoshi nods, he has the app downloaded on his phone but there's only a few songs he's added to it, after listening to them on the radio show. He told Yamada he didn't follow his playlist, but he did. "Well, if you ever want to poke around on my profile, you can see some playlist that I haven't really shared to the public. I can start whipping up a playlist between us, I'll drop the music in and you can veto it, just delete it right off until we've got a perfect collaboration between us."

Hitoshi nods, but he feels that small excitement drain when he remembers there's an entire section about dealing with this in the binder that Bakugo had made him. He could have dealt with this earlier, he never would have yelled at Yamada, but he threw it away.

And now it's gone. "If there's something wrong with that plan, we can iron it out, put a new spin on it or dump the whole idea-"

"I want to, it's just," Hitoshi turns to bury his face this time, because he really is an idiot. And he misses all those things, but he threw them away, his suffering is his own fault. "Bakugo... gave me that book. And it mentioned an app. But I threw it out, and that was stupid."

"That was something you regret now, but it wasn't stupid in the moment, and you're still allowed to do what you want to your own things, Bakugo-books included. Stash included," Yamada says, but his hand starts pulling away, and Hitoshi turns to look at him, seeing that Yamada is looking away from him. Because he knows he's stupid. "And I'm maybe allowed to pick some things out of the trash if no one wants them, just in case there are regrets later on."

But, Hitoshi threw them away. Everything, everything he kept or packed into that stash box. Yamada said it was fine to throw them away, if he really wanted to, and he put it back in the trash the second time.

But Yamada glances at him, and shrugs. “And if you do want that back-”

“Yes,” Hitoshi says, and maybe he should be embarrassed by how eager he is, how insistent he is to have those things back, but he wants them, and he was an idiot to let them go in the first place.

But when Yamada leaves, only to come back with the stash box in his hands, the key tucked between two fingers like he never thought of opening it, Hitoshi puts it on his lap just to make sure that everything is there. Untouched. Monoma’s gifts are on top, crushed to fit, but the books, the doll, the notes, the things other people think are trash but just remind him of other people and better times, they’re all still there.

It’s his again.

“I know it might be a little wrong to second-guess you with what you wanted to do with your stuff, but if you never said a word about the box, I wouldn’t have brought it up to you. It was kind of a ‘just in case’ thing,” Yamada says, like he’s done anything wrong here, when he’s probably the reason that his room could feel like his home again. “But, that binder right there look like what we’re looking for-”

Hitoshi starts closing the box before he has the chance to think, to realize how stupid that was. Even if it made him angry that Yamada would try to take that binder, it’s basically Yamada’s anyway, after Hitoshi threw it away.

But Yamada raises his hands up, and he looks guilty, even if he shouldn’t look like that. It’s stupid. “Yep, probably not a great idea to invade your space and stuff and all, just chock that up to a dumb blonde moment-”

“It’s fine, it’s.... It’s just stupid,” Hitoshi says, opening the box and turning it so Yamada could take anything he wants. It’s not his if he threw it away, he’s just being stupid.

“It’s not stupid if it makes you upset, Hitoshi,” Yamada says, like that makes any sense, before he sits down and pulls out a pen and a sticky note pad. “How about we make that into a rule, ‘No touching Hitoshi’s stuff without invitation.’ That way, no one can make you feel upset, because it’s pretty easy to avoid touching your stuff, but a lot harder for you to deal with being upset by it. Because that’s kind of the purpose of the rules, making sure that people aren’t hurt or upset if we can avoid it.”

Hitoshi looks at the sticky note, and imagines that if Yamada tried to write down a rule to make sure he would never be upset with anything, he’d probably need more sticky notes than the collection he already has. But Hitoshi finds the binder, and flips to the section that he remembered skimming over. The app that Bakugo recommended ‘to put your bitchass in timeout for a while’ is one that he downloads to his phone.

There’s a slot in the app to pull up a playlist to listen to, but it also asks for physical activities to help too. He should ask what Bakugo does, even if he imagines he already knows the answer. Probably cooking, probably using his quirk, or sparring.

Maybe, having a ‘home gym’ like Yamada said would be a good thing, but he can’t ask for it now. It seems expensive. And Aizawa said that Santa was going to get him a laptop that isn’t bugged.

Even if Hitoshi doesn’t deserve that.

“Anything new on the chat?” Yamada asks, like he used to ask when he noticed Hitoshi was on his phone, and he actually had a response to it. But Hitoshi frowns, because he doesn't, because maybe he can talk to Izuku or Bakugo now, but he can't hope to make amends to the others.

'Still angry with me. Can't apologize,' Hitoshi signs, tucking the binder back in the box before he locks it. He knows he should apologize, it worked well enough with Izuku and Bakugo, but he can't hope that it would be that easy with everyone. He can only message Ashi or Monoma, but a message isn't enough. Asui will probably never forgive him for what he said, she only knows him as the idiot who needed to be rescued from the 8 Precepts and the guy who threatened her with a knife, on top of actually hurting her when she was trying to save him from 127.

"Maybe, you could write them a little note, old school style? If you're not comfortable with saying it and all, and speaking of that," Yamada says, before he opens a drawer and pulls out a white envelope. There's flowery calligraphy with purple ink, addressed to 'Shinsou.' "I haven't looked at it, but I think Monoma might be trying to apologize for that little mess up yesterday."

Hitoshi takes the envelope, tearing carefully and slowly on the top edge, as he tries to figure out what exactly Monoma has to apologize for. He stole his quirk and used it on him, but Hitoshi told him to. He bothered him again, but Hitoshi let him into the dorm anyway. But Hitoshi threatened him, used his quirk on him, made him drink pickle juice and talk about his deepest insecurities. Hitoshi should apologize.

But Monoma is an idiot. 'Dearest Shinsou, I will be keeping my visits out of sight and out of mind for the time being, due diligence perhaps too late after the events of yesterday. I apologize for overstepping your boundaries, for ignoring your wishes, and will be ready if you ever wish to speak to me again. But until that time, I will keep a respectful distance, and hope that you can forgive me.'

Like the last time when Monoma sent him that weird pain-relief-threat, he crosses out several ways to say 'Sincerely, Monoma Neito' before he picks that. Dearest Shinsou still sounds weird, he's not his dearest.

"Well, that's nice that he's respecting your space and all, saying he's not going to bother you," Yamada says, almost like he can hear the strain of guilt that Hitoshi hates thinking about the most. "Maybe we can see how long he sticks to it, or maybe give him a chance. Totally up to you, but you do have a little preference to your friend group, and maybe I'm a little biased."

"Preference?" Hitoshi asks, even if the question still stings like ice in his throat, even if he crinkles the edge of the letter slightly after he does.

But he breathes easier when he sees that Yamada doesn't answer him immediately, he's not forced to, and maybe that makes his words a little easier to hear. "Well, I've noticed that you tend to gravitate towards people like me, Mirio, Bakugo, Kaminari a little bit but that's iffy. Basically, loud blonde guys who are not Monoma, since Aoyama's a little shy, and Ojiro too, but if Ashido didn't have the mutant type color scheme, I'm pretty sure she would be blonde too."

"That's not-" Hitoshi starts to say, before he realizes that Yamada is right. There's always been something about Monoma that's wrong, probably how he made such a mess of his life for the first few days and how every attempt to steal his quirk is just irritating. But when he said he didn't want to steal his quirk, when he was acting more like a person that day, Hitoshi... kind of tolerated him.

"I'm not saying all your friends have to be loud blondes, or that you should give Monoma another chance because of that," Yamada says, his hands raised up like he expects Hitoshi to be angry with that. "I'm just stating my theories, that you like people with blonde hair and you don't like people with black hair. And this is a little out there for a theory, but just based on how Sero seems to get a sadistic little smile sometimes with the group chat, and Amajiki tends to get a colder shoulder, and Shou gets a cold shoulder that I think is good dose of medicine for him, I think you might have preferences in your social group based on hair color.”

He might be right. One of his favorite things to do is scare Sero, and Iida sometimes, but his hair is so blue that it’s almost black. He doesn’t hate Tama, at all, but he just doesn’t feel the same way about him that he does to Neji or Mirio. And Aizawa.

It’s honestly unfair to treat Aizawa like that. It’s completely stupid. He knows that Aizawa is nice, he’s kind, he’s confusing sometimes but Hitoshi likes Aizawa. When Aizawa saw what he could do with the capture scarf, when he smiled at him like he was proud, like he was Eri, he felt.

Like he was the biggest asshole in the world for treating him like he did. For yelling at him so much, for trying to punish him at any chance, for things that weren’t his fault. He was angry at Aizawa for forcing him to go to that cabin in the mountains after he was attacked, but he knows Aizawa had to in order to keep him safe. He’s sure that Aizawa wants to keep him safe, even if he doesn’t want to keep him. He knows Aizawa cares.

He knows Aizawa shouldn’t care, when all Hitoshi has ever done is ignore him or try to hurt him out of spite. He tried to choke him as a warning, and Aizawa just followed him into the tree, and talked to him like that didn’t happen at all. Understanding, when Hitoshi really just should have been left there, when he made it clear that no one would blame Aizawa if he did.

“When...” Hitoshi says, but the rest of it catches in his throat, when it’s just too much to ask Yamada. Yamada just looks at him with that same intolerable understanding, that patience he doesn’t deserve. He folds the letter back and puts it in his stash box, and he turns to wrap his arms around the mochi plushie, he’s not sure if he wants to breathe in the lavender scent or if he just wants to smother the question out of himself. “When is Aizawa going to give up on me?”

He knows that he can’t control Yamada if he asks, but the fear just worsens when he doesn’t get an answer. He doesn’t want to look, doesn’t want to see what Yamada looks like. He honestly might want to hear that Aizawa already has, that he’s only putting up with him because it’s temporary, even if that doesn’t explain why he would be so kind.

“I’ve been an asshole to him. I yelled, I didn’t get the coffee grounds, I Brainwashed him just because I didn’t want to hear him talk, just because he couldn’t stop it, I called him an asshole when he was just trying to make up for the laptop-”

“Hitoshi,” Yamada says, before he sighs, and that sigh could mean anything. He’s sure he’s going to tell him that Aizawa already has given up, he doesn’t care, but he just puts on such a great act, and he’s stupid for believing it. “Shou doesn’t give up on people, definitely not kids that need it. Definitely not you. And trust me when I say that even if getting yelled at or getting cursed at isn’t fun, it’s honestly something to be a little proud of. Because even if that’s not the perfect way to express yourself, it’s way better than letting those things build up inside. And we both know you’re still a sweet kid, you just deserve your moments. And that doesn’t mean you deserve to get ‘given up on’ when we know you’re just trying to say that you’re not cool with something.”

“But the others gave up on me,” Hitoshi says, shifting to hold the mochi tighter. “They get to decide that, and that’s fine, but Aizawa can decide to do that too. You could, Eri could, I can’t just be an asshole to everyone.”

“It’s... a little different with us, though,” Yamada says, the unsure whine in his voice probably means it’s a little ‘complicated’ too. “Me and Shou are adults, and we’re high school teachers so we're basically experts at getting yelled at by teenagers. We've also been through those teenage years, unfortunately, so we've got a little bit of a thicker skin going into it. I don't think you'd ever yell at Eri, but I think she'd still forgive you after that, because she'd understand that you didn't want to at the time. But, with our little herolets, they do have the right to veto, but they also have the right to forgive. And I'm probably biased, but I think those herolets are quite the forgiving bunch, if you want to take a crack at it."

Hitoshi frowns, because maybe they would be stupid enough to risk it. He still doesn't know if he can ever grovel low enough, enough to convince himself. It would just be easier if forgiveness was like punishment, if he could prove his intentions past words and time passed, if he could just do something to convince them that he feels regretful enough. And he can't promise that he won't do it again, despite how much he doesn't want to. "Did you hear what I said at the test?"

Hitoshi can feel how the English words hesitate on his tongue, how it's harder to say them than just know them. He just wanted to see if Yamada would be impressed by his attempt, as much as he wants to guard these words, as much as he wants to stop worrying about whether he heard, or saw, what he asked when Yamada's hearing aids were out and he had to make sure Confession wouldn't affect him. If Yamada really knew that he asked such a stupid question, asking him if it would be okay to call him 'Dad.' If Yamada has just ignored it, like Hitoshi wants him to now. It was stupid, and he doesn't know what he was thinking at the time.

But Yamada doesn't answer, and when Hitoshi looks up at him, he can see how confused he is by how his eyebrows are drawn together, it's almost pitying.

No, it's better to just smother himself and forget he ever said anything. "Wait, wait! I just, uh, had to switch gears on that, that was English right? French?"

Hitoshi just lets the 'squish' from the mochi envelop his face, his suffering can end now. He wanted this for so long, to say something in English to prove to Yamada that he knew it, in a way that just translating in writing or sign can't convey. But he fucked it up.

Because he knows Eri can speak English clearer than he can. He remembers how irritated she would get when he tried to teach her, because everytime he repeated it for her, she probably repeated it the same way he did, and it came out wrong, and he knew it. "No, Hitoshi, don't give up on me yet! Maybe, just say it a little slower? Sound it out? I can help you with those tricky syllables- it's okay, 'cause I know we've never practiced with it!"

Hitoshi shakes his head, half refusal and half to bury his burning face deeper into this plushie, squeezing it tighter around his face. He's never speaking English again around Yamada, ever.

"Alright," Yamada says, like he doesn't believe Hitoshi's conviction. But at least that's easier to hear instead of disappointment, because he doesn't know if he could weather that much. His hand rests on Hitoshi's shoulder, and he relaxes his hold just enough to breathe. "Feeling a little better now, now that that's out of the way?"

Hitoshi nods, even if he feels like rolling his eyes, because Yamada is predictable. He wants him to sleep, everyone seems offended by the dark circles under his eyes. He's sure he'll always have them.

"Feeling a little sleepy?" He knew it. Hitoshi shakes his head, because he's tired, he feels better, but he doesn't want to sleep. He doesn't want to sleep in his bed alone, he'd rather be here with Yamada. "Feeling like... you want me to play with your hair?"

Hitoshi has to look up at him with that, even if he still feels like his face is too hot. Aizawa told him.

“Just if you want me to, I know it’s pretty relaxing, pretty nice. Or we can just chill to the music, just vibe to it,” Yamada says, leaning back in his chair, and Hitoshi knows he’s keeping him from whatever research he was doing. He knows Yamada probably just wants him to leave so he can get back to it.

But Hitoshi wants him to play with his hair, so he nods, and as soon as the hand on his shoulder starts stroking his scalp, his eyes fall shut and his body relaxes almost outside of his control. It’s almost scary, but he doesn’t think he can feel enough fear when it just feels like light. Like warmth. Like happiness, maybe.

Like being loved, almost. The only way 50 could ever say it to him. “Falling asleep like that might hurt a bit in the morning, and I can sit with you ‘til you fall asleep-”

Yamada probably says something else, but his voice just sounds like music, and with the smell of lavender in his lungs, he falls asleep.

Thinking about apologies.

Apple-Vanilla-Cinnamon Challenge

Chapter Summary

Hatsume returns with a baby in tow, a present that Shinsou and Yamada both are eager to play around with. With Eri's sixth birthday taking place tomorrow, many last-minute preparations are underway, and the cake that Shinsou has been worrying about will have to be baked, with an unlikely hero team up to help him.

Chapter Notes

Welcome to a chapter that I've been EXCITED to post. I might be delaying next week's update as I've fallen a bit behind my writing schedule, so if there's no update next week, don't be alarmed, I'm just catching up on my lead before I post the next chapter.

Trigger Warnings: References to human trafficking, vague mention of Bug, reference to a previous bout of self-harm

Previously on Wards of UA: Yamada gave Shinsou his stash box, which he secretly kept after Shinsou tried to throw it away. In the last two times that a visitor has come to the EraserMic dorm, Shinsou left with Mirio and threatened Monoma with pickled radish juice. Shinsou and Midoriya met with Hatsume, and Shinsou asked for a mask that would have a microphone and speakers built in to nullify his quirk, with padding from Yamada's neck speakers and the band from Aizawa's goggles, to make it different from the locked masks that Shinsou has been forced to wear before. When Shinsou was attacked by 127, one of those locking masks was forced on Shinsou's face, and Yamada saw him wearing it. Shinsou is more confident asking Yamada questions, after knowing that Yamada's hearing aids prevent Shinsou's quirk from being effective on him. Monoma's father was one of the quirk specialists evaluating Shinsou, and earned a bit of Shinsou's ire towards him, complimented by Monoma responding to the influence of Shinsou's Confession quirk that his father doesn't believe Monoma will ever be a successful hero and should follow in his footsteps to be a quirk specialist. Monoma also wrote a letter of apology to Shinsou, addressing him as 'Dearest Shinsou.' Midoriya made a groupchat with himself, Iida, Uraraka, and Shinsou early on, but Shinsou never used it. Iida was cut by 127 when he tried to intervene in the attack on campus to rescue Shinsou, while Asui's tongue was cut by Shinsou trying to continue fighting 127. Shinsou used Confession and Brainwashing to see whether Aizawa cared about him, making him raise his hand if he did, but Shinsou also knows that while Yamada has promised that Shinsou will stay after the investigation is over, Aizawa has said that Shinsou will have two months afterwards. Aizawa once asked Shinsou to identify a picture of Bug, before he knew what Bug did to Shinsou, which caused Shinsou to dissociate, and felt guilty once Shinsou did identify that picture when he stayed up most of the night to give up all the information he had about The Miasma. Toshinori made red velvet cupcakes for Aizawa's birthday, which Shinsou knows is Aizawa's favorite cake.

See the end of the chapter for more notes

When Yamada hears a knock at the door, he counts himself lucky that he's already in the kitchen, and Hitoshi is still putting his room to rights after the light breakfast they made together, where he tried to water down his ward's coffee with a bit of creamer to maybe encourage some better sleeping habits, and earned that soft glare he's honestly been missing out on.

But, with Yamada closest to the door, that means he can answer to any uninvited intruder, rather than risk his ward running off with them or threatening them with pickle juice, and when he opens the door, he honestly feels a little threatened himself. "Hatsume, isn't it? I remember you from the Sports Festival, great showing by the way, but what brings you to my door this lovely morning?"

It's sleep. This kid needs sleep. Hitoshi's under eye circles can be bad, but these are worse, and this poor girl is twitching. "I'm delivering a precious baby, after being forced to suffer, after being exiled from the place that I belong! And as promised, this baby will not electrocute anyone!"

Yamada does not believe that at all. "Right, that little bundle of joy must be in that box! Under all those papers! Who's it for?"

"The... guy," Hatsume sputters, before she cocks her head, clearly wracking her math-y, crazy engineer-y brain for the name of his ward, who has very apparently made a deal with the devil right here. "Uh, kinda cute? Purple hair, his cheek to jawline length is about 8.37 centimeters?"

Things he didn't previously know about his ward right there, since he's still guestimating his waistband size. "Right, Shinsou Hitoshi! This is his address, and I'm his doorman, but if you wanted to talk to him about the baby--"

Hatsume sighs, doubling over before she shakes her pink haired head. "No, this works better, I guess. Yuyu-sempai said she might have to create an electro-shock avoidance treatment if I go near him again. Apparently, Yuyu-sempai and Hadou have adopted him before they even admit that they like each other. Out loud."

Maybe Yamada should be concerned, or a little worried that the Big Three plus one are so involved with his kids' protection and care, but he honestly can't look a gift horse in the mouth. "Well, hopefully they get that sorted out in time. Valentine's Day is coming up and all, the last year and last chance and last dance to put it out there--"

Hatsume's head snaps up audibly, Yamada can hear at least two vertebrae crack when she looks at him. And she doesn't look sane. "Less than two months, if I scramble, I might- tell Shinko to tell Middy if there's any problems with it! And read the manual! Bye!"

And with that, a chaotic sprite disappears into the midmorning with a mission on her mind, an idea that Yamada maybe shouldn't have given her.

But now Yamada is holding a box, underneath a huge user manual, and he knows what's inside. A mask. A mask that his kid asked for, went out of his way for, and wants to wear. But he's not sure if he can keep the image of that mask that was locked on his face that night out of his mind, he doesn't know if he'll feel it like an old muzzle around his own face just seeing it again.

But, when he kicks the door closed, he sees that the moment of truth is impending. Hitoshi is standing in the doorway to the hall, close to the wall, and a little concerned about all of this. Definitely has his eyes locked on the box, because he probably knows what's inside too. "Well, it's not the usual Monoma delivery, but it looks like we've got another little gift from Hatsume to try out!"

Yamada sets the box on the kotatsu, before he sits on the couch, unable to keep himself from flipping through the manual. Speakers and microphone set up, chargeable through USB-C, same as Hitoshi's phone. Ceramic plating?

Yamada hears Hitoshi sit down on the other side of the kotatsu, but Yamada looks at the cover to read this 'baby's name for the first time. 'Artificial Vocal Cords: Persona Cords,' AVC for short. And maybe Hitoshi just asked for some digital conversion to get in the way of his quirk.

But Hatsume makes hero support equipment after all, and this is definitely the product of that kind of vision. "Are... you mad?"

Yamada glances up to look at a guilty teen, still staring at the box he probably wants to open, and Shouta did say they should act surprised. "No way! Hatsume made it for you, and within reason, I'm totally cool with you having pretty much anything you want. Nothing too dangerous, no drugs and alcohol of course, but this 'baby' doesn't look like that at all."

Yamada slides the box and manual a little closer to Hitoshi before he tucks his hands in his lap, because once Hitoshi touches it, it's his, and there's no touching Hitoshi's things without permission. Hitoshi just glances at the manual before he slides it off, pulling the lid off that little shoebox to find a black mask laying right in the middle, mismatched bits of foam underneath it to give it the barest protection from rattling around.

Yamada can't see it very well, but it doesn't look like there's an opening in the middle like the other mask. It is bulkier though, made up of so many interlocking pieces that would travel right under his throat, a pretty big piece in front that Yamada first thinks looks like a muzzle, but he tries to argue with himself that it will allow more air inside the mask, more room to breathe. There's also two big gray squares that look like they'll go over his ears, little dials right in front of them.

He can't see the band underneath, or the padding from how it's laying in the box, but knowing that it's supposed to be inspired by Shouta's goggles and his neck speakers, he feels like a kid on Christmas wanting to try it out.

"Want to take it to your room to try it out? Or maybe just ask me to stop staring so much--"

"It's fine," Hitoshi grumbles, and while Yamada doesn't really like that signed out, it's easier to see a bit of frustration underneath those words, especially when Hitoshi ducks his head and curls a hand around the back of his neck. "Is it really fine with you? To have this?"

"Yep! It's like I said," Yamada says, and he can tell by the glare that's so soft it's almost confused that Hitoshi remembers that, but he's still unsure. "And as long as it's okay with you, it's okay with me. Whatever you want to do here, kiddo, you're in control, and I'm just sitting pretty on this couch for the ride."

He'd honestly still like to make sure this is a 'non-electrocution-baby' before Hitoshi tries it out, but when the teenager sighs and picks it up, he can see the thick padding. The band is definitely the same as Shouta's, even if it's black, and maybe Yamada was a little too hopeful for a little yellow to work its way into this piece. But, stealth and all, that wouldn't work, and Hatsume probably wasn't argued into it like Shouta managed to do with too many support equipment developers.

Hitoshi looks at it first, his thumbs squeezing the padding to test it, before he slides it over his face, holding it there. And it slides right off, down to his chest. "Ah, the band for Shou's goggles is a little tricky if you haven't tried them on before--"

"They're not!" Oh no, he's blushing.

He's caught, and Yamada probably shouldn't have let that slip, but he just has to bite his lip to keep from grinning too much, just adding salt to the wound.

Hitoshi just sighs, head tipping down in all the adolescent angst and embarrassment this has caused him, probably nigh-lethal amounts, before he starts twisting the pieces of the rubber guard for that fancy hidden zip-pulley to tighten up, the top part of the mask hitting his chin before he pulls it back on his face. And that glare is so put upon. "Don't tell him."

Yamada smiles a little lopsided, because that secret is very out, but it's probably best not to mortify the poor kid right now. "Nah, I just recognized the band, I'm not accusing you of anything. Fits nice? Breathable and all?"

"Yeah," Hitoshi says, glancing to the side where one hand is touching the dial, not playing with it yet. "I don't think it's turned on."

"Well, I guess we can take a look at the instruction manual," Yamada says, and maybe his grin turns a little devious at the thought. "Because I think a certain engineer went wild with this baby, and there's a whole lot of fun to be had in this small package."

'Switching to digital mode' might be Hitoshi's first order of business, but 'How to adjust tonal pressure plating' and 'How to save a Persona Cord setting' are definitely going to be worth reading up in Yamada's opinion.

Because that little Shouta impersonation he hasn't heard for a while could get quite a boost in performance with a little support equipment.

*

Aizawa couldn't help but feel an almost irrational sense of dread as he and Eri made their way back to the staff dorm for the day. Possibly due to the antics his students had pulled last night for Eri's 'birthday eve,' practically stealing her away for most of the night to spoil her with movie marathons, sweets, and games in anticipation of the deserved spoiling she would receive tomorrow. Perhaps that worry was mounting because he now knew what his students had prepared as gifts, he had an idea how Plus Ultra his coworkers planned to be, and the package that he and Hizashi had been waiting for still hadn't arrived.

Aizawa knows that Hizashi ordered several things for Eri's birthday. He would estimate that it would be enough to necessitate one of Principal Nezu's robots to deliver them to their doorstep rather than receiving a notification to pick up a smaller package from the administration building.

Aizawa sees an overburdened robot carrying such packages through the door that the animal principal is holding open for it. Followed by five robots carrying what look to be carousel horses.

Aizawa glances down at Eri, and knows it might spoil some of the surprise, but given that this seems to be a surprise to him, Principal Nezu probably deserves it. And instead of seeming flustered at all, the principal blinks and brightens when he spots them approaching. "Ah, Miss Eri and Eraserhead! We were just putting the finishing touches on our makeshift 'birthday ballroom,' so to speak!"

"A ballroom?" Eri asks, leaning forward to take a peek at what looks like chaos in soft pastels that has exploded over the common room of the staff dorm. At least with the birthday party that was insisted upon for his own birthday, there weren't quite so many streamers.

There is a carousel. That is not the only carnival piece present. "Is that a ferris wheel?"

Principal Nezu nods, looking at how nearly every wall and chair was currently decorated with pink and purple satin ribbons, how there was a carousel with ponies matching that color scheme, and a ferris wheel currently folded and disassembled, pulled by a semi truck that is very clearly getting closer to the staff dorm. It is full sized, and Aizawa can only hope that it's repurposed from the Cultural Festival. That Principal Nezu didn't order a ferris wheel just to match the pink and purple color scheme. "Indeed! While it may have been possible to create a 'bouncy house' that would endure the cold weather with more time to engineer it, I hope that the ferris wheel will be an adequate substitute."

Aizawa looks inside to count the chairs again. There's too many of them. They had a plan, a nice, sedate birthday party where Eri wouldn't be overwhelmed, even if there was no chance to keep the gift-giving from being absurd. He knows how his students are, but he didn't want them to feel obligated to attend her party.

"Lunch Rush was unavailable for catering, but he did design the menu and consultation for whom to contract with. And I was told that this event would be Sailor Moon themed?" Principal Nezu asks, pointedly not asking him, but looking at the little girl at his eye level who is still enraptured by the sight of the carousel ponies.

"Yes! Sailor Moon is my favorite!" Eri says, distracted from her spell of awe just long enough to answer Principal Nezu, her small fists in front of her chest as though she struggles to hold back from how much she loves that cartoon.

Principal Nezu just chuckles. "Well, I suppose I may still have a surprise in store that will be well-received. Do take care not to peek into those packages being delivered to your door just yet, even if it's tempting."

"Okay!" Eri concedes, still clearly overwhelmed by all of this. Understandably.

Aizawa might be more overwhelmed, the more that he looks at it. "Plus Ultra, then."

Principal Nezu looks him dead in the eye, even from his much smaller height, and Aizawa feels the source of that unnameable dread looking back at him. "Plus Ultra. Nothing less for a ward in UA's care would suffice."

The plan for Eri to have a nice breakfast at the 1-A dorm, already offered by his students to the point of near-insistence, and receive the presents that he knows he couldn't keep them from buying has currently been thrown out the window, because they will show up to this. The plan for Eri, Kota, Asui Satsuki and Shoji Mizuno to play musical chairs and other simple party games has been replaced by a full size ferris wheel. And the plan for he and his husband and both wards to celebrate with a nice dinner and cake to wind the day down is wholly overshadowed, because Aizawa knows he might only have a chance of peeling Eri off that carousel when she passes out from sugar overdose and exhaustion.

Aizawa finds himself following the robot to his dorm, Eri still following in a bit of fugue that he honestly feels as well. He knows that everyone involved in Eri's life would want to not only celebrate the benchmark of another year of it, but to go completely Plus Ultra with the justification that this first birthday since being rescued should outweigh every birthday before it. That on the surface means extravagant gifts, though Aizawa can also see they're thoughtful ones, with her preferences in mind.

But he can only be hopeful, to the point of ignorance, that they don't find their footing to do this again on Christmas in a matter of days.

The robot doesn't seem to have enough artificial intelligence to realize that it's blocking the door, and Aizawa watches with a sense of horror and intrusion he knows shouldn't be new to him when a small mechanical arm descends from its torso to start unlocking his door. Right in front of him. But from what little he can see with the boxes and robot in the way, it seems like Hizashi answers the door first. "Ah! There's the party decorations we were waiting on!"

"That's just decorations?" Hizashi asks, his husband's voice is unmistakable, and given that Hizashi hasn't been on patrol and thus wouldn't have been affected by any bizarre quirk to explain why there's two of him, Aizawa fights the urge to kick the robot on its face and out of his way.

"Yama?" Eri asks tentatively, more confused than horrified at least, and the boxes are pulled out of the robot's arms and quickly dropped by his husband. Who isn't accompanied by a quirk-induced doppelganger, but by Hitoshi.

Who is wearing a mask, the mask that Hatsume presumably crafted for him. A mask that he pulls down to his chin quickly, staring at Eri as he does with clear worry.

A mask that can mimic voices would be an ingenious device if Hitoshi were a hero student trying to compliment his quirk's abilities. But Hitoshi is not a hero student, and Aizawa is not blind to the possibilities of that mask complimenting his quirk. Aizawa has worries.

He's sure that Hizashi would take him up on that bet as to whether it would take one day or two before their ward uses that mask to Brainwash Aizawa. And he'll lose with his insistence that Hitoshi will wait two entire days before he does it.

But as the robot backs away to retreat, pranks are clearly the last thing on Hitoshi's mind, his hand still cupped around the face of the mask like he wants to take it off fully, to hide it from Eri, but can't summon the will to.

"Hey guys, welcome back! Hitoshi got a neat little toy we've been playing around with while you were gone, the Artificial Vocal Cord voice changer!" Hizashi says, sweeping his hands in the direction that Hitoshi clearly doesn't want, when the teenager likely hadn't considered whether Eri would see this mask. A black mask, that is reminiscent in ways the young child is clearly familiar with, even though cloth facemasks went over with no altercation. "When Hitoshi wears it, he can change his voice to match anyone's, even mine! Or Shou's!"

Hizashi must be oblivious to the obvious tension when he winks at Aizawa, promising something he's already certain of, or at least was. Before he considered Eri's feelings on the matter of this mask, which he knows are likely to rule whether Hitoshi ever wears it again.

"You can change your voice to be like anything?" Eri asks, timid at first, before excitement wins out with her hands curling in front of her chest again, dragging Aizawa's hand with her. "Even a cat? Even Sushi?"

"I... haven't tried it," Hitoshi admits, glancing down at the mask still riddled with guilt, still unwilling to see that Eri seems to accept this. The black mask is similar in ways that Aizawa can clearly see, but to Eri, who was more familiar with another mask, it may look completely different. "I need your help before I try it, though."

"Okay!" Eri agrees, abandoning her hold on Aizawa's hand only to take hold of Hitoshi's. "But Yama and Zawa are gonna open some boxes and I can't see them, Nezzu said so! So I can help you in my room!”

“That works,” Hitoshi mumbles, glancing over his shoulder at Aizawa, as though his opinion on the matter counted at all. Or that he was surprised, which he imagines he acts as though he is, given that Hitoshi doesn’t know he happened to eavesdrop on the planning session for that mask that seems to have taken a very different turn than expected.

And Hizashi doesn’t look worried at all, when both wards are out of sight, resting a hand on the boxes and the other on his hip. “Now that is a nifty little baby Hatsume cooked up. Just chock full of possibilities-”

“Our wards will not be missing out on childish pranks, without that help,” Aizawa sighs, rubbing his eyes and once again reminding himself that he can’t expel Ashido or Kaminari. They have potential. “I’ve been ‘down low, too slow’d five times in the last twelve hours, and Eri will not be distracted for long. And Nezu is getting her a ferris wheel.”

Aizawa knows very well that he failed to mention critical specifics when Hizashi starts looking around the living room, but he waits for the pressure to mount just enough that it’s enjoyable. “Where are we going to put it?”

“A ferris wheel, for her birthday. He’s taken over, the common room downstairs has been redecorated, and there is too much,” Aizawa argues, for the sake of his child, who cannot be expected to withstand all of that on her birthday, despite what Principal Nezu thinks is appropriate.

And despite what Hizashi clearly thinks too, when he grins. “Nothing but the best for our little bean! Which means, we better dig out the goods before she comes out and sees them.”

Aizawa unsheathes his tanto knife to start cutting through the tape, Hizashi is the only one who knows what he ordered and when, enough to see that most of these boxes are for streamers, decorations, party favors. Entirely too many party favors, and some that look a bit more expensive than the usual fare, in Aizawa’s opinion.

But when he opens a box that seems like the right one, he notices the color isn’t quite right, and Hizashi picks it up to see that it’s entirely different. It’s not what they ordered, it’s not the right size.

What Principal Nezu said earlier, haunts him. Well, I suppose I may still have a surprise in store that will be well-received.

Cosplay like this cannot be what he meant. Hizashi looks at him suspiciously, before it dawns on Aizawa that he’s evaluating whether it’s the right size. Aizawa knows it would only be the perfect fit, he knows Hizashi’s shoulders aren’t broad enough for that shirt.

Hizashi sets it down, and pulls out another one. And while Aizawa sees the last piece is in fact a Tuxedo Mask cosplay, he sees there’s only one. And when Hizashi pulls it out of the box, he can see that it’s in Hizashi’s size. Not Hitoshi’s.

That’s a conversation that has not come up with Hitoshi, and he knows it wouldn’t be an honest one if this option were presented before him with the connection to Eri’s birthday. Even if Hitoshi would be comfortable wearing a Chibi Usa cosplay, skirt and all in this situation, given that Hitoshi might not understand the societal ramifications of wearing it at an increasingly public birthday party, he thinks that the option should be taken out of the teenager’s hands.

Hizashi nods at him when he tucks that cosplay into the bottom of the box, before he picks up the other one. The one presumably meant for Aizawa, and he seems to have a question he should already know the answer to.

“No,” Aizawa says, because he might appreciate Sailor Pluto’s character, he understands the ramifications of any of his teenage idiots seeing him dressed like that, and he’d much rather coordinate with his husband fashion-wise.

Hizashi folds up the cosplay with the Tuxedo Mask outfit on top, even if he raises his eyebrows with promises that the other won’t exactly waste away in their closet. Aizawa doesn’t have much time to consider the ramifications of that.

“You had it delivered here, right?” Aizawa asks, because they need this gift to arrive today, and if Hizashi hadn’t noticed a delayed shipping notification, it might undo all of Principal Nezu’s unexpected coordination with them.

But Hizashi does check his phone, wincing in a way that isn’t promising while he folds back the box flaps with one hand. “Shit, it went to the old P.O. box. You’ve got training with the herolets?”

Aizawa nearly rolls his eyes, given that it was requested by his students for nearly insulting reasons. “As part of a punishment game they set up, not that I’m supposed to know the real reason why only the male students requested ‘additional time to hone their hand-to-hand combat skills.’”

He’s almost offended, but knowing that he’s meant to be a strict teacher, which comes with a bit of fear, makes it more humorous that they asked for this and clearly planned it beforehand. “And I don’t suppose you’d like to have the little bean watching you dole out that punishment on her favorite heroes, so I guess that means I can take Eri out for a little pre-birthday day on the town. And inconspicuously make a trip to a cosplay shop.”

Aizawa narrows his eyes, because there’s no way he could pull it off. “Inconspicuous?”

Hizashi just grins. “I mean, I don’t think that tiara was the right size, and it’s best to be sure. Pretty tricky fit with the horn and all.”

Aizawa would be surprised if that was the only shop that Hizashi wanted to visit on that outing, but given that Eri has been remiss on excursions off-campus, and with the restrictions on Hitoshi, they can’t accomodate for it tomorrow, he nods his agreement and hopes that they’ll have fun. “Maybe Hitoshi would like to spend time with Mirio, or work on his studies if you’re not back in time.”

“Might be surprised about a certain someone’s feelings about those herolets,” Hizashi teases, what he thinks is promising but what is in fact almost more dangerous than Hitoshi ignoring his students with ill-placed spite. If Hitoshi tries to ask for forgiveness and renewed friendship with a group of students gathered with the purpose of training in his specialty with quirkless combat, with that mask so new, Aizawa can only see this going poorly.

But when Eri and Hitoshi leave her room, he notices that the mask looks a bit different now, and he imagines it’s not the picture of stealth that Hatsume had in mind. But it has been fixed with Eri’s necessary influence. “Yama! Zawa! Toshi’s mask is pretty now!”

“Yep,” Hitoshi says, with Eri’s voice which only sends a few shivers down Aizawa’s spine with the eeriness of it. He knows he’ll have to get used to that, though, as well as being unable to read Hitoshi’s expression when the majority of his face is covered in black.

And cat stickers. He can see a few unicorns too.

“I think it’s perfect now,” Hizashi says, a wide grin and sincerity that’s almost too much for this situation. Almost.

But if Hitoshi wanted to create this mask with Hizashi and himself in mind, to make it different from the mask he wore before, then Eri's influence was certainly missing until the stickers were added.

"But! It looks like there's a little shopping adventure I need to take, and a little bean is absolutely essential on this mission! And I do believe there might be some crepe flavors that can only be found during the holiday season that are also essential for us to try out," Hizashi says, as though Eri will be missing out on any sweets in the coming days, but the bribe might be necessary with how she looks up at Hitoshi, reluctant to leave him.

"Okay, but I gotta show Twenny something," Eri says, as she steps back with Hitoshi's full attention on her, pulling the mask down and crouching a bit lower as he grossly misinterprets the importance of what she has to 'show.' "Up high!"

Hitoshi raises his hand, eyebrows already knitting a bit as the suspicions raise, but as soon as he does, Eri lowers her hand, not giving Hitoshi a chance to make contact. Not that he seemed to understand that 'up high' was inviting a high-five.

"Down low!" Eri says, her own eyebrows knitting together and lowered, seemingly angry in a bid not to burst into giggles like she had before. And when Hitoshi takes the bait, his hand moving towards her gently, she pulls it back to her shoulder to give into the giggles for a trick well-played. "Too slow! I got you, Toshi!"

This is the face of a 'got' teen, as Hitoshi stares at his hand, seemingly struggling to comprehend exactly what happened here, and completely unaware that Eri would be giving him plenty of opportunity to understand it later on. "Was... I supposed to move faster?"

Oddly enough, that was the exact same question Todoroki had when Eri 'got' him at breakfast. "Nope! That's how it works, I'm s'posed to pull back before you can get me, so I win!"

Aizawa would be shocked that his students' reflexes were so poor, if he didn't know they already understood how that game was played. Not honestly or fairly, but that is how the game is meant to be played with Eri. "I'm sure we'll all be experts at this game soon."

Eri is already dressed appropriately for the weather outside, but responsibly wants to make sure that the pet fish and her two plants are taken care of with Hitoshi's help while Hizashi finds a jacket and scarf. Before they leave, it's easy to see that Eri isn't entirely fond of leaving Hitoshi behind, balancing on one foot to lean against the teenager crouched to her level with a hug. "Twenny, are you gonna be on the radio with Yama?"

"No," Hitoshi answers, and though the mask still resting on his chest still obscures some of his face, Aizawa can see the small smile directed at Eri. "I'm going to stay with you, all night tonight, all day tomorrow, and all night after that, so Yamada's probably going to be pretty lonely. You should make sure he has a good time, because Byte Sound is going to bully him a lot since I'm not there."

"Oh no," Hizashi groans as he crosses the threshold of the hallway, his steps faltering as he doubles over. "No, Byte is going to be.... Eri, are you sure you wanna be cooped up in that ol' herolet dorm all night? Won't it be exciting to see my little radio station, pick all the songs I play for the whole country?"

"I wanna meet Byte!" Eri exclaims, clearly excited about the idea, and Hizashi is very excited for it too, if only because he hasn't realized that would mean his sidekick would be cooing over Eri and completely neglecting her duties all night. "But I wanna have a big sleepover with my friends, so I can't do that right now. But maybe later."

"Of course," Hizashi sighs, but he pushes down any lingering disappointment to smile with pride, glancing at Aizawa. They both know that while Eri is becoming far more confident with making decisions for herself, it's so very far from the timid little girl who would hesitate and worry, seemingly terrified of anything resembling selfishness that they knew at first. "And if we're not back in time, maybe a couple of guys could take over a very important job together. I know my favorite listener is up to the task, and it's probably time for him to have a sous chef of his own!"

The cake. Aizawa feels his blood nearly run cold, he wants to argue with his husband that he has to be back before it comes to that. This is Eri's birthday cake, and he knows that Hitoshi is up to the task. But if he's involved at all, if Hitoshi needs him to help with anything, he knows it would only end horribly. He should probably ask if Toshinori is going to be available, just to be prepared.

But Hizashi steps forward and cups Aizawa's jaw, placing a kiss on the corner of his mouth as the wards hug and say their goodbyes, just to whisper in his ear. "Just be encouraging, he's a big self-doubter, but he's got it. Not unlike someone else I know and love, at that age."

Aizawa, as a homeroom teacher, is a professional cheerleader in that way, and he feels he's far more up to that task than actually helping Hitoshi bake a cake. He's also aware that cooking and baking are two things that Hizashi not only excels at better than he does, but shares with Hitoshi in a very meaningful way, a way that he doesn't want to intrude on without invitation like that.

But, the cake draws his attention to the open-ended schedule he has now, and how to fill it. He knows that Hitoshi is starting to find some degree of tolerance for him, even if that comes with mood swings into the other direction with no warning. He knows that Hitoshi seems to be a bit more confident asking questions with the mask in place, and probably does want to toy with it. He might like to get some actual lessons with using the capture scarf too.

But, as soon as they say their farewells and Hizashi and Eri leave, he hears his own voice behind him. "What is your favorite food?"

"Pickled radish onigiri," Aizawa is forced to say, before the control over his body fades away into static noise.

*

Hitoshi takes some rice already prepared for lunch, and molds it into a triangular onigiri shape. He lays each plain onigiri on a strip of dried seaweed, with a slice of pickled radish placed in the middle, before he folds each end of the seaweed over to form a band to secure the yellow radish. Then wets the tip of his finger with water to make sure the top end of the seaweed adheres to the band.

Pickled radish onigiri.

Aizawa had to be fucking with him.

Hitoshi glares at the most disappointingly simple meal he's ever had a hand in, as long as he can tolerate it, before he drops his head with his elbows braced on the counter, considering whether he should just go limp and hope he hits his head hard enough on the way down. There's no way around Confession, and Aizawa is still on the couch, even if he's not under his control.

He can't really command someone to go to sleep, but after making Aizawa get into his sleeping bag and telling him to take deep breaths repeatedly, that string started to dip rather than fray, before it fell away completely, and Aizawa started snoring. He's still asleep, and Hitoshi knows he's not likely to wake up as long as he's silent.

And pickled radish onigiri is a meal that will keep perfectly well even if Aizawa sleeps all day, unlike actual food.

Hitoshi knows he needs to be quiet because the control is no longer holding Aizawa, but he wants to scream when he feels another vibration from his phone, another message from Monoma.

PHANTOM Thief, at least: That doesn't explain how you came to the conclusion that my father is 'a dick,' as you put it, and I am QUITE invested in learning what he did to deserve that. My holiday time is coming up and I know exactly how to ruin his favorite caviar, just a stir with the wrong spoon will do the trick.

Dearest Sweet Shinsou changed their name to Stop FUCKING calling me dearest.

Stop FUCKING calling me dearest: He's just a dick. You said he doesn't think you're going to be a hero, so he's a dick.

He just wanted to apologize, he said he was sorry about making Monoma drink pickled radish juice and threatening him, he said it was fine if Monoma didn't want to avoid him. And Monoma just kept messaging him, arguing with him that Monoma was in the wrong, which is really just a brilliant way to manipulate him into messaging him back. As if changing his name to dearest every time his attention was drawn away wasn't bad enough.

He apologized to Monoma, and Monoma seems fine now, but he's probably insane so it doesn't count. Izuku also said he still wanted to be friends with him, but Izuku also doesn't count because he's possibly more insane. Bakugo hasn't really forgiven him, but at least he's told him exactly what he has to do to earn that forgiveness, and that's to not be a raging dick and trigger him again, and that's easy enough to accomplish. That's the most believable offer of forgiveness he's gotten so far.

Forgiveness can't be just words, that's too cheap, like Bakugo said himself. It has to be like punishment, he broke a rule before it was written when he threatened to use his quirk on anyone in 1-A who looked at him and threatened to hurt Asui specifically. He has to do something more than just say he's sorry.

Hitoshi scrolls past Ashi's chat, biting his lip while he does. He's honestly a little too afraid of what she'll want as a consequence to risk it now.

He doesn't have the group chat with all of them anymore, but there are two chats he's barely used that have 1-A students in them.

27: I haven't talked to you in a while, and I know you weren't there that night, but I'm sure you've heard about it. I said that I was going to use my quirk to make anyone in 1-A reveal their deepest insecurities or hurt them physically, and I'm sorry for saying that. I'm not going to do that.

27 changed their name to Shinsou Hitoshi

Shinsou Hitoshi: It's been a really long time. I'm sorry about that too. You seem nice.

Hitoshi gives in to the urge to sit on the floor at least, the lack of typing on the other end, the things he's forcing himself to say, make him feel nauseous almost. He feels like he's under Bug's gaze, waiting for which hum or tut she'll have, the pain behind it. The worst part is the waiting.

Kouda: Oh! Thank you Shinsou! You've always seemed really nice too!

Kouda: And I'm glad that you feel differently now! I'm sure that everyone knew that you were going through a difficult time when you said that, and I hope that deleting the group chat didn't make you feel bad, because that wasn't what we were trying to do!

Kouda: We were trying to respect your boundaries, and did want to enforce our own, but I'm sure that everyone will be happy to join a new group chat with you when they hear you've changed your mind. Do you want me to pass that along?

Shinsou Hitoshi: No. I should apologize, not letting you apologize for me. I'm working on it so don't say anything.

Kouda: Okay! And I'm just curious, so you don't have to tell me, but are you comfortable with talking to people now?

Hitoshi breathed a sigh of relief, knowing there was something he could offer to make sure that this 'forgiveness' was real, that it was paid for. Even if Kouda didn't really need this information as much as Hitoshi wanted to be forgiven, it was something to make it heavier and concrete. A way to pay for what he had done.

Shinsou Hitoshi: Not really, sometimes. I have a mask to keep my quirk under control. It helps, I think. It's still weird, being able to use it anytime I talk.

Kouda: I can understand that. With my quirk, I wasn't always comfortable talking to my pets, because I didn't want to tell them what to do, on accident and all. I'm sure it felt uncomfortable to them sometimes. And with my voice, it's really annoyingly high pitched, so I like using JSL instead! So, if you did ever want to talk to me, I think using JSL is fine, so you don't have to be uncomfortable! :)

Kouda isn't specific about whether Hitoshi would feel uncomfortable talking to him, or hearing Kouda's apparently 'high pitched voice,' which he doesn't really find annoying.

Honestly, he doesn't find Kouda as unnerving as he did before, knowing this about him. A quirk so similar to his own, based on his voice but directed towards controlling animals. And while Hitoshi assumed he was just more confident about it, or didn't care about the lesser beings he controlled, that wasn't true. Kouda can feel just as uncomfortable about his quirk as Hitoshi does about his own.

Shinsou Hitoshi: Thanks.

Monoma has sent him at least three more messages, but Hitoshi ignores them, and goes to the next chat he's never used. Izuku made it for him, right after he made one for just himself, probably because he wanted to make sure that Hitoshi wouldn't make any mistakes when he tried to make friends, like Eri wanted him to.

It's still unnerving, to apologize to Izuku again, with two other hero students he's barely interacted with also reading the message he sends.

Link: I'm sorry that I threatened to use my quirk on you and hurt Asui. I'm not going to do either of those things. That would be against the rules to intentionally hurt other people, and I don't intend to break that rule.

Link: And this name doesn't fit anymore.

Kirby: ??? @Deku Sprout WHEN DID U EVEN MAKE THIS CHAT???

Kirby: And Shinsou, I accept ur apology. I hope you don't break that rule, because if u DID hurt Tsu, u would have BIG problems with me. >:(

Kirby: But u can keep ur name, as long as u behave like Princess Eri's protector.

Link: Tap to download 22kB

Link: Tap to download 22kB

Kirby: ur on less thin ice keep the pics coming.

Link: Tap to download 22kB

Kirby: I already have that 1, dont b cheap

Deku Sprout: I accept your apology too, Shinsou! I'm glad that you're using this chat now. :D

Link: Tap to download 22kB

Kirby: Vote to change this chat to Eri Picture Exchange.

Kirby: AYE

Deku Sprout: AYE @Kirby, that means you have to send Eri pictures too.

Deku Sprout: Tap to download 22kB

Metal Knight: While I am relieved to know that you no longer intend to invasively use this new dynamic of your quirk to forcibly reveal our deepest insecurities or physically harm us the way that you implied by threatening to cut out Asui's tongue the next time she tried to rescue you (and for the record, this follows the second incident of her rescuing you), the idea that the only thing stopping you from doing that is a rule against such actions does not assuage my worries completely. Are you truly regretful of your actions and the actions you threatened, or do you just want to avoid the consequences of those actions?

Kirby: Tap to download 22kB

Deku Sprout: Iida, I know that Shinsou didn't mean what he was saying, I know why he was saying that. And I don't think it's a good idea to bring up how many times Tsu rescued Shinsou. She wouldn't say that herself, like being a hero and rescuing someone entitles them to something like that.

Link: What do you want as proof?

Kirby: Iida probably wants a thank u for getting stabbed and all trying to save u, but <.< >.> I don't see it.

Metal Knight: That was not what I was asking! Of course I don't expect Shinsou to thank me for how little I was involved in rescuing him during that attack!

Link: You're right, because it's not there. I didn't ask for any of you to get involved. And the next time you do get involved like that, I will intentionally hurt you without hurting you physically or emotionally.

Deku Sprout: Shinsou, I understand that you don't want us to get hurt trying to help you, but that's our duty as heroes in training! And you could say you don't want us to get hurt instead of trying to say that you will hurt us if we do that, if that makes sense?

Kirby: ...so ur going to threaten us if we try to save ur life. Again. But u haven't figured out how to do that without breaking that rule.

Link: I'm going to figure it out.

Kirby: Give me another Eri pic

Link: Tap to download 22kB

Metal Knight: I'm further unconvinced that you do regret your actions if you want to still inflict harm on us for doing what would be not only expected, but what we would be compelled to do not only as heroes but people who care about you, and don't wish you to come to harm. Which is what caring about someone in the barest means would entail, not wishing harm upon them.

Deku Sprout: Iida, I think you're kind of misunderstanding what Shinsou means. He just doesn't want us to get hurt on his behalf, because he does care about us!

Link: You're saying that you didn't butt in to get stabbed because you're a hero, but because you cared about me, but you don't care what I want to do with my own life or how I feel about that.

Metal Knight: ??? Of course I care about your life and your feelings, Shinsou! But I don't agree with letting you get hurt! And I'm very concerned that you would rather have us stand by and watch you get attacked should that incident repeat itself?!

Link: Yes, that's what I want. Like you said, you were pointless anyway except for getting hurt, when I didn't ask you to do that.

Deku Sprout: This is kind of a complicated situation. Shinsou is kind of right that he should decide how he wants us to treat him, and I think I speak for all of us when I say that we do want to respect his wishes. But Shinsou, Iida is also right that because we care about you, we can't really be okay with watching you get hurt. I don't think that would ever happen again, so it's probably pointless to argue about it, but if anyone tried to hurt you, we couldn't just ignore it.

Link: Fine. I take back my apology, and I don't care about any of you, so stop 'caring' about me.

Kirby added Asui Tsuyu to the chat.

Kirby changed Asui Tsuyu's username to Frogger.

Kirby: >:(Take that back, and apologize to Tsu.

Link: No.

Deku Sprout: Shinsou, I know you still feel bad about what you said, and I know you're only saying that you're not because you don't want us to get hurt. But I helped and I didn't get hurt!

Link: You nearly got impaled. You nearly DIED, because you were stupid enough to jump up into the air where you wouldn't be able to control where you landed, and you wouldn't see 127 letting you fall on his sword, and that would be MY FAULT. So take your 'caring' and fuck off.

Frogger: That's understandable.

Metal Knight: ??? Asui, you don't have to be involved in this. It is NOT understandable that Shinsou would threaten and insult you specifically, and carry on like this after 'apologizing.'

Frogger: But, that is cruel, isn't it? To ignore Shinsou's feelings about this.

Frogger: Shinsou, I understand your feelings. You don't want to feel guilty about the actions of others. And it's not easy to say that you should ignore that. I still can't say that I would act any differently than I did, even knowing your feelings. But I can accept that you don't want me to do that, even if it means I won't let you get hurt, even if you hate me afterwards.

Link: And that's not any different from anyone who rented me, or forced me to do whatever they wanted. You can say you care or understand, but you don't, and you're just as low as them in the end.

Deku Sprout: That's not true! That's completely different!

Metal Knight: Ignoring your personal wishes out of care for your wellbeing is COMPLETELY different from ignoring them based on lack of care!!!

Link: It's literally not.

Frogger: You wouldn't stand by and watch if I were attacked though, would you?

Link: You're not as good as you think you are, even if you're a hero.

Kirby:BOI.

Frogger: Even if I told you not to?

Kirby:

Deku Sprout:

Metal Knight: And here lies the hypocrisy.

Link: You have no idea what you're dealing with, and I do. So I don't want you to get involved.

Frogger: That's understandable. Our first priority would be to get Aizawa-sensei and Yamada-sensei, like we did before. But as heroes, we will always be facing opponents that may be more powerful than ourselves. That's why we train so hard to be ready for them. And I would ask that you do the same, to involve our teachers first before acting.

Link: Fine. And I'm sorry for hurting you. I wasn't thinking like myself.

Kirby: GOOD.

Frogger: Apology accepted, Shinny.

Deku Sprout: We can all agree on that! :D

Metal Knight: Indeed, involving our teachers will always be the first priority, to intercede in a student-on-student incident or villain incident as they are the veteran heroes entrusted with our care! And I apologize for doubting your sincerity, Shinsou, this is a more complicated matter than I realized at first, and I should not have been so quick to judge.

Link: @Kirby, you can't call me 'Shinny,' because I gave you pictures of Eri. @Metal Knight what do you want?

Kirby: Im good with that.

Metal Knight: I don't need any evidence of your sincerity, Shinsou! I accept your apology, and that you believe in the spirit of this rule that you don't want harm to come to others!

Link: That's how it works. I broke the rule, I said I'm sorry, now I have to do something as a punishment to prove I won't do it again.

Kirby: ...punishment???

Link: I'm fine with sending pictures of Eri, because you appreciate them. And I'm fine with Asui calling me Shinny.

Frogger: You need to call me 'Tsu' from now on.

Link: Fine.

Deku Sprout: But, that's not really necessary, Shinsou! Aizawa-sensei and Mic-sensei can do that, but we can't... really. Unless it makes you feel better?

Link: Yes.

Metal Knight: Then, only for the purposes of making you feel more comfortable with our renewed friendship, I would like you to instruct me in basic knife wielding techniques, possibly at the training exercise today with Aizawa-sensei if he would allow it? I can request permission for that now.

Link: Training?

Link: Today?

Deku Sprout: Yep! We asked Aizawa-sensei to give us one more training exercise before the holiday break and internships begin!

Kirby: The girls don't have to go because we got Eri the BEST present! Aizawa-sensei told us so himself! :) :) :) (but Im still going)

Shit, Aizawa didn't say anything about that.

Hitoshi puts down his phone, looking at the pathetic radish onigiri, the most pathetic lunch he's ever seen and he might not have time to make something else. He looks at Aizawa, still sleeping, and knows he has to wake him up now, and hope that he isn't waking him up too early. Just to offer him this.

But a knock at the door makes Aizawa jolt up, before he even opens his eyes. Hitoshi knows it's not Yamada or Eri, they wouldn't knock on the door.

He checks his phone, just to confirm exactly what he didn't want to see.

Phantom Thief, your FAVORITE hero: Time is completely relative, and I know you don't like expensive gifts but I do have these things I bought for the advent calendar that you might want, right now, and a salted taro latte happened to come with my order, imagine that! Shouldn't let it go to waste, please open the door? :)

"Shinsou!" Monoma yells, before he knocks again, and Aizawa turns his head to look at him. Hitoshi really wishes he could blame that look on his face from being woken up. But the irritation that Aizawa wears with his eyes narrowed like that, jaw still slack because he was rudely awoken and it's Hitoshi's fault as much as the sleep was, that's Hitoshi's fault. And he wants to duck behind the counter and hide from it.

But he can't. "You didn't invite him," Aizawa grumbles, his voice sounds harsher than ever while he rubs at his eyes, it sounds like an accusation Hitoshi has to tell himself he doesn't fear.

Hitoshi shakes his head, staring at the couch to avoid staring at the onigiri, to avoid bringing Aizawa's attention to it. Monoma keeps knocking.

Aizawa sighs. He's angry about it. "He might give up if we're quiet," Aizawa whispers, as full of confidence in that plan as Hitoshi is. He starts unzipping the sleeping bag, practically peeling himself out of it. It's always weird to watch. "What's that?"

The stupidest idea Hitoshi has ever had, it's great that Aizawa noticed. "Your favorite meal, apparently. I don't know how you figured out how to get around Confession, but congratulations for picking something I literally can't fuck up- wha-"

Hitoshi can feel his teeth practically go numb when he barely stops himself from quirking Aizawa again, his mouth snapping shut as hard as if the mask was closing around him when he looks away. He's truly hopeless at this, if he's so irritated by the stupid way Aizawa looks at him, his stupid wide eyes and open expression like he's actually fucking impressed with rice and pickled radishes.

Hitoshi feels his shoulders are too tense, he feels that his feet are cold on the tile, he feels that his mouth is dry. If all of these little things are just too much for him now, enough to make him too irritated to withstand Aizawa just looking at him without getting worked up, then he's truly hopeless.

"That... is my favorite meal," Aizawa says, and Hitoshi refuses to look at him, even if he wants to see if Aizawa is just fucking with him, saying something that stupid but he's laughing at Hitoshi's stupidity. "And the nap?"

Hitoshi rolls his shoulders, because it's just stupid the way that Aizawa points it out. 'You like sleep.'

He's aware that he's just staring at the table, that he's avoiding Aizawa's question as though Aizawa had his quirk and could Brainwash him from his verbal answer. He doesn't know why Aizawa hasn't thought of that, to just muzzle him by making it a habit to sign to him instead of speak. "That's... very thoughtful of you."

"Shinsou! I have coffee!" Monoma screams, before he starts knocking again, as though anyone could ignore the racket he's making at this point. Hitoshi can't ignore it, he can barely think as each loud thud feels like a fist trying to beat through his chest, as Aizawa just keeps staring at him even if he doesn't see it.

Aizawa sighs, and Hitoshi sees him pull himself off the couch like he's more tired than he was before Hitoshi made him sleep.

"Just ignore him," Hitoshi says, almost a command, almost an order, but while he wants Aizawa to listen to him regardless, he also just wants Monoma to go away, without anyone having to deal with him.

"It might be good coffee," Aizawa says, and his voice sounds weird. A little too high, too loose and relaxed, like he's making a joke or he's not talking to Hitoshi. But he stops in his tracks, just to turn around and look at him, and Hitoshi can barely hear the knocking at this point. "You didn't have to do that. Making lunch, or... making me sleep."

Hitoshi knows it was weird, Aizawa doesn't have to point out how stupid it was. "Well, it's never going to happen again because it was a stupid idea, I don't know why I bothered when I'm not...."

The knocking stops. Two more raps, more quiet this time. "Shinsou?"

Goddammit, Quirk Thief probably heard him. He just screwed everything up.

Aizawa looks back at the door, more wary than he should be for such a fantastic hero that's sworn to protect him from The Miasma, when he can't even handle Monoma's annoyance. Hitoshi remembers what he said, that Aizawa isn't going to tell his students how to act around him, and that might mean he's not really going to interfere here either. "I can ask him to-"

"I've got it," Hitoshi interrupts, pulling the mask around his face and adjusting the stupid band to tighten it, and when he opens the door, Quirk Thief is smiling like a maniac. Like he's just been smiling at the door this whole time.

He looks more insane than Izuku is. "Shinsou! It's lovely to see you, I love the decorations on that mask. Do you like unicorns personally or-"

"Monoma," Hitoshi says, possibly with the mask still set to Aizawa's Persona Cord, but he's not going to stop to adjust that when he's trying to make Monoma understand this. "I'm busy, and I didn't ask you to come here."

"I... won't keep you, of course," Monoma says, the smile falling right off his face. He actually looks pathetic enough with his eyes fixed on the ground for Hitoshi to feel bad for him. "I just wanted to give you a few things, if it's not any trouble. Did you like the salted taro last time? Do you have any preferences, just for future reference, not that I'm planning to make a habit of-"

"You don't have to give me things, but you do have to stop bothering me whenever you feel like it," Hitoshi says, and tells himself he doesn't care about the way that Monoma keeps wilting. "I did like it. But I'm busy-"

"Here you go!" Monoma says, his smile is less insane but it has an insane recovery time, and suddenly Hitoshi's arms are full wads of fabric and other soft things, his free hand holding that salted taro latte. "Just a few tokens for the holidays, from your favorite hero-to-be Phantom Thief-"

Hitoshi knows how to kick a door closed, but maybe he really does need to learn how to stop opening it for strangers. Aizawa is still looking at him confused, maybe he's still groggy because he hasn't had coffee yet. Hitoshi didn't think to make coffee.

But he has a coffee, and he hands it off to Aizawa without looking at it before he drops Monoma's gifts to him on the couch. A stuffed cat that looks like Eri's cat sweater, with its oversized eyes and pastel pink and orange color scheme rolls out and onto the floor, and he bends to pick it up quickly. Almost forgetting that it's a plushie that wouldn't be insulted by falling.

But it's cute. Because Monoma is an asshole who can't get him things he can easily hate.

"Confronting Monoma about how he was bothering you probably would have worked if it wasn't...Monoma," Aizawa says, raising his hand like he's going to drink the coffee before he hesitates, holding it out to Hitoshi. He shakes his head, grateful that the mask is still on his face because this giant-eyed plushie is cuter than it has any right to be and he's sure he's blushing. "That is cute. Are you sure you don't want this-"

"Yes, I'm-" Hitoshi rolls his eyes, taking the Persona Cord setting off and switching to the digital speakers for now, because he's sure Aizawa is going to irritate him into losing his quirk control. "I don't want the coffee."

Aizawa just stares at him, before he puts the coffee down on the kotatsu, and looks at him again like he's concerned. "Hitoshi, if something is bothering you, I would like to help you with that-"

"You're-" Hitoshi starts, holding his breath until he lets it out, and he can feel the hot air hit his face from the inside of the mask. He drops the plushie on top of the pile, rubbing the back of his neck because he doesn't want to explain this. "I'm an asshole. I've been trying to not be an asshole, because I don't hate you, but you're....just...."

Aizawa has been asleep for most of the time he's been annoying Hitoshi, asleep because Hitoshi made him sleep. And when he woke up, just looking at him was enough to annoy him, and despite getting irritated with him Aizawa thanked him for making lunch and tried to deal with Monoma for him. And he's worried because Hitoshi is acting like he's crazy.

"I'm just an asshole!" Hitoshi yells, throwing his hands up in the air because he shouldn't have tried. The lunch, the nap, the coffee, he can do those things but it means nothing in the end, because he's still just a jerk to Aizawa.

"You're not an 'asshole,' and I never thought you were one," Aizawa says, because he can lie, because he can say he doesn't care that Hitoshi is an asshole or that he just yelled at him, because his stupid face never fucking changes. "I... appreciate that you're trying to make amends for what you think was out of line, but it's not necessary, especially if it's bothering you."

"What does that even mean!?" Hitoshi yells, and he can feel the divide between what he says and what he hears through the speakers clearer than ever, more than he can feel his arms stretching out just to fall, because there's no sign to convey how this doesn't make any sense. "I don't even like acting like this, I don't know what it is about your face, but I hate it, I hate acting like this and I can't stop, and you're just...."

Aizawa is literally the worst person that Hitoshi has ever met, because he just looks at the onigiri sitting on the table, like Hitoshi isn't boiling out from under his skin and suffering under a torture he can't even blame on Aizawa. "Have you eaten yet?"

He's not like this because he's hungry, or because he's tired, he's just an asshole and he wants to stop. But he follows Aizawa to the table, sitting across from him because he can't stand to be that close, and tries not to glare at how stupidly impressed Aizawa looks when he picks up the first onigiri and it doesn't fall to pieces.

“I’ve never been a good cook, and my mother never helped me with that. When I started living on my own, this was pretty much the only meal I could make for myself. Onigiri, with premade fillings. Pickled radish was always my favorite,” Aizawa rambles, before he finally takes a bite. Hitoshi probably shouldn’t care what he thinks about it, he knows it’s impossible to fuck up rice and a pickled radish. But maybe Aizawa chopped the radish up to mix into the rice, maybe he prefers to have it on the inside. As an actual filling. “It’s good.”

“It’s rice,” Hitoshi corrects. “It’s just rice, you haven’t eaten the seaweed or radish yet. That’s so bland.”

Aizawa just shrugs, and it’s so weird how he looks like a different person when he seems so loose and relaxed. How his stupid eyes look brighter with sleep. “Hizashi has been offended by my eating habits since I met him, probably for the same reason. I think he was going to give up entirely before Eri came here. This definitely wouldn’t count as a meal for her.”

“I was going to make something else, but Iida said you had training, so I didn’t have time. And Monoma,” Hitoshi says, maybe explaining. He crosses his arms over the table, and he shouldn’t just keep staring at Aizawa eating, but he can’t take the mask off to eat if Aizawa keeps talking to him. “You can just say that you hate it. It’s just rice, it’s not even food.”

“It’s my favorite,” Aizawa says, shrugging again. He just really doesn’t give a shit, does he? “You made it better than I could have. The seaweed always fell apart as soon as I picked it up.”

“That’s just water, and being careful about how-” Hitoshi braces his forehead with his hands, because he doesn’t want to argue about how to make the worst onigiri ever imagined with Aizawa. “What is it with you that just... makes me like this?”

Aizawa has finally taken a bite of the radish, the only actual flavor in the onigiri, and he just looks at Hitoshi like he always does. Just looking. “That’s something that you know better than I do. But I can imagine that you haven’t always been comfortable around me. And that a lot of things that I’ve done have been hurtful, especially with the investigation.”

That word just sinks like lead in the silence that follows, an accusation hitting its mark. Hitoshi can’t even move, he can’t even argue or be angry with Aizawa for saying it, no matter how much he wants to. Because he’s right.

He used to be terrified of Aizawa. More than once, he imagined the look of fury on Aizawa’s face before he would raise his fist, before he’d use his capture scarf to end him. More than once, he was convinced that was going to happen in seconds, Aizawa was just going to beat him or kill him or worse, because he could, because he owned him.

But even when Hitoshi realized that wasn’t true, that Aizawa didn’t own him, after he started to doubt that Aizawa would ever do that to him, he was terrified because he knew Aizawa wouldn’t care about him the same way Yamada did. Aizawa’s impassive and blank face would never change, Yamada could say he would stay after the investigation, but Aizawa would never want to keep him.

It would be kinder if Aizawa just hated him, instead of not caring. If there was something to blame other than his passivity, something Hitoshi could pin on himself. But there’s nothing. And even when Aizawa says he cares, believes he cares enough to pass that Brainwashing test, he’ll never care enough.

Even if he’s angry about that, even if it’s worse that Aizawa cares and still doesn’t want to waste his time with him after his usefulness is fulfilled and his time here is over, there’s nothing for it.

His anger won't change Aizawa's mind, because nothing will. It's just wasting his own time, because if this is the most peace he'll ever find in this life, he doesn't want to spend it fighting with Aizawa. Especially when he isn't the worst sometimes.

"And I am sorry for that," Aizawa says, looking at the table with his empty hands loosely folded in front of him. Aizawa looks ashamed, and it burns to see it worse than those words do. "I never intended to make you uncomfortable here, and your wardship should have never been like this. I would have never pressured you, or questioned you about that woman, if I knew, and you should have never had to see Chisaki-"

"Stop," Hitoshi says, the word passes like less than air because he doesn't want to be here, he doesn't want to hear Aizawa talking like that. He doesn't have to say things that Hitoshi already knows. "I know that. I know you were trying to stop it. Protect me. Whatever."

He can't stand to look at Aizawa's eyes, he has to press his thumb against his opposite wrist just to make sure that he feels something, that it's not like it was before. That he's not going Away, dissociating. He just feels so numb that he feels too much, but it's a calm enough place for him to talk about it. He finds the words too easy.

"I know what you were trying to do, and I'm not mad about that. There's no reason why I'm mad, and I just want to be over it," Hitoshi says, that part is easy at least. The words lingering on his tongue still taste bitter for their truth. "You're not... the worst person I've ever met. And I don't want to waste my time fighting with you."

The corner of Aizawa's lip twitches before he glances at the wall, before he looks too pleased with that, and that really makes him look stupid. "If it's any consolation, I have to deal with Bakugo on a regular basis. Even at your worst behavior, I'd prefer you over Bakugo's average."

Hitoshi probably shouldn't take that as inspiration, even if a small part of him does. There's a small dial on his left that switches through saved Persona Cords, next to the button that turns digital mode on or off. Below the button, there are dials for adjusting pitch or how rough his voice sounds, with pressure adjusting on his nose or throat respectively. He picks Aizawa's Persona Cord, then turns the pitch up. "Die."

Aizawa huffs, like Hitoshi either punched him or he attempted to laugh, before he picks up another onigiri to eat. "A little too high, and not loud enough."

Hitoshi rolls his eyes, because it does take time to adjust it the right way. Aizawa's Persona Cord was easy enough, and Yamada helped him fine tune it. Yamada seemed to be too busy smiling, almost forgetting to tell him what needed to be adjusted when they worked on his Persona Cord. "Oi, Shitsei, I'm going to make you eat those words, then I'm going to nag until you sleep properly, for 8 fucking hours, asshole."

Aizawa hums, chewing before he offers his criticism. "I feel like you're going to make me regret that. But the pitch is perfect."

"Probably," Hitoshi answers, in Bakugo's voice as he saves the Persona Cord setting by pushing the dial in until it clicks and pops back out. Then he twists until he finds another Persona Cord he's not sure about. "You didn't tell me when you have training, and Uraraka said she's going too, even though the girls got the best present for Eri."

Aizawa looks more unnerved by Izuku's Persona Cord than he did with Bakugo's. He just stares for too long, before he drops his head and sighs. "That's spot on for Midoriya. Training isn't for a few hours, so we could either start on Eri's cake before or after that-"

“Cake?” Hitoshi asks, sure that he got the nervousness just right for Izuku before he switches the Persona Cords off. “Yamada can’t...”

Of course he can’t, Hitoshi forgot but Yamada leaves for his radio show before they have to go to the 1-A dorm, and when he comes back with Eri, Eri will be here and it won’t be a surprise. She’ll want to help make her own birthday cake, and she shouldn’t have to lift a finger to enjoy it. “If you would rather wait, he might come back in time to do that. I know you would prefer to make it with him.”

Instead of Aizawa, he probably means, but not for the reasons that Aizawa seems to think it is. Hitoshi just knows he’ll mess it up, he’ll ruin Eri’s birthday cake, but Yamada is a good enough cook to keep him from doing that. Aizawa doesn’t cook, he’ll be useless to stop him from burning it, or using the wrong ingredient or measurement, or forgetting to butter the pan.

But, it’s useless to worry about that now. Yamada won’t have time before he goes to his radio show, Eri will know if they try to make it after she gets back. Hitoshi has to do this, or at least try.

Maybe Aizawa can keep him from fucking it up. “I’ll... pull up the recipes.”

*

Aizawa tucks another strand of hair that’s fallen from his ponytail behind his ear, before he turns back to the most important task he will probably undertake today.

“‘Add two tablespoons of milk,’” Aizawa reads, pointedly reading off the recipe Hitoshi wrote down. At first it seemed to be because he didn’t want to worry with his phone during this process, but now Aizawa knows it’s because he wanted to go over the recipe as many times as possible before following it.

And so, Aizawa tries to help him with that. As has become habit for every single step of this process, Aizawa takes the already-measured portion of milk, pouring it into a tablespoon to make sure that it’s actually two tablespoons, into another saucer, while Hitoshi watches, still operating the mixer that’s beaten the butter to fluff, with confectioner’s sugar and vanilla extract already added.

And Aizawa watches as Hitoshi takes the tablespoon from him, just to measure that miniscule amount of milk again. Just to be sure before he adds it.

The worst part about Hizashi pointing out that Hitoshi is ‘a big self-doubter, not unlike someone else at that age,’ is that Hizashi couldn’t be more right, except in every way that he’s wrong. In every single hesitation and obsessive check of the recipe before Hitoshi acts to follow through on it, Aizawa sees a perfect mirror of himself at 16. There’s terror, and then there’s fear of failure, and Aizawa doubts that he would have been able to graduate from UA if he didn’t consider his fear of dying to be less than that fear of failing to live up to his own expectations.

But despite how Hizashi so clearly sees the similarities, Aizawa sees the biggest difference between himself and Hitoshi. Aizawa would never have attempted to make this cake, despite all the second guesses and how simple it seems to be on the surface. He would have run away from the task, like he did with so many other obligations with friends with a callous shield on the surface, because he would have been terrified of messing up with something so meaningful.

Hitoshi, for all his obvious fears of doing the same, is far braver for the attempt at it.

And Aizawa knows his confidence was probably rattled when they both forgot to butter the first cake pan, giving a logical reason for second, third, and fourth guesses. But as Hitoshi lifts the beater to put the finished buttercream icing in the refrigerator, they're nearing the end of it. And the timer on his phone alerts them to the first test as to whether these efforts will pay off with an edible cake.

Aizawa is at least capable of using a toothpick to check that both layers of cake have finished baking, but he allows Hitoshi to take control in any place he feels somewhat confident to. Aizawa is a homeroom teacher, and thus a professional cheerleader, and not a good enough cook to compare to Hitoshi's talents, as well-honed as they are with only a few months of practice.

Aizawa sees the hesitation before Hitoshi closes the oven door again, still looking at the toothpicks. Aizawa wishes that he was at least qualified enough to see what he's worried about. "Five... minutes," Hitoshi mutters, and Aizawa dutifully sets a timer.

But he's not blind to the frustrated way the purple haired teenager tosses the toothpicks in the trash, looking around the kitchen with his hand curled over the back of his head. Aizawa imagines that Hitoshi hadn't prepared for the cake not being done in the time the recipe called for. "The oven might be a little slow. It's easier to correct an underbaked rather than overbaked cake. It's good that you caught that."

Hitoshi sighs in further frustration, now worked up to pacing, disguised as taking each beater from the mixer into the sink, one at a time. "It's supposed to be golden brown on top and the toothpick is supposed to come out clean, but it's done on top and not inside, and the other one- it's not going to stack like it's supposed to, it's all... dome-y."

"We can just cut the dome part off, to make sure it stacks. And that will make sure it's baked all the way through," Aizawa says, his hand reaching for the recipe to check it, but he's somewhat sure that's right. It sounds logical enough. "Did you taste the buttercream?"

Hitoshi takes a step with his hand raised towards the sink, where the used beaters are, before he decides to grab a clean spoon from the drawer and nearly sprint those two steps back to the refrigerator. Aizawa is beginning to think that cake baking should be a more physical activity, if only to siphon off some of Hitoshi's nervous energy.

Hitoshi isn't closing the door after he tastes it. That's decidedly not a good sign. "Want me to try?"

Hitoshi doesn't answer, but opening the door further with a pleading look and the tip of the spoon still in his mouth is enough of a sign. Aizawa gathers a bit on the edge on his finger, and he's sure the grainy texture at first is just a bit of sugar and butter that hadn't mixed, the rest of it is smooth and sweet and everything they wanted from this icing.

"It's fine. Good," Aizawa corrects, too late.

"Is it fine, or is it good?" Hitoshi asks, adjusting the mask back on his face for good measure. Aizawa doesn't know how Hizashi can see the similarities between Aizawa and the teenager in front of him, when the sinking feeling in his gut from that question is so very familiar. He has the same tone that Hizashi does when he asks that kind of question. "I don't know how this is supposed to taste! I've only had it with the cupcakes, and I don't know if it's the same! Is it the same?!"

"Yes," Aizawa answers, before he even registers the question. It's a habit that has served him poorly at times with questions similar to these, posed by Hizashi. "It's exactly like it's supposed to be. You followed the recipe. Hizashi can confirm it for you when he gets back."

"That's going to be too late, because Eri will be back, and we have to get the cake ready before then,” Hitoshi grouses, running a hand through his hair when he turns to toss the spoon in the sink. “Are you sure that it’s right?”

“Yes,” Aizawa says, and he knows why he answers before thinking, as his body falls out of his control in the haze that clouds his mind. Hitoshi must have turned the mask’s speakers off, and he has a feeling that it was intentional. And he has a suspicion that Hitoshi doesn’t just want an honest answer he can trust, proven in short order.

“Take out your phone, and put it on the counter,” Hitoshi orders, and Aizawa feels the barest impression of his pocket on the back of his hand before it falls away, he knows that his phone is where Hitoshi wants it even if he can’t look down, still staring at the teenager who moves to take it. Only to hold it up, showing Aizawa’s lockscreen. “Unlock your phone.”

The static becomes painful this time, and Aizawa remembers what Dr. Tenma said, that Hitoshi’s quirk was at no risk for Mental Quirk Abuse Syndrome, but Confession makes it higher. And he’s reasonably sure that these orders that his body doesn’t want to obey aren’t exactly good for him with repetition.

But, the static fades when Hitoshi speaks again. “Show me how you unlock your phone.” For some reason, just lowering the phone and changing the words used draws Aizawa’s hand to comply with it. With a few swipes of his finger, the plain black screen changes to his background, the picture of himself, his husband, and both wards at Shichi-Go-San currently, but Hizashi set it up to change with a slideshow, pictures of his husband and Eri are the most common given how few he has of Hitoshi.

Hitoshi looks at his phone, and Aizawa can’t see what he’s doing, even if he begins to get an idea when Hitoshi starts adjusting part of his mask again. He sees him jolt when he tries to raise the phone to his ear, covered by part of the mask, before he selects to use the speakerphone option.

And Aizawa can’t understand the words, but he knows from the voice that it’s Toshinori. It’s disorienting, that no matter how hard he tries to understand what Toshinori is saying, he can only hear his voice but not words.

“No, everything is fine,” Hitoshi says, with Aizawa’s voice. The little shit. “Hitoshi and I are baking Eri’s cake for tomorrow, and since you’re far better at that-” Aizawa can hear excitement, nervous humility, and nothing else from Toshinori’s voice. “That would be illogical, and unnecessary. I just wanted to ask for your advice, because the cake layers are domed on the top, and the toothpick didn’t come clean when we checked.” Toshinori’s voice changes to the same way he corrects a student with boundless sympathy for a very stupid mistake, bordering on the very edge of condescension. “Thank you, that makes more sense than cutting it. And I’m not sure how the icing is supposed to taste. It’s sweet, and consistent, but I’m... not sure.”

Toshinori will now be convinced that Aizawa doesn’t know what icing is supposed to taste like. He’s also going to think that Aizawa just says things like ‘thank you’ at the slightest gesture of kindness.

He wishes he could be more irritated by the ‘illogical and unnecessary,’ even if he knows that’s nearly spot on for an impression of himself. “Yes, I’m not sure if I thanked you for that, but those cupcakes are my favorite, and it really made my birthday special to receive them from you.”

Aizawa is going to have to make a rule about this. He’s absolutely sure that Hitoshi is doing this on purpose now, instead of genuinely feeling that grateful for Toshinori’s advice.

“Thank you for your help, I hope that this icing turns out as well as you make it. No, that’s unnecessary and illogical. Toshinori-”

He hears the smallest and anxiety-riddled ‘fuck’ he’s ever heard, disturbingly in his own voice, before he feels his phone going back into his pocket.

Before he feels Hitoshi’s mask hitting his shoulder just right to knock the haze out of his mind, with his memory intact this time. “I didn’t agree to Toshinori coming here.”

Aizawa turns his head to see clear panic, clear guilt at a fortunately normal teenage level. Hitoshi’s violet eyes are wide above that black mask, but they soon narrow as his hands fly up. “I didn’t- I didn’t want him to come here, he just-”

The timer to check the cake goes off on Aizawa’s phone, and along with it, there’s a knock on the door. Aizawa can dismiss one of them with a swipe of his thumb, but he ignores the frustrated teenager to answer the door and deal with the other one. “Toshinori.”

Toshinori honestly looks too pleased to be here, smiling like he’s just seen a student have a breakthrough in their training, and that only makes it harder to stick to his resolve that Aizawa and Hitoshi can do this without his help. “Young Aizawa, it really is no trouble! I’m sure that it will help to have a second opinion with how much this means to little Eri, even if I’m also sure there’s nothing to worry about.”

Aizawa looks over his shoulder to see a teenager hunched over the countertop, his elbows supporting his weight with his arms crossed, and he looks like he very much wants Aizawa to dismiss Toshinori than to explain everything. But there’s something to be said about natural consequences to poor decisions. “A third opinion is exactly what we need, to make sure there’s nothing to worry about.”

Toshinori starts shedding his jacket as soon as he crosses the threshold, brushing his hair behind his ears like it’s a habit associated with his current hobby of baking. Not that there is anything left to bake. “Young Shinsou, it seems that you’ve been hard at work to help young Aizawa!”

Toshinori would of course comment on the streak of flour that somehow worked into Hitoshi’s hair, before commenting on the mask. Given that Midoriya and Toshinori are inclined to keep all sorts of secrets to themselves, Toshinori might already know exactly how and why the mask came about, given that Midoriya was the driving force for that Support Department studio trip. “Thank you, I’ve-”

Hitoshi pushes himself up to stand before he adjusts the mask again, too late to take Aizawa’s voice impersonation off of it. And with that, the cat seems to be out of the bag, even if Toshinori seems confused that there was a cat in any bag before he came here. “He’s been hard at work, learning how to impersonate me over the phone. Which we will have a talk about so this doesn’t happen in the future.”

Toshinori, to his credit, just laughs, and despite all the ways the man has changed after Kamino Ward, how his body has withered away, his laugh has always rung out as strongly as All Might’s. “It was very convincing! Imitation can really be the sincerest form of flattery. I think young Midoriya’s impression of myself is better than some professionals that I’ve seen.”

Aizawa agrees, although he wishes that he could have fallen asleep during that homeroom session where Midoriya attempted to teach Todoroki how to do it so he wouldn’t have the memory to haunt him. “We’re not sure about the icing, and the cake might be done at this-”

Hitoshi turns to open the oven door in a panic, terrified that baking a minute after the five minute timer has reduced the cake to ash. He has to turn and dive for the box of toothpicks to check it, but Aizawa can see that the cakes don't seem to be different. They're still 'dome-y,' the primary source of Hitoshi's worries. "Ah, it looks like things are coming along quite well!"

Hitoshi casts a look of disbelief at Toshinori, before looking at the toothpicks again, his eyes crossing a bit as he examines them before holding them up to the taller hero. "They're not clean, so it's not done. But it looks done."

"That's quite normal, actually. Just a few crumbs will always stick, but I know from experience that when it's completely clean, the cake is actually quite dry," Toshinori says, which is the perfect way to inspire Hitoshi to nearly grab the pans out of the oven with his bare hands before Aizawa calls out to him to wait, and tosses the oven mitts to him. Toshinori is completely unaware it seems, welcoming himself to wash his hands in the sink in preparation. "And there are two methods of evening out the top of the cake. You can either cut the top off with a breadknife, which is best to check if the cake is still moist by sampling a bit, or laying it on a flat surface upside down, so that it flattens itself. I think the flattening trick works better to keep it from being too crumbly when sliced."

Aizawa looks at Hitoshi as he seems to realize at the same time that Aizawa does, that the flattening method will have to do the trick. Since the breadknife is still in Hitoshi's stash after being burnt when Hitoshi tried to get rid of that tattoo in the middle of the night, at the beginning of his wardship.

"I don't want it to fall apart at Eri's birthday," Hitoshi mutters, almost to himself, but sheepish and full enough of self-doubt to ring in both teacher's ears.

"I'm sure it won't, young Shinsou!" Toshinori reassures, baselessly, which Aizawa knows truly doesn't work for Hitoshi. Hitoshi never believes anything without proof, and a great deal of it, especially in any way that concerns Eri.

Aizawa finds a pizza pan large enough to accommodate both layers of the cake, and Hitoshi flips them on top of it with the pan still attached. Aizawa can only hope that's the right method, as any correction at this point might lead to Hitoshi lashing out, and he doesn't know if Toshinori could withstand it given his current perception of his ward.

"It smells very nice! Is it a cinnamon marble?" Toshinori asks, and Hitoshi nods, while Aizawa can't decide whether Hitoshi is acting so reserved now out of sincere gratitude towards Toshinori, or if his anxiety about this cake is reaching a rolling boil underneath the surface. "That's a nice, simple recipe to follow. And I wouldn't be mistaken that it pairs well with apples, would I?"

Hitoshi nods, causing Toshinori to chuckle. "It's a cinnamon cake, with vanilla buttercream icing, and glazed apples on top, but the apples won't be ready for another hour," Hitoshi explains, more sedately than he's said anything since Hizashi and Eri left, which only becomes more obvious to Aizawa the more his ward's attention is focused on Toshinori, who nods along with almost condescending focus.

"I haven't tried it myself, but that sounds like a winning combination! And the icing is resting in the refrigerator?" Toshinori asks, inviting himself to open it as soon as Hitoshi nods, immediately moving to grab a spoon for him, but Toshinori just shakes his head. "I can tell just by looking at it that it is the perfect consistency. And it should smell..." Toshinori has to duck his head, pulling the bowl out to smell whatever the icing is supposed to smell like. "Exactly like that! The vanilla can offset a bit of the sweetness in the apple glaze and balance out the cinnamon. But, I'm afraid if you wanted a taste-tester, young Aizawa and you would have to do it. I've been scolded about going beyond my dietary limits a few times, I'm afraid."

Aizawa can only guess whether Midoriya, Bakugo, or Recovery Girl finally took up the charge to pester the retired hero about taking care of his health, but he wouldn't be surprised if they took turns. Or if Midoriya made them a schedule to do it.

"I don't know what it's supposed to taste like, and Aizawa just said it's 'good,' and it's 'fine,' but that's not good enough," Hitoshi says, and Aizawa isn't blind that all the frustration that was missing builds up again once he's mentioned in conversation, from Hitoshi's explanation of events. And he knows it shouldn't unsettle him, when he knows exactly why that is.

"You should know that young Aizawa doesn't give out such compliments lightly, young Shinsou," Toshinori says, almost playfully scolding as he sets the icing bowl back in its place before closing the door. "I believe it was young Kaminari who worked out a scale- not that it was meant to be mocking!"

Toshinori seems flustered at the prospect that Aizawa could be offended by that, which he isn't. And the 'Aizawa-sensei Compliment Scale' is not exactly a secret when Kaminari happens to turn in either the copy or a copy of it in the middle of his essay. "Go on."

But that doesn't mean that Aizawa can let Toshinori know that he's not offended, when the opportunity is right there to make him a bit more nervous. "I forget the specifics of it, but young Aizawa doesn't have a habit of saying anything he doesn't mean sincerely when it comes to constructive criticism. 'Good,' I think, translated to 'show-stopping, spectacular, and never the same,' if I remember correctly."

There was a much longer translation that was wholly exaggerated, but Toshinori is right at least that Aizawa doesn't hand out baseless praise. Unlike some of his coworkers.

And Hitoshi looks wholly skeptical with a raised eyebrow. "It's not that good."

If Aizawa didn't know any better, he would think that Toshinori just conducted a masterful play in forcing Hitoshi to admit that the icing was good. If only out of petty spite and his incessant need to argue with Aizawa.

"If young Aizawa says that it's good, I'm completely convinced that it is, young Shinsou," Toshinori says with a conspiratorial wink, something that honestly doesn't suit a man of his age. "Now, I'm a little curious about the glazed apples. Did you decide to go with chunks or rings?"

"Slices," Hitoshi says, moving to pull the cover off of the slow cooker on the counter, the cinnamon and sugar smell becoming potent as he does, and Toshinori leans in to inspect it. Hitoshi does not go into detail about how painstakingly thin each slice had to be, how Aizawa had to intervene a few times before Hitoshi nearly broke down into frustrated tears about how each slice had to be thin in the exact same way.

"Oh, you might want to test one now, the thin slices should cook quicker than a chunky pie filling," Toshinori says, completely clueless to the heart attack Aizawa can see clearly before Hitoshi grabs a fork and doesn't wait long enough for a slice to cool. Like Aizawa knew he wouldn't. "Oh, that's not-"

"Fine," Hitoshi squeaks, a hand pressed against his mouth and his eyes watering because he's not fine, at all, and hasn't been since they started making this cake. But his first priority is to turn the slow cooker off before he moves to the sink to treat his burnt tongue with a handful of water. Aizawa grabs a cup to fill with ice and water and hopes it's more effective. Hitoshi still glares at him like it was his fault he ate an apple slice still steaming hot. "It's done, so I'm glad you mentioned that."

Toshinori only looks a little uncomfortable with Hitoshi once again diving face first into an opportunity to injure himself, and Aizawa knows why that's not shocking to Midoriya's unofficial mentor. "I suppose it wouldn't help at all to tell you that there's nothing to worry about."

Honestly, if there is a single thing wrong with this cake, Hitoshi might kill Aizawa. Aizawa is far past the point of fearing that Hitoshi will cry, or he'll withdraw into his room or even the vents until he accepts that Eri's birthday cake won't be perfect. Hitoshi will probably just kill him for basically doing nothing more than slicing apples, measuring things that Hitoshi measures after him, and reading the recipes to him, while Hitoshi does everything else.

But when Hitoshi winces after taking a sip, wiping the corner of his eye, it's not the waning glare that nearly breaks Aizawa. It's the sullenness in Hitoshi's face that breaks into utter despair when he looks at the sink, full of cast-off utensils and measuring instruments and bowls, everything that was put into this cake that just needs to be assembled, and there's nothing else to do after that. If this cake doesn't live up to Hitoshi's expectations, if he fails here, Aizawa knows it would be difficult for him to recover from that blow.

Hitoshi is so far gone into that thought, he doesn't react at all when Aizawa places a hand on his shoulder, meant to reassure and convey that everything would be alright. Aizawa would make it alright. "How long should we wait for the cakes to flatten out?"

"Let's see," Toshinori mutters, pulling the ceramic bowl inside the slow cooker out and onto the counter before he moves to inspect the cake pans. "With a little press, and a twist- ah, it's sticking a bit to the pan, but we can loosen them with a butter knife."

Toshinori grabs a butter knife from the drawer for the layer he's picked, but Aizawa knows his tanto knife is clean and sterile, and will do the job. He glances to make sure Toshinori isn't actually cutting the cake, just running the blade around the edges, and when Toshinori flips his pan over again, it falls out easily, but he raises a hand before Aizawa can test his.

"Oh, do you have a sheet of parchment paper? It's a bit easier to transfer onto the serving dish, and icing can be a bit messy," Toshinori says, luckily not the same way he'd correct a student, but Hitoshi seems to be knocked out of his stupor enough to grab that paper.

They don't have a serving dish, and Aizawa wonders if Eri should pick it herself out of the many plates that might be large enough, but soon enough there are enough sheets of parchment paper on a smaller pan for the layers to be stacked with a somewhat messy spread of icing between them, then trimmed under Toshinori's instruction. By Aizawa, despite Hitoshi's silent offer when he raised his hand to take the knife, as he didn't argue when Aizawa took on the task.

"It's best to start on the side, then move to the top. It will take some time to shape it properly, but I think a messy texture still looks nice. Floral, if it's done right," Toshinori says, and with the icing bowl between Hitoshi and Aizawa, he seems content to let them take on the task. Toshinori might have become that reassuring cheerleader for both of them, as Aizawa becomes keenly aware that the cake and icing is shaping well so far, but a slip of the knife could mean a slice in the cake that isn't meant to be there. A superficial imperfection that literally no one outside this room would ever know, but would still devastate Hitoshi all the same.

Aizawa becomes more aware of that as Hitoshi seems to participate less and less in covering this cake with frosting, but Aizawa tries to focus on creating a smooth top for the glazed apple slices to lay on. If he flicks the knife a certain way on the sides, the thick icing almost looks like flower petals, like Toshinori said. And Eri's bright smile when she compared the feeling of controlling her quirk to a blooming flower is enough inspiration to want to make it perfect.

“Young Aizawa, I think you might have a natural talent for cake decorating,” Toshinori praises, and it’s so saccharine yet still genuine that Aizawa instinctively bristles at it, almost wants to take the bait to say that Toshinori thinks he needs to be reassured like a student would. “I think the glazed apples have cooled enough not to melt the icing, if you’d like to try.”

The icing bowl is exchanged for the heavy ceramic bowl of glazed apples, butter knives for chopsticks to place the slices just so. Despite Toshinori’s impression of his skills, Aizawa knows his husband would be far better at this, and since Hitoshi has spent more time learning from him than Aizawa has, he’s the best option available.

“It should be like this,” Hitoshi says, putting his phone down with an image of an extravagantly intricate design, clearly the work of a professional, which they aren’t. The slices start to fan out from the center, layered exactly the same way to catch the edge of the next slice, to make a perfect swirl that looks like a flower blooming.

This cake will not look anything like that, and Aizawa knows it. He knows Hitoshi doesn’t, because the teenager can’t fathom failing to provide Eri anything less than perfect on her birthday.

“You start on the outside to make the first circle, then just keep building after that,” Hitoshi says, and Aizawa notes that there’s nothing but calm explanation in his voice, which Aizawa can only read as the clearest panic at this point. And that panic starts to rise in the slight pitch in his voice as he continues. “It said that eight apples were enough for a 33 centimeter pan, and I used ten, so we should have enough to cover it even if we mess up a few, as long as it’s not too many.”

“Could use the leftovers to decorate the plate, like Hizashi would,” Aizawa says, committing to the confidence in those words as soon as they leave his mouth. Hitoshi has prepared for mistakes, and that means that Aizawa won’t give him any mistakes. They’re going to decorate this cake as well as a professional would, even if it’s impossible.

As much as it seems like a simple, almost mind-numbing task, it’s not. Aizawa knows that each slice has to be handled gently, placed exactly so as not to ruin the icing. There are still enough fumbles and near-misses to almost send him back into the mindset of being on a patrol in a seedy area, both he and Hitoshi have to nearly dance with each other to lean down close enough to the cake, to grab another slice, to avoid bumping into the cake again. The icing on the side can be reshaped, but Aizawa is starting to think the ‘texture’ that comes as a result of his hand brushing the edge and smearing could be passed off as intentional.

Toshinori just cheerleads, counting down each circle as it’s made, and at least those signs of impending completion start to come quicker as the circles become smaller. Aizawa honestly starts to believe this might result in something passably similar to the picture Hitoshi selected as inspiration.

And when there’s just two slices left to place, two that stand upright in the center of the bloom, Aizawa stands back to give Hitoshi the honors and the space. And he’s honestly too relieved to see something that looks good on top of the iced and smeared parchment paper.

Hitoshi places one slice, adjusting and waiting for it to fall, before he stands it up again, finally working the glaze to the point that it’s thick enough to hold the slice like glue, which might have been the unintended trick to it. But then, he stands back, looking expectantly at Aizawa. “You need to do the other one.”

Aizawa tilts his head, not sure if he heard Hitoshi correctly. This is the last step they can take to make this cake, Hitoshi has done everything thus far, and he should have the memory of putting on that last touch like an intangible trophy for his accomplishment.

“You helped,” Hitoshi argues, short and completely half-heartedly, before he seems to gather the energy to glare at him for emphasis. “Don’t say you’re too lazy to do this for Eri.”

Toshinori, damn him, laughs even if he tries to pass it off as a cough when Aizawa looks at him, but without the blood spurt, the cough is not convincing. Aizawa just sighs, bracing himself on the counter with his freehand and unable to breathe as he tries to make this thin slice of apple stand up on its own, without knocking Hitoshi’s slice down. The syrupy glaze starts to slough off to the bottom of the slice to stabilize it, and finally when Aizawa lets go.

He takes a deep breath, and marvels at what Hitoshi’s high expectations and hard work have brought them. Aizawa doubts they could find any better from a cake shop without a very steep price tag. “It looks wonderful! And I think it’s time for a bit of a taste test.”

Aizawa’s knife is on the counter, and he would use it against Toshinori if he tried cutting this cake right now, but when he looks, Toshinori presents him with part of the cake trimming, topped with icing and decorated with a single glazed apple slice on each miniature cake. Two bite sized cakes made from cast offs and scraps, that will hopefully put Hitoshi’s worries to rest, and Toshinori beams like they already have.

Aizawa passes one to Hitoshi before taking a bite, trying to clear his mind of any expectations to offer the most impartial judgement. Since it’s made with trimmings from the edge, there’s more crust than would be from an actual slice, but the cinnamon isn’t too strong from either the cake or the glaze, the apple is barely tart and melts on his tongue, and the icing seems to balance and blend it together. It is good. Very good. “It’s perfect. Eri will be very happy with this.”

Aizawa looks to see Hitoshi’s reaction, only to see him pulling the mask back on his face, looking at the cake before glancing at the table, refusing to look at Aizawa. “It’s... like it’s supposed to be?”

“I think it’s beyond what it’s supposed to be, if young Aizawa claims that it’s perfect,” Toshinori says, once again feeling the need to translate what Aizawa says plainly. “I can’t imagine Eri being unhappy with this cake, knowing that it was made with so much care, and if it tastes good to you, then the proof is in the pudding!”

There’s something about what Toshinori said that seems to stir up Hitoshi’s worries again, as he rubs the back of his neck, still staring at the cake like it’s likely to explode. “I don’t like things that are sweet, and I know that Eri does, so I can’t really tell. But, it tastes good?”

“It does,” Aizawa answers, almost waiting for Hitoshi’s quirk to settle over him, but it doesn’t.

For some reason, Hitoshi has decided to trust his word this time, possibly because of all the other evidence available to prove it. The fear and anxiety finally quiets, finally melts with acceptance that this is enough, and it’s done, as Hitoshi’s hand and shoulders fall, his sigh audible behind the mask.

The streak of flour still in his hair, and Aizawa probably shouldn’t be so amused by it. “We still have some time before training, if you want to wash that out.”

Hitoshi raises his hand to the streak when Aizawa points out where it is on his own head, rolling his eyes when he feels it. “Why does this always... and you didn’t say anything!”

Aizawa doesn’t have a scarf or a drink to hide his smirk, as his ward seems very embarrassed that Toshinori has seen him so ‘indisposed,’ after the kid did instigate him coming here. He can add ‘irrational worries about the appearance of his hair’ to a growing list of traits that Hitoshi shares with Hizashi. Toshinori laughs, which probably doesn't bode well for Hitoshi recovering from this. "It's another sign of a well-made cake, if the baker is a bit messy in the end! But I'm sure you know there's nothing to worry about now."

Hitoshi picks at the bottom edge of the mask again, before directing his attention to Toshinori again, something that Aizawa can discern on his tone alone by this point. "Thank you for helping. I'm sorry I... made you do that."

"I offered, and I would have offered the same if I knew it was you, young Shinsou," Toshinori says, waving Hitoshi off. "But it was a very convincing impression! I'm sure I won't be the last to be fooled by it."

With that, the teenager deems it fit to sulk off towards the bathroom to fix his hair, embarrassed by something judging by the stiffness in his walk. Something that Aizawa doubts he'll have to guess about as soon as Toshinori leaves. "You did manage to convince him that it will be fine, so thank you for that, Toshinori."

Toshinori seems oddly confused by what Aizawa says, and if he needs a translator, it's unfortunate that he's the unofficial one. "I can't take the credit for that at all, young Aizawa. I only offered a few tips, but Hitoshi was clearly looking to you for reassurance through all of this."

Toshinori could probably tell him that Midoriya has secretly been All for One this entire time, and Aizawa would find that easier to believe. "What led you to believe that?"

"Well, he wanted to make sure that you liked the icing, for one," Toshinori argues, pointless because Hitoshi said himself that he's had minimal experience eating sweets like that. More pointless because Aizawa told him it was good before Toshinori even got here. "And he only seemed to regain his confidence when you were working together to decorate, knowing that you wouldn't let him go astray with that. And of course, with the taste test, your opinion was the most important to Hitoshi."

Aizawa can't even find a rational argument to Toshinori's rambling, Hitoshi was focused during the decorating because it was a demanding task, but certainly not relaxed. And he still didn't believe Aizawa the first time he evaluated the cake flavor. "Toshinori, I know you mean well, but it's very clear my opinion means the least to Hitoshi right now."

He probably shouldn't have said 'Hitoshi,' given that Hitoshi isn't here and Toshinori could take that in several different wrong ways, but luckily the observation that could have been taken soars right over his head. "I think you might be taking some offense where there's meant to be a compliment, young Aizawa. Even if young Shinsou seems a bit frustrated towards you, I can tell he's far more honest as well. And I think it's good for him to have someone he can trust so completely."

When Aizawa first met Hitoshi, he doubted that the teenager would ever fathom the concept of trusting someone outside of Eri. Not after what he had been through, those brutal years still stitched deeper than the scars on his skin, Hitoshi could never trust someone like Aizawa, who he knows could hurt him. Who has hurt him, which Aizawa won't deny for any sake of pride. He tried to mitigate risks and he acted without knowing, but he hurt Hitoshi all the same in a place that he was supposed to be safe, and at times Aizawa doubted whether he was acting as a hero should for doing that.

Aizawa can easily believe that Hizashi has won that trust, he can believe that his students and Mirio and others have won that trust too. All this doubt, more than hostility, means that Hitoshi doesn't trust him at all, or at least it should.

Unless Toshinori is right, and the greater sign of that trust is letting Aizawa know about his doubts, when he seemed too sheepish to tell Toshinori about them plainly. “Then, I won’t take any offense, since I know you didn’t mean any.”

Toshinori still seems too happy to be invited to this as he gathers his coat, as Aizawa walks him to the door. There’s something to be said for boundless positivity if the retired hero can truly be this pleased to oversee the construction of a cake, and see it as a heroic act.

But it is, Aizawa can’t argue with that. While he cleans up the kitchen, clearing off the top shelf of the refrigerator and fighting back the terrifying thought of dropping this damn cake as he does, Aizawa can clearly see that Toshinori was the hero here. Arriving to the scene, taking stock of the situation, and acting with confidence and reassurance to make sure all civilians made it through alive and mostly sane.

Aizawa starts to doubt his own sanity, when Hitoshi joins him on the couch after his shower, ignoring the ample amount of room to sit with his back against Aizawa’s arm, his legs bent in front of him. The Ganriki Neko plushie Monoma gifted to him tucked against his chest with one arm. Aizawa doubts the wet hair dampening his shirt is spiteful enough to deserve this. “Onigiri?”

Aizawa offers the remaining three that he has left on his plate. He’s sure Hizashi fed Hitoshi, but the argument has been made multiple times that Aizawa forgets to. It probably doesn’t count as much when Aizawa either gives Hitoshi a jelly pouch or something Hitoshi himself has made. “Thanks.”

Now Aizawa is worried. But he can’t bring himself to disturb this apparent, nonsensical peace that’s fallen between them. Even if Hitoshi is on his phone, pointedly not looking at him and not offering conversation, Aizawa resolves to be a structure to support his weight with his arm.

There’s something to be said, about ignoring a cat that’s decided to put aside hostility for a moment, just long enough to find rest next to a person that they hate.

Chapter End Notes

Dekusquad + Shinsou Chat Usernames:

Link - Shinsou Hitoshi

Kirby - Uraraka Ochako

Metal Knight - Iida Tenya

Deku Sprout - Midoriya Izuku

Frogger - Asui Tsuyu

Cake Feelings

Chapter Summary

Shinsou tries to be brave yet again and continue apologizing to 1-A for his previous antics. Aizawa and Shinsou lead a voluntary yet intended-to-be-punitive training exercise for the male students of 1-A where Sato's heartfelt feelings are recognized. And the night before Eri's birthday, Shinsou has doubts, but his friends in 1-A are there to support him.

Chapter Notes

Trigger Warnings: Mention of 50, Eri having a flashback, Bug mention, depressive mental spiral including a casual but not intentional desire for death

Previously on Wards of UA: Shinsou had a nightmare about All Might, and Midoriya told him that having dreams about All Might is a premonition about being brave or heroic in your waking life. The 'video game chat' is a Dekusquad chat where Shinsou has been added, and all their usernames are based off of video game characters. Yamada, Aizawa, Eri, and Shinsou agreed to a set of rules for everyone, including 'not intentionally hurting other people physically or emotionally.' The students of 1-A told Aizawa what presents they got for Eri's birthday and asked him which gift was better, and when Aizawa told them that both were good but the one that the girls got was a bit better suited for her, the boys requested an extra training session with him, not saying that it was a punishment but Aizawa quickly figured out it was one that they were imposing on themselves, though Uraraka volunteered to attend as well. Iida was cut on his back when he was part of the group that tried to save Shinsou from 127 when he was attacked on campus. Aizawa told Eri that 'logical ruses' are only such when he knows about them, otherwise it's lying or a trick. Shinsou still calls 1-A "eggs" on occasion. During 'Vent Day & Missing You,' Shinsou told the 1-A chat to make sure that Eri forgets about him if he's not there anymore. Bakugo knows that Shinsou is supposed to leave UA two months after the investigation is over because Midoriya overheard Aizawa and Shinsou's conversation about that.

See the end of the chapter for more notes

Maybe, it's weird to treat All Might like a premonition when Hitoshi knows he's a real person, a nice person even. But when he looked at his phone and saw that Iida created a group chat for 1-A and himself again, he knew he couldn't put it off any longer. An apology in that chat is fine for most of them, but not for Ashi.

He's scared. He doesn't feel 'brave' at all, he knows it's just a screen and typing words and he shouldn't hurt Ashi like this. She can't hurt him.

If she does, he probably deserves it.

Hitoshi sighs without meaning to, tipping his phone towards his chest when Aizawa looks over at him. He just wanted to sit like this, which happened to be next to Aizawa, which isn't a big deal, but Aizawa feels like a brick wall behind his back because he's probably weirded out by it. And he shouldn't be. "You offered to give Iida knife lessons?"

Of course Iida actually asked permission from Aizawa. Hitoshi makes sure the digital mode for his mask is on, moving the mask just to feel the padding, pointlessly. "He could use them, and it's my punishment for acting like an asshole. Threatening them, and everything."

He doesn't have to look to know that Aizawa is staring, and that's one of the things he hates the most about him. "You don't have to punish yourself with my students. Threatening them was wrong, but you're allowed to tell them to leave you alone, and set boundaries. And tell them when they're bothering you. I can enforce that to a degree."

Hitoshi rolls his eyes, because he doesn't need Aizawa to protect him from his students. "It makes me feel better, if that's alright with you."

Aizawa just hums, and Hitoshi can feel that he's typing on his phone. Telling Iida yes or no. "Weapons training begins next year, so you'll have to start with the very basics. And I wouldn't expect much more than proper grip."

Hitoshi expected that. He knows Iida will be hard to convince that a knife is meant for more than frantic stabbing, but at least with Iida's easy ability to fluster and earnestness, he'll be a fun student. "He'd do better with a metal pipe, anyway. Matches his quirk too."

Aizawa huffs, probably his attempt at a laugh, because he's not like All Might that can just laugh at something funny. Even if it's not really funny in the first place, except for the image of Iida trying to play it up, to change his costume to look more like a stereotypical yakuza. With a tattoo sleeve and everything.

When Hitoshi is convinced Aizawa is back to looking at his phone, he finally taps on Ashi's chat with him. He knew there were messages that she sent after he used Confession on her, to force her to answer a question that she didn't want to answer, the insecurity that quirk found. Why are you doing all of these annoying things for me?

She wanted to be his friend. She wanted to make up for everything 'bad' that happened, she wanted to make up for his mother, for The Miasma, for Chisaki and Hari and everything. She wanted to make him happy.

He doesn't want her to try. He honestly doesn't think he really wants her forgiveness. He doubts she'd ever try to do those things again, like throwing him a sleepover, making him hot chocolate. Holding his hand, when he just needed to know that someone was there.

But he has to tell her that he regrets that. He has to tell her he knows it was wrong, and that he's sorry.

He's more sorry when he reads the messages.

Ashi: i kno ur not gonna check this, but just in case

Ashi: im sorry that i didnt listen to u. i was being a jerk instead of a friend, i thought u would have fun with the birthday party thing. i know im a lot, and u can tell me when im too much.

Ashi: and i dont want to be ur friend out of pity, or anything like that. i just want to be ur friend, not just cuz we were friends. bcuz u can be my friend now, and if u want to be my friend. and i can be a better friend.

Ashi: even if u wanna get a divorce TT__TT ill just b single til i find some1 to mingle.

Hitoshi is pretty sure that Ashi could find anyone to ‘mingle,’ whatever that means. She’s pretty stubborn when she sets her mind to something, even if she’s too stubborn sometimes.

But he really could have just told her he didn’t want that fake birthday, and he probably wouldn’t have even been outside with Mirio that night if he did. He wouldn’t have gotten attacked by 127, none of this would have happened.

But he doesn’t want to think about that, he doesn’t want to remember the snow, or how cold it was. That sharp pain digging into his face that he wants to forget completely from that other mask.

He sits up a bit straighter, so Aizawa can’t see his phone over his shoulder as easily. Maybe reminding himself that Aizawa is there.

That Aizawa is a hero, sworn to protect him. Possibly even from Ashi.

Shinny: I’m sorry that I used my quirk like that. I shouldn’t have used it on you, but I was stupid. I was angry, and I didn’t want anyone to get hurt for being close to me. I didn’t want you to get hurt.

Shinny: I’m the shitty friend, so you don’t have to apologize. And you don’t have to forgive me, but I’m sorry.

Shinny: And whatever you want me to do to make it up to you, I’m okay with that.

Ashi: SHIIIIIIIIINNNNNYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYY!!!!!! :D

Ashi: bb u dont have to feel so bad, I FEEL bad cuz ur never like that so i kno u were not ok

Ashi: ur not a shitty friend, u just had a MOMENT and it was a MOMENT. but were gucci ;)

Ashi: still down 2 be my best hubby even if ur not a birthday boi yet?

Shinny: I’m going to be a less of an asshole husband for the wife I don’t deserve.

Ashi: TT__TT SHINNY

Shinny: Ashi

Shinny: I’m glad I can still call you that. If it’s okay.

Ashi: IT ISSSSSSS SHINNY DON’T MAKE ME CRYYYYYY

Shinny: I said Tsu could call me that too. But just her.

Ashi: that’s ok im down to marry Tsu too. i wanna braid her hair soooooo baaaaaaaad

Shinny: Aizawa’s favorite food is pickled radish onigiri. You hated that, right? When we were kids?

Ashi: i can eat them now, but those radishes were so sour when we were kids. u always protected me. <3

Ashi: but u need to get ON THE CHAT STOP BEIN A CRYPTID.

Shinny: I wanted to apologize to you first. Because I hurt you the worst. And you're more important.

Ashi:imma screenshot that n hold u 2 that when ur having a MOMENT. and bragging rights.

Hitoshi scrolls up, just to read Ashi's messages again. Just like the cake, he can't believe what he feared so much was that easy, now that it's over.

And now he has to check the group chat, and he's sure he has a lot of explaining to do there.

Iida Tenya: I've recreated this group chat after learning that Shinsou now regrets his past actions, and seems to want to make amends. The option to leave this chat is as available as always, but I think it would be best to hear him out.

Iida Tenya: @Shinsou Hitoshi

Kaminari Denki: cricket noises

Bakugo Katsuki: YOU KNOW THE FUCKER NEVER CHECKS HIS FUCKING PHONE.

Sero Hanta: TOTALLY irrelevant, but does anyone know the chances of Shinsou going to the punishment training thing? And if he's less murderous for sure now?

Iida Tenya: I can confirm the 'less murderous,' as well as Shinsou's attendance!

Todoroki Shoto: @Shinsou Hitoshi I'm in the video game chat too now. You haven't apologized to me there yet.

Sero Hanta: Wow, would you look at the time, I've got the flu so I can't go to training anymore.

Tokoyami Fumikage: You will be dearly missed, Sero. Whether you participate in training or not.

Sero Hanta:guys?

Kaminari Denki: Jazz music stops

Kaminari Denki: But forreal, as long as ur not gonna do the things or the evil glowy eyes, I think were guccilicious, Shinsou. COME OUT I'VE GOT THIS MEME ON DECK FOR YOU. I've had to save it for a whole WEEK.

Yaoyorozu Momo: Shinsou is probably busy with Eri, since her birthday is tomorrow. @Sato Rikido, all the ingredients are in the kitchen now.

Sato Rikido: Thanks! Also, it's been 15 minutes so far, and no name changes.

Kaminari Denki changed their name to Meemstar

Meemstar changed Sato Rikido's name to Sugilicious Def

Jirou Kyouda: Petition to ban Kaminari from listening to Fergalicious and making references to it, please sign in the chat.

Sero Hanta: COSIGNED HARD

Ojiro Mashirao: Cosigned, Iida and Kouda don't be polite. Don't let it stop you.

Kouda Kouji: It doesn't bother me!

Meemstar changed Kouda Kouji's name to The Best Boi Don't TOUCH Him

Meemstar changed Sero Hanta's name to Saltiest Saltine

Meemstar changed Ojiro Mashirao's name to Redeemed by fluffy tail

Meemstar: @Ashido Mina I'M DOING SO MUCH WORK PLZ HELP ME FIX

Ashido Mina: HE LIIIIIIIVES I'M GETTING SHINNY BACK RN

Redeemed by fluffy tail: Joy.

Kirishima Eijirou: Hey, just be cool ok?

Bakugo Katsuki: NO ONE IS MAKING YOU STAY HERE, DUMB FUCK, JUST LEAVE THE FUCKING CHAT.

Redeemed by fluffy tail left the chat.

Uraraka Ochako: Ojiro just needs some space rn, no 1 needs 2 deal with 2 chats w Bakugo.

Bakugo Katsuki: WHO FUCKING CARES.

Meemstar changed Bakugo Katsuki's name to This One Does Not Spark Joy

Meemstar: @Ashido Mina PLEASE

Ashido Mina changed their name to Fergie Queen

Fergie Queen: PETITION 2 CHANGE 1-A'S ANTHEM TO FERGALICIOUS.

Meemstar: YES COSIGNED 20X

Fergie Queen: IT PASSES

Shoji Mezo: Seems like voter fraud.

Fergie Queen: IT'S NOT.

Fergie Queen changed Shoji Mezo's name to Sus Squid

Shinsou Hitoshi: @Aoyama Yuga, @Ojiro Mashirao, @Kaminari Denki, @Kirishima Eijirou, @Sato Rikido, @Shoji Mezo, @Jirou Kyouka, @Sero Hanta, @Tokoyami Fumikage, @Todoroki Shoto, @Yaoyorozu Momo, I'm sorry for threatening you with my quirk and with intentional physical harm, I'm not going to do either of those things, and I was an asshole for saying I would. I'm willing to do whatever you want to make amends.

Uraraka Ochako: I got Eri pics out of it, u gotta pick something else.

Meemstar changed Uraraka Ochako's name to Eri Pics ONLY

Aoyama Yuga: :> je sais quoi demander *~

Fergie Queen changed Aoyama Yuga's name to French SUS

Kirishima Eijirou: We're cool, Shinbro! I know you got a lot of stuff going on, lmk if you ever wanna work it outta your system with a workout or smth!

Saltiest Saltine: RIP Kirishima, you were a bro til the end.

Meemstar changed Kirishima Eijirou's name to Goodnight Sweet Bro

Goodnight Sweet Bro: Bro...

Meemstar: Broooo

This Does Not Spark Joy: LIKE THAT FUCKING TWIG CAN DO SHIT TO SHITTY HAIR.

Goodnight Sweet Bro: BRO. T.T

Saltiest Saltine: I will forgive you, except for bringing it up at most opportunities, if you Promise Not To Hurt Me. Ever.

Shinsou Hitoshi: You're asking too much, try again.

Midoriya Izuku: Shinsou, I think that's kiiiind of intentionally hurting Sero emotionally.

Shinsou Hitoshi: Fine. Sero, I won't intentionally hurt you physically or emotionally, and if I do, I'll have to complete a punishment from Aizawa.

Saltiest Saltine changed Midoriya Izuku's name to My Hero

Jirou Kyouka: Sero, do you really think Aizawa could punish Shinsou tho? Enough to stop him?

Saltiest Saltine: Good point, @Shinsou Hitoshi I HAVE QUESTIONS NOW ABOUT THAT.

Shinsou Hitoshi: I might answer them.

Todoroki Shoto: Shinsou. The video game chat.

Shinsou Hitoshi: Do you want me to apologize there?

Todoroki Shoto: No. I want you to say that Soba is great.

Shinsou Hitoshi: Soba is great.

Todoroki Shoto: Out loud.

Shinsou Hitoshi: At training.

Todoroki Shoto: Fine.

Fergie Queen changed Todoroki Shoto's name to Fiiiiiine Boi

Shinsou Hitoshi: @Jirou Kyouka I'm not going to intentionally hurt Yamada.

Jirou Kyouka: I know, you have horrible taste. Just tell me what you actually like to listen to that isn't on his show.

Fergie Queen changed Jirou Kyouka's name to Present Mic's Fakest Hater

Shinsou Hitoshi: His spotify playlist. But I've listened to a few songs from the one you sent me. They're good.

Saltiest Saltine: CAN WE GO BACK TO 'INTENTIONALLY EMOTIONALLY/PHYSICALLY HURTING'???? And ELABORATE????

Shinsou Hitoshi: It's a rule. I can't do that.

My Hero: And, if Shinsou brings it up, it's probably a sign that he's not comfortable with something, just letting you guys know here instead of the other chat.

Asui Tsuyu: Wrong chat.

My Hero:wrong chat. Sorry.

Tokoyami Fumikage: So, that leaves Shinsou with no recourse but to hurt us spiritually, to abide by the code of ethics he has adopted.

Meemstar: softly, and full of Fear don't.

Saltiest Saltine: TOKOYAMI PLEASE TELL ME HOW I HURT YOU.

Shoji Mezo: Some apple chips went missing, and Kaminari ratted you out. And we're fine Shinsou, doing something for me isn't necessary. But if you could tell Mizuno 'hi' tomorrow, she'd really like that. She thinks you're cool.

Shinsou Hitoshi: She's nice. I'm glad she's friends with Eri.

Eri Pics Only: TT.TT Shoji can i be ur plus 1 to Eri's bday party?

Tokoyami Fumikage: <https://omamorifromjapan.blogspot.com/2011/12/wara-ningyo-curses.html>

Tokoyami Fumikage: Relevant to your interests. I think the gnarled oak by the cafeteria might be sacred.

Saltiest Saltine: TOKOYAMI PLEASE.

Meemstar: JAZZ MUSIC STOPS

This One Does Not Spark Joy: HOLY FUCK DON'T GIVE SHITSOU VODOO POWERS.

Meemstar changed Tokoyami Fumikage's name to Would sell u to satan for apple chips

Fergie Queen: its fine!! :) just dont make Shinny uncomfortable :)

Fiiiiine Boi: Very relevant, thank you.

Meemstar: The vibes are not ok right now.

Iida Tenya: Todoroki, the student handbook forbids invoking spiritual powers or ‘cursing’ a student/teacher/staff member or contracted employee currently attending or employed by UA. But anyone that does not fall into that category is allowed.

Fiiiiine Boi: Thank you.

Shinsou Hitoshi: That tree was the first tree that Eri climbed. You can’t hurt it. Or I’ll curse you back.

Fiiiiine Boi: That’s very relevant to my interests, thank you.

Yaoyorozu Momo: I also forgive you, Shinsou, and I don’t want to punish you by asking for something in return for that. And since you don’t want to injure Eri’s tree, there’s also a method of cursing someone by giving them the curse doll, with a parchment scroll attached to the back detailing what they did to deserve the curse. To make sure the doll never forgets its sin.

Saltiest Saltine: yAOMOMO

Yaoyorozu Momo: Irrelevant, but if anyone wants to take any food that’s in my section of the cabinet, feel free to and just let me know so I won’t expect it to be there after it’s eaten!

Present Mic’s Fakest Hater: RIP Sero, you kind of earned it.

Meemstar: F

Fergie Queen: FFFFFFFF

This Does Not Spark Joy: FUCK YOUR F, YOU FUCKED UP MY MEAL PLAN, DUMBASS

Saltiest Saltine: I’M GOING THROUGH A GROWTH SPURT AND TRAINING IS HARD.

Meemstar: Some sins can never be forgiven.

Would sell u to satan for apple chips: Agreed.

Iida Tenya: Yaoyorozu, did you happen to have a fondness for memos when you were younger?

Yaoyorozu Momo: Did you do that too? I thought I was just a little... too involved in my parents’ work, back then. It was constructive!

Iida Tenya: I agree! And you are not alone!

Sugarlicious Def: Okay, I can’t take it. Shinsou, I’ll forgive you if you tell me what cake Eri is getting for her birthday. I want to make sure I don’t repeat it at breakfast.

Shinsou Hitoshi: Cinnamon marble cake with vanilla buttercream icing and glazed apples on top.

Eri Pics Only: Shoji can i pleaaaaaaase be ur plus one????

My Hero: That sounds really good! I’m sure Eri will love it!

Goodnight Sweet Bro: Awwww it’s like cinnamon rolls and apple turnovers! Her favorite things!

Sugarlicious Def: Mhm. I know. I know.

Shinsou Hitoshi: She'll still want yours.

Sugarlicious Def: Did you go to a good place? Not the organic supermarket, but a real bakery?

French SUS: The suspense kills me also IT MUST BE THE BEST

Shinsou Hitoshi: Perish, I guess.

Hitoshi starts to get up, before he realizes that the cake isn't on the counter. It's not where it's supposed to be, and if Aizawa did something to the cake while he was taking a shower, he's not sure if he can keep his promise to 50. "Where is the cake?"

"In the fridge," Aizawa answers, and Hitoshi holds his phone against his chest because he knows Aizawa is looking at him. "Did you want to send someone a picture?"

Hitoshi nods, and Aizawa says nothing, but then his phone vibrates and he can see a notification from Aizawa's chat with him. He already took pictures of the cake. And it actually makes the cake look nicer than it does.

Meemstar: i....

Saltiest Saltine: He just...

Meemstar: SHINSOU I'M SO PROUD!!!! A MEEEEEEEMEEEE!!!!

This Does Not Spark Joy: KICK SHITSOU OUT OF THE FUCKING CHAT NOW, QUARANTINE THIS FUCKER BEFORE KAMINARI GETS HIM TOO.

Shinsou Hitoshi: Tap to download 72 kB file

Shinsou Hitoshi: Aizawa and I made it. All Might helped at the end.

Hitoshi waited, wondering if his phone was messing up. If they really thought that cake looked awful somehow, and they didn't know how to tell him.

Saltiest Saltine: 911, I'd like to report a murder against my heart because that cake looks TOO GOOD I'M SO HUNGRY

The Best Boi Don't TOUCH Him: !!! Shinsou that looks amazing! You did an amazing job!

Goodnight Sweet Bro: SHINBRO THAT LOOKS SO BEAUTIFUL!!!! You did such a great job, I'm proud of you!

Fergie Queen: WE STAN A NEW BAKING LEGEND! (sato get ur new son)

Shinsou Hitoshi: It only looks nice because Aizawa did most of that. If it tastes bad, it's my fault.

Eri Pics Only: SHOJI IZUKU TSU SHINSOU CAN I PLEASSSSSSSEEE BE UR PLUS ONE!!!!!!

My Hero: I'm sure it will be perfect, Shinsou! I know you followed the recipe, and that's really all it takes to make a spectacular cake!

Sugarlicious Def: It's not.

Sugarlicious Def: Okay.

Fiiiiine Boi: Cake wars.

Sugarlicious Def: Okay, buckle in because I just. Cake feelings.

French SUS: Mon petite, do the off.

Sugarlicious Def: How dare you.

Fergie Queen: Watch it. Check. YOURSELF. Now.

Meemstar: Avengers: Civil War has nothing on us rn.

Meemstar: Also PLEAAAAAAAAAAAAASE SHINSOU LET ME EAT IT JUST A LIL. TINY BITE FOR MEEEEEEEEEE IT LOOKS SO GOOOOOOOOOD

Sugarlicious Def: Cinnamon marble and vanilla buttercream icing is a staple, it's classic, it's perfect just like that. It is the Audrey Hepburn of the cake world. But you had the AUDACITY to add another layer of cinnamon and sweet and tart with glazed apples, a rare topping reserved for an absolutely plain base so that it can stand on its own and be celebrated for the tartness, the sweetness, the glaze, the texture. And YOU. You elevated the classic. You DID THAT. The cinnamon cake at the base marrying with the cinnamon in the glaze, top to bottom with the buttercream binding. And the design of it? I hate you. How dare you.

Present Mic's Fakest Hater: He did the off.

Yaoyorozu Momo: It looks so delicate, it's really an amazing cake, Shinsou!

Meemstar: HE DID. THE OOOOOOOFFFFF.

Shinsou Hitoshi: Eri picked that flavor out of the cupcakes, and Aizawa said it tasted good when we tried it. What did I do wrong with the design?

Sugarlicious Def: NOTHING. NOTHING IS WRONG WITH IT. SO I CAN'T ACCEPT IT. YOU CAN'T BE THAT GOOD.

Shinsou Hitoshi: Aizawa did that. I barely helped.

Sugarlicious Def: You did great, Shinsou. As a third generation baker, I salute you.

Squid Sus: Sato.... Are you going to bring up the design to Aizawa-sensei? If he did it?

Sugarlicious Def: I need to beat him in the training exercise to avenge my family's honor.

Sugarlicious Def: So, it was nice knowing you guys.

Meemstar: SUGAR DADDY NO.

Present Mic's Fakest Hater: I'll play Plastic Love at your funeral.

Sugarlicious Def: Thanks, Jirou.

Meemstar changed Shinsou Hitoshi's name to ttttastey tastaaaay

Meemstar: Tap to download 22 kB

Meemstar: Shinsou, pls tell me what u think of the meme, its relevant 2 ur interests and Aizawa-sensei's gonna kill us soon.

The meme doesn't look like the usual ones that Kaminari shows him. It's just a picture of a lady in an old dress on one side, and 'Five Drawbacks to Having Eerie Mind-Control Powers' is written above a list. The first is 'Most restaurants don't offer eerie mind-control power discounts after 4pm,' the next three lines are basically nothing, until the fifth says 'Oh, and some people might think you're a witch, but honestly, that's a compliment.'

Ttttastey tastaaaay: 1. I don't need a discount when I could just get it for free. 5. When I figure out how to get those curse dolls, I will be a witch.

Would sell u to satan for apple chips: <https://www.amazon.com/Natural-Bundles-Christmas-Bouquets-Decoration/dp/B08GC6Z9QZ/>

Would sell u to satan for apple chips: Relevant to your interests, but I also have a few in my room. I'll prepare a bag for the implements you require.

Ttttastey tastaaaay: Thanks.

Saltiest Saltine: tOKOYAMI PLEASE

"We'll have to leave in 30 minutes," Aizawa says, adjusting his arm as he does and Hitoshi grimaces because he was comfortable where he was laying against it, Aizawa should have given him a little warning. "Did they like the cake?"

"Sato..." Hitoshi trails off, considering his answer. It might be better if Aizawa isn't aware, to at least give Sato the element of surprise. "Had a lot of cake feelings about it. But they liked how you made it look."

"That was mostly you," Aizawa says, lying. Aizawa was doing better with the decorating anyway. "This is a self-imposed punishment for them, but they do need to be able to visit their families intact. We can't be too harsh to them."

"We?" Hitoshi asks, only checking the digital setting on his mask as an afterthought, something he shouldn't make a habit of. It's the reason he has this mask, no matter how fun it is to play around with.

"They asked for an exercise focused on hand-to-hand combat, but Iida has already decided to disregard that despite asking for it," Aizawa says, moving again to tighten his ponytail, and Hitoshi rolls his eyes to sit up since Aizawa has decided to be uncomfortable. "I don't see any problem with you being somewhat of a co-teacher, if you wanted to. It might be fun."

There's something about that smirk Aizawa has, even if it's odd. Even if it's warm, like the way he smiles at Eri. Hitoshi knows he probably wants him to agree, probably half as much as Hitoshi wants to.

He adjusts the dials, and he knows it won't come out right. It almost feels like someone is strangling him with how deep he adjust the pitch, but he starts with Izuku's voice.

“Young Aizawa, I would be happy to-” Hitoshi chokes up and has to cough, his hand curling over the mask like that helps, but something about the adjustment of that ceramic plate doesn’t work with some words.

“A little too deep, but even if the cough wasn’t intentional, it’s in character,” Aizawa says, his hand hovering over Hitoshi’s shoulder, and Hitoshi just turns the Persona Cord setting off, breathing easier without the pressure. “Alright?”

“Fine,” Hitoshi says, rolling his eyes. He’s not dying from the mask messing with his throat the wrong way.

“You should hydrate and eat something small if you’re going to be hands-on with them,” Aizawa says, like he does that. Aside from a jelly pouch on the rare occasion that he feels like taking his students on instead of just observing and directing criticism afterwards.

And a jelly pouch does sound nice right now, not that he wants Aizawa to say anything about it when he takes two from the cabinet they’re stored in. If he needs to eat a small meal, Aizawa does too, so they can be ready to crack his eggs together.

*

“Uraraka,” Aizawa calls, standing from his stance just to see his student frown and wince, already catching that her stance was off, a foot too far back and dragging behind her boundless enthusiasm. But she corrects, arms raised as a box guard for quick offense, her stance steady and balanced enough that it will take more than a quick shove to topple her over.

With a nod, Aizawa resumes what’s honestly a guilty pleasure for him, which is thrashing his students in an area that overall they tend to focus on least - quirkless combat.

Nearly every child that anticipates the development of their quirk anticipates a powerful one, one suited for the heroic mold that televised fights and related media present. UA’s entrance exam is slanted to uphold that, the robots tend to disqualify any hopeful hero that has little more than fists to fight with. UA, and the hero industry as a whole, is focused too much at times on quirk development, but there’s always a limit for a quirk, there’s always a fight where it can’t be utilized, there’s always a moment where success hinges on fighting with nothing more than fists and adrenaline. It’s his duty to make sure they graduate with muscle memory to respond to that terrifying moment when all their thoughts blur out to ‘I don’t want to die.’

Uraraka knows she’s starting a bit behind the finish line in that aspect. As powerful as her quirk can be in many areas, it can leave her vulnerable in a fight. In the scenario where her environment offers her no advantage and no debris, she needs to hone the ability to survive close combat long enough to use her quirk on her opponent or take them down without it, and as much as enthusiasm can carry her, muscle memory hasn’t had enough time to develop in some ways.

She fares well with quick strikes to his dodging and retreat, her defense can be stilted at times because she’s still too eager to retreat properly. It’s also her youth, she’s been training for less than a year, and he does see vast improvement.

He allows the opportunity to joint lock his left arm and she takes it, hand on his wrist and opposite arm in his elbow, pushing from the ground to topple his weight at the right angle. He feints a blow with his free hand and she changes the angle to try to spin him, try to throw him off-balance.

But, it’s too easy to resist, and he sees the moment she notices it before he shakes her off his arm, catching her by the wrist before she can fall to the mat. Once she realizes she won’t hit it and opens her eyes, he points to his feet, because he's deliberately changed nothing from his stance. "An unskilled opponent lifts their foot from the same side they're striking from, making them unbalanced. If you pulled rather than pushed, you could have thrown me correctly."

Uraraka never pouts, just a pursed frown before she exhales, eyebrows drawn down and determined, if sometimes disappointed in herself. Aizawa will never say it, but that look can be frightening at times. But as always, she pulls herself to her feet to dust off her hands in a clap, eager for another chance.

And she'll have to find that other chance from someone else, because he has another student waiting, dismissing her with a thumb over his shoulder. "Take a water break, and do 35 lunges."

"Yes sir!" Uraraka says, even if she seems to be distracted after ten steps by his junior co-teacher, who has been multitasking and earning more attention from his students for it. Even if that co-teacher looks like a student slacking off with the others, begrudgingly dressed in a spare gym uniform at Iida's insistence before they ran laps under Hitoshi's instruction.

True to his word, Hitoshi offered his knife to Iida after warm ups to begin the very basics of knife lessons, and true to his prediction, it hasn't progressed further than reminding Iida how to adjust his grip on the handle according to the angle he tries to strike from. He's heard the knife drop several times, along with the growing diversity of voice impersonations, egged on by his students who seem to treat Hitoshi's mask like a particularly cool toy. He might need to give Powerloader forewarning before any of them can request a similar one.

But, he doubts it's ignorance that lets them overlook the fact that Hitoshi is wearing a mask like that. Out of the students at this exercise, only Kirishima, Midoriya, Iida, and Uraraka have seen Hitoshi wearing a similar one, but he knows the rest aren't blind to how Hitoshi gained those scars etched deep in his face. They seem to trust that Hitoshi knows his limits more than Aizawa does, and a part of him argues that is out of ignorance. They haven't seen what he's seen from Hitoshi, in his most vulnerable moments.

Maybe, they can see the parts that make it different easier than he can, the method it uses to change Hitoshi's voice and the stickers Eri decorated the mask with. Maybe, he's worrying over nothing.

But, he's been worried about Ojiro long enough, and as he settles in for a more challenging spar where he'll have to look harder for inconsistencies and defects, he doesn't overlook the frown that his ward seems to pull from his student. "Gunhead is a practical choice for you. You're well balanced, but an expert in tactical holds could show you a thing or two."

Ojiro's head snaps back to him, offering his full attention. "Yes, that's what I was thinking. Did he reach out to you, sensei?"

Aizawa nods, he's signed off on almost every internship offer thus far. He's signed off on most home visits for the holiday season too. "Some time in the countryside, away from campus and closer to family, is something that everyone needs at this point in the year."

He tries to remind himself that an escape like that, time and distance, can result in a vastly different mindset in the student in front of him. Especially for Ojiro, who he knows is still reeling from Hagakure's expulsion, even if the initial blow has passed. Time and distance.

Hopefully not an association between Hagakure's actions and the presence of his ward, forming in the back of his student's mind. Hagakure was discovered to be the traitor because of that attack on Hitoshi, and if he asked about it plainly, he knows that Ojiro would admit that Hitoshi was the victim in that instance. But the mind can make illogical connections at times, to deal with grief and anger. Especially when the proper outlets are closed.

Unlike Uraraka, Ojiro is nearly solid muscle with the strength to match, speed and flexibility to compliment. He takes note of how swiftly he can change now from dealing a crushing blow to guiding his opponent's weight against them, he can see the best foundation Gunhead could ask for in what Ojiro has learned so far, throughout his years of training.

But when Ojiro nearly beats him, Aizawa losing track of his tail in the assumption he was only using it to stabilize his stance, and it catches his hip to knock his sense of gravity from under him, it's only well-worn muscle memory that allows Aizawa to roll with bent knees and loose arms, a charge that shifts into a feint, his elbow locking Ojiro's knee to bring him down with his shoulders forced against the mat and breath knocked out of him.

They don't have to play this fight out past this point, Ojiro could use his tail to try to beat Aizawa away, but Aizawa would use Erasure before walking away with body-length bruising. "Were you trying to catch me off-guard with your quirk, or trying not to use it at first?"

Aizawa drops Ojiro's knee, and his student tries to recover his breath before he answers, sitting up with hands braced on the mat. "Tida said it was quirkless training, but you said hand-to-hand. I guess I was too wrapped up in the difference."

There is a difference with students like Ojiro, whose mutation quirk would still be allowed in hand-to-hand, but not in a specifically quirkless spar. And though there are few instances where Ojiro would have to fight quirkless due to that, he's still confident that if he nullified his quirk throughout the fight, Ojiro would have enough training to put up a decent one. "As much as I can admire your dedication, this isn't a serious training session. And the boy's present only lost by a small margin."

He's honestly a bit relieved that his students decided to present two gifts divided by gender rather than each of them buying Eri a birthday present when they honestly weren't obligated to. And while the boys had a distinct advantage with that, with more students available for a bigger pool of money, it wasn't just his illogical affinity for an underdog that convinced him the girls had a present Eri would prefer.

Neither were offbase, as he's sure that Eri will have a great deal of fun with that magic trick kit, especially with her blooming interest in tricks and games evidenced by the 'down low, too slow' game. But the girls had caught on to something deeper than that, something heartfelt, that he can't blame solely on gender. Something that he knows Eri will love and enjoy, and he almost wishes that he and Hizashi had thought of it.

"Shinsou seems to be doing better now," Ojiro comments, the frown still present when he looks over his shoulder at his ward, but his eyes seem a bit softer in their wariness. He knows that Ojiro has won the right to be wary, he's always been one of Aizawa's more rational students, unwilling to take stupid risks and win stupid prizes as a result.

"He's trying to trust that an attack like that won't happen again," Aizawa says, which draws Ojiro's attention back to him with a bit of shock, as though he hadn't made that connection in his ward's behavior. "The criminals that are targeting him made it clear that they will also go after anyone connected to him. That's why he was placed at UA, where the risk of attack would have been minimized."

"Does he still think that... we were working with her?" Ojiro asks, a wince when he can't bring himself to say Hagakure's name. Something Aizawa knows he needs time and distance from, but the accusation seems to be one Ojiro is utterly convinced of.

“I doubt that he ever did. It was more of a concern for your and your peers’ safety, put at risk because of your connection to him,” Aizawa says, watching as Hitoshi turns his head, distracted from the drills he’s running Iida through when Uraraka demonstrates her impression of himself, the ‘Aizawa’ impersonation that he’s pretended to be unaware of. Messing up the ends of her hair, tucking her hands into her pockets with a slouch, half lidded eyes and a serious frown.

And he doesn’t ignore how clearly Hitoshi brightens at that, even if it’s only his eyes getting a bit wider above that black mask before he adjusts his voice setting to match. “But, he knows that he should have been safe here. And he wasn’t because we didn’t protect him. We didn’t know.”

Aizawa looks at Ojiro, a student frustrated and confused over the wrong issue with his ward. It’s not simply a matter of explaining that Hitoshi still probably doesn’t expect that others should keep him safe, that he barely understands that he deserves to be safe. “He’s never interacted with someone his own age, before coming to UA. And he’s never had a connection with anyone who could meet him on equal terms, without an imbalance of power. Someone that he owes nothing, and isn’t required to give anything to deserve it.”

Hitoshi is still trading for forgiveness with these little tokens that he offers his students, teaching Iida to wield a knife, telling Todoroki that ‘Soba is great.’ But given that he refused to sing for Aoyama upon his request, with the argument that he only sings to Eri, he’s proud to see that Hitoshi is beginning to realize that he could have that kind of equal connection with others, where those trades are smaller compared to the weight of that connection. Where things are comfortable gifts, rather than necessary.

“It’s unfair for all of you to see him as someone you need to protect as hero students. You aren’t ready for that responsibility, and you’ll inevitably see him as weaker than yourselves, in ways that cheapens any friendship he might want,” Aizawa says, knowing that he’s never outright advocated for his students to form that connection with his ward, and he’s made several attempts to stop it outright. Even if he knew it was futile from the beginning.

But it would be unfair for Hitoshi to have friends that only pursue that connection out of a perception of duty towards him, unwilling to see him as he is. More than a ward, as a person who still deserves respect, but in his own right rather than the difference between their temporary social standings as ward and hero student. “I don’t think any of us really thought that he was weak and defenseless but... I guess it is unfair when you put it like that.”

Ojiro rubs the back of his neck, now looking guiltily towards that gathering where Hitoshi and Uraraka are becoming the centers of attention, Kaminari and Sero their loudest fans. He still seems reluctant to join them, understandable when he has his own wounds to heal. “Not out of any ill intention, but in my opinion, a connection built outside of a sense of duty is stronger for it.”

Ojiro nods, and like Aizawa imagined, leaves to take a water break rather than join in on the more ‘fun’ side of this exercise. Aizawa thinks about calling for Sero or Sato to receive their evaluative spar from him, but as he walks off the mat to retie his hair and think about taking a water break himself, he realizes the hypocrisy of his own words.

‘A connection built outside of a sense of duty,’ is something he’s honestly never tried to build between himself and Hitoshi.

Most of his connections with others are forged out of responsibility and perception of need, he needed to be Hizashi’s friend because Hizashi insisted on it, which slowly blossomed into a marriage of nearly a decade when he realized that he needed and wanted Hizashi for his own sake. With friends, students, and colleagues, he finds it easy to meet whatever needs they have, and nearly impossible to let them know that he has his own.

He felt like it was his responsibility to take Eri into his home, knowing that the horrors that she went through were inspired by his quirk, and that his quirk alone could help her gain control. But far before she made such grand strides to accomplish that goal, he realized the selfish connection that grew beneath that simple contract in her wardship. In whatever connection they have, caretaker to child, parent to child, he can bear the weight of what she needs from him but there's so much that she gives without intending to, knowing that she doesn't have to. And it's all the more precious for it.

But with Hitoshi, there's more responsibilities than providing for him and keeping him safe, there's also the investigation into The Miasma that they've had to meet, sometimes in conflict with each other. There's antagonism on both sides, how much he resented that Hitoshi feared him and compared him to his past abusers, how through that Hitoshi found it easier to connect with anyone but him. There's little ground for them to meet on that isn't steeped in that poison, colored by that history, and their perception of each other through their perceived duties.

He could never simply be a friend to Hitoshi, given that he's an adult charged with his wellbeing, but it's been a long time since he's seen Eri as a ward, as a child he holds such a cold and clinical duty to. He doesn't know if this is what Hizashi meant by seeing them both with an open mind, in regards to their potential futures beyond UA and outside of his direct care, but there is a difference, and it might be owed to how he sees Hitoshi. Not as Hitoshi in his own right.

And when Aizawa turns to see Sato approaching the mat, seemingly of his own volition, he at first thinks that he should put the matter to rest to focus on his student.

But with Sato's pupils already dissolved into white by means of his quirk, the sluggish and lax way he stops once he sets foot on the mat is only half of the indication that Hitoshi has used his quirk on him.

The other half has to do with the fact that Hitoshi is perched on his shoulders, arms folded and draped over his student's head, and a shit eating grin hidden by his black mask. "It's a hand-to-hand combat exercise, but not quirkless, so using Sugar Rush to its full limit is fine, right?"

'Full limit' is something that's clear, yet up to interpretation. Aizawa can see that Sato's quirk is active to the limit, his enhanced strength clear with the muscles straining beneath his gym uniform, but under Hitoshi's quirk, he's not panting or muttering in broken sentences to indicate his lowered cognitive capacities.

Because Hitoshi will be doing the thinking for him.

This is not fine, and could honestly be quite dangerous, but seeing as the rules are bending a bit, Aizawa takes his capture scarf out of his pocket before he steps onto the mat himself. "Hand-to-hand, which excludes your quirk being used on me."

He wants to make it clear that a sucker punch like that, paralyzing him just so Sato's enhanced strength could blow him through a wall isn't going to be allowed in this fight, but Hitoshi shrugs as his students gather around to watch. "Of course, this is an honorable fight."

Something about the way Hitoshi says that sounds odd, but Aizawa brushes it out of his mind to settle into a stance, before he strikes, to see what this 'full limit' looks like for himself.

*

If Aizawa had set up another sparring mat, he probably wouldn't have to put up with this. "Wait! Say 'Kaminari, you're such a swell guy, and so funny and amazing.'"

Kaminari probably means for him to use Aizawa's Persona Cord again, but he's had to give him too many compliments with that one, and Bakugo looks like he's getting a little restless.

"Kaminari, you're a fucking swell guy, you make me giggle fucking soda out of my nose and you're fucking amazing."

"When the fuck did you do that?! Fucking creepy ass voice stealing shit," Bakugo growls, bumping into Iida when he lunges, but Kaminari jumps between them with his arms spread out to defend Hitoshi, which only inspires Sero to join in too.

"Shinsou," Kaminari says, turning his head to look over his shoulder with a weepy look on his face. "I would literally die for you."

"Die," Todoroki chimes in, but he's been in that 'meme study group' long enough to know that's not the right word to use, and the loose headlock he pulls on Bakugo to start dragging him away seems to indicate he doesn't know who's supposed to die in this instance. "Let him speak. And steal voices. It's not creepy."

"It's only logical for Shinsou to steal your voice," Uraraka chimes in, still slouched with that serious look on her face, and it's still too fucking funny to him, every time she says anything with that deep voice. "But don't interact with him, Shinsou is my ward and that means that I don't want him to be around bad influences like you."

Hitoshi has to hold his breath not to laugh, but it still comes out as a weird choking noise. But sighs when he sees Iida nearly drop his knife again, even if the bespectacled student looks at him like he hoped he didn't. He switches the Persona Cords off, trying to ignore how much he wants to rub his face from the pressure plates finally being released. "Thumb and forefinger tight, but not squeezing it. You have giant hands, so this really shouldn't be difficult."

Iida raises both hands like he's carrying an invisible box, just to move them up and down. "I understand that, Shinsou, but balancing the hilt isn't as intuitive as you might be under the impression it is, given that you're more experienced with this."

Hitoshi raises an eyebrow when his knife predictably falls out of Iida's hand and clatters to the ground, but he doesn't miss that Iida's first instinct is to pull his leg away from it like it's a snake ready to bite. "Can you even cook if you're that scared of a knife?"

"I'm not scared of any knife, but I'm well aware of how dangerous they can be, and admittedly, that's a reason that I asked for this," Iida says, stooping down to pick the knife up again, holding it too loose, again, before he sighs. "I've faced more than a few villains who used knives or swords, and I'm aware that I will face them in the future, and having a more positive association to this weapon may prevent me from making a worse one."

"Shinsou, did you, um," Izuku starts, a particularly nervous look on his face while he fidgets. "Have a slight reaction with your quirk with Iida just then?"

"It's on digital mode, so no," Hitoshi answers, tapping the button on the mask for good measure, before he walks closer to Iida. With a question he doesn't really want to ask. "Did you get a scar from when you were attacked?"

Iida's freehand moves to his back like he needs to check, and maybe he does, because while Hitoshi can't forget most of his scars, he also doesn't remember all the ones that are on his back and harder to see in the mirror. "I... did. It was a long laceration, and could have been worse. The other... could have been a lot worse."

Villains and scars, plural, meant that he wasn't just attacked by 127. Hitoshi remembers how jumpy Iida seemed when he used his knife while trying to train all of them, he was scared then too. And he'll just get more reasons to hold onto that fear the closer he gets to being a hero. "Every weapon has its advantages and disadvantages. The threat of a gun can be more effective, but when you pull the trigger, you have to accept that you're willing to kill. A knife can be used in other ways, and it doesn't run out of bullets. It's a threat, it's a guard, and it's a weapon. And it's something you use to cook."

Hitoshi raises his hand, almost wants to rub the back of his neck. Almost wants to check the band at the back of his head for a lock, but he knows the weight of this mask is different. Instead, he takes the back of Iida's oversized hand, correcting the position of his fingers again. Not spread and not pressed so close together, the pinky used to direct the angle.

"There's different reasons to pick it, just like different ways to use it. 127 prioritizes stealth and always kills, so a gun wouldn't work for him. Whoever you faced or will face will have their reasons," Hitoshi says, picking up Iida's hand to swing then guard for him, watching for him to make a mistake and change his grip. But he doesn't, probably because Hitoshi is watching him. "But, it's just a knife. It's small, it takes a lot of training to use it defensively, and it's not the most powerful weapon you'll face. Without proper training, it takes a lot of repeated strikes to successfully kill someone with it, which just means more chances for you to not die."

"Why..." Iida starts, before he adjusts his glasses with his free hand, almost like he needs to use his hands to keep talking. "Why did you choose a knife, Shinsou?"

"I didn't want to pick the gun," Hitoshi admits, remembering that moment clearly. He's never forgotten 50's words. "I wanted more control over how much I would hurt someone than just having to kill them. And it's what 50 used. I wanted... to feel more connected to her."

The next swing he tries to guide Iida through hesitates, but Iida pulls his hand away before Hitoshi can decide whether that was his fault or not. And Iida holds out the knife for him to take back with a smile. "Thank you, Shinsou. I think understanding more about it has helped my worries, in a way."

"But, just a quick question," Sero cuts in, and he looks nervous so Hitoshi knows it's a question for him. "Did you happen to get that 'proper training' to know how to kill someone?"

Hitoshi runs a hand through his hair to make it look like he's just adjusting the band, walking closer to Sero. "Still worried I will?"

Sero puts his hands up, wincing nervously, but the strain and interest is plain to see on every face after he asked that. "Just curious, you know?"

As soon as Sero's arms drop to his side, Hitoshi flips the blade so that the dull side is facing Sero, as he steps beside him to demonstrate. "Severing the spinal cord takes a great deal of force to do, but it will render the target completely helpless. Slitting the throat is more effective when targeting the side, that's where most of the veins and arteries are. Kidneys are less protected than the heart, lungs, or diaphragm, the inside of the thigh has the femoral artery but it's the least effective as it takes longer to bleed out there compared to the carotid."

Kaminari raises a finger when Hitoshi presses the back of his knife to Sero's thigh, like he has a question, but just lowers his hand instead of asking it. Hitoshi sheathes his knife, taking in the fact that no one seems to know this, before he flicks Sero's ear to break the control so he doesn't miss out on the lesson, turning the digital mode on his mask on too.

“Before you ask, I’ve never killed anyone, but none of this should be news to you if you’re going to be heroes,” Hitoshi says, because if he knows it, the villains that they face probably will, and this also explains why so many of them don’t have proper protection in their costumes.

“I... think that’s a solid Aizawa-sensei impression even without the voice,” Kaminari says, which reminds Hitoshi that they’re supposed to be taking this somewhat seriously. Even if Aizawa said it’s supposed to be ‘fun,’ that’s why he’s a ‘co-teacher’ or whatever that means, but there are a few of them who haven’t gone up against Aizawa yet and Aizawa looks too relaxed when he’s just staring at the wall by himself.

“Sato, you haven’t tried to regain your family’s honor. Unless you don’t have those ‘cake feelings’ anymore,” Hitoshi says, half teasing and half excited for the prospect of his success. Even if Sato didn’t mean it as an outright blood feud between warring yakuza families, he should settle this now before his ‘cake feelings’ become too heavy.

“Oh, just listening to the... You have a lot of ‘knife feelings,’” Sato says, rubbing the back of his neck. “Y’know, I know I don’t really stand a chance against him, this is Aizawa-sensei.”

“But, your cake feelings are important!” Uraraka says, pumping her fists just for Izuku to mirror her. “Even if you can’t beat him, you have to let him know that being that good at cake decorating is an insult! It’s insulting to your family!”

“Who fucking cares if Shitsei pulled that shit off Instagram, it has nothing to do with your family and you know it,” Bakugo argues, crossing his arms as he scowls. “Just get your ass wrecked so we can be done with this shit, this is training.”

“I’m still rooting for you, though!” Kirishima adds, joining in on the clenched fists that seem to believe too easily that Sato has a chance of standing against Aizawa, someone who’s apparently paid to thrash them in a fight so they can learn to do better.

But, Sato does have a chance. A better one at least, if he’s right about this. “He allowed Shoji to use his webbing to deflect, so it’s probably fine to use your quirk. As long as it’s hand-to-hand.”

“Even if that’s true, it’s not just strength,” Sato argues. “When I’m in that zone, I can’t really think straight. Aizawa-sensei could probably knock me across the room and it’d take 10 minutes to realize that I got there.”

“And if I ‘thought’ for you, with my quirk,” Hitoshi says, his hand hesitating over the button to turn the digital mode off, basically turning his quirk on. He has control, right under his hand, but whether he has trust and whether Sato even wants that is still up in the air. But whether he wants to do this, he does. He’s curious, and the way that everyone seems to lean forward, Izuku’s frown pinched like he’s trying to hold his breath rather than speak, they seem to be too. “It’s part of my responsibility too, since I helped with the cake.”

“Shinsou’s quirk controls motor functions with simple commands, carried out verbally, but the time it takes for the brain to process those commands is usually pretty short, but maybe not short enough to use in an actual fight, unless there’s a way to decrease that processing time with repeated usage or even simpler commands, but whether Sato can still understand those commands under Sugar Rush is still-” Izuku mutters, as the life seems to drain out of Bakugo’s eyes while he just watches.

“If you want me to Brainwash you, it might work better,” Hitoshi says, because Izuku is right that there’s more differences in his quirk than he realized at first, it’s not as simple as he first thought. And it might not be because he has two quirks now, Confession and Brainwashing. “But I haven’t tried it, and it's up to you. Whether you want me to be involved or not."

"You're... not gonna make me say anything weird, right?" Sato asks, still hesitant about it even as his hand moves in the pocket of his blue and red gym uniform, he probably has a few candies still left in there from other training sessions.

"No. Once you answer me, I'll take control, but unless you get hurt during that control, you'll forget everything that happened," Hitoshi says, pressing the button and trying to put Nemoto out of his mind. This is his quirk, and his question will be in his own words. Not his. He's done it before, and he'll do it again, as many times as it takes to drive the ghost controlling Nemoto's quirk out of him. "Do you want me to take control?"

The time it takes Sato to smile, to answer, might be seconds, but it feels so much longer than that when Hitoshi can't breathe. This is a test. "If we win, make sure I remember it."

He pulls the string, effortlessly, and he can ignore everyone's eyes on him to feel how it's different. So much like Eri sometimes, he feels like the connection is almost too deep. There's a little nausea that comes, when he sees how lifeless Sato looks now, wonders how the others look too when they see that, if everything was fine because he had a mask but now he's using it the wrong way.

"Should you test it first?" Izuku asks, and Hitoshi's neck hurts from turning his head so suddenly. He shouldn't be scared when he offered, but he is. "Just, to see if it's different, and make sure Sato can still act the same way he should-"

"Deku has been begging for a goddamn quirk peep show, so just show him the goods so he'll shut up about it," Bakugo grouches, even if Izuku protests, but he's probably right that Izuku wants to know. To have a demonstration like this.

Hitoshi turns back to Sato, feeling the string that's only in his mind, even if it feels like it's in his hands. He tries to command him to eat the candy but his hand only raises slightly. "When it's a willing connection, you can make people act without talking?" Izuku asks, but he's wrong.

"With... Eri," Hitoshi admits, dropping his hand from his mask after he does. "That wasn't what I tried to do with him, but he might be able to dodge quicker. Take the candy out of your pocket and eat it."

Several of them start shouting, but whatever he did wrong, it's too late with the fistfull of candies in Sato's mouth, he's already chewing.

"Sato's quirk is more powerful and in effect longer the more sugar he consumes, and each candy is already enough for 10 minutes!" Izuku says, and he could have said that sooner.

"Were they still in the wrapper?" Kaminari asks, and it's too late to know as Sato swallows. What little Hitoshi could see from his pupils being glazed over from his quirk disappears as his eyes roll back in his head, his muscles bulging out more and more. But Sato is still limp, still under his control. The string remains the same.

"Raise your hand," Hitoshi commands, and a simple command like that is quickly followed. Maybe a little too quick, but Izuku's predictions are probably just getting to him. "Punch."

He wanted Sato to punch with his left hand, his less dominant one. And that's what he did.

And he wasn't specific. "Jump."

Sato jumps backwards. His arms bend slightly to steady himself, but jumping backwards wasn't specified, but it's what Hitoshi wanted him to do. Is it really that easy, when someone wants to be under his quirk?

"Point to the person that's controlling you," Hitoshi says, and Sato doesn't move. He doesn't recognize what he means, until Hitoshi tries to imagine that he's pointing to him, and repeats himself. "Point to the person controlling you."

He points. Kaminari, Kirishima, and Uraraka are clapping softly for some reason, they look too awestruck, but Izuku's green eyes are burning bright like he has so many questions.

But they don't have time to play around with this, when Sato's quirk has a time limit. When Hitoshi knows that anytime he speaks without a command, it's unpleasant for the person he's controlling. "Kneel down."

Sato is still pretty tall, so it's hard to climb on his shoulders. It might be pointless to do this, but if they're fighting together, he'll be in this fight. He'll be fighting Aizawa using one of his students.

And it probably isn't fair, but he's excited all the same when he sees just a touch of shock on Aizawa's face, when Sato carries him to the mat. When he explains what's going on, and Aizawa agrees, with a stipulation he honestly hadn't considered. Of course he's not going to make Aizawa into a punching bag, he's not that cruel or underhanded.

But Aizawa is pretty underhanded, when he pulls the capture scarf out of his pocket and it soars over a rafter, just to wrap around him, his arms and chest before he's lifted up in a breathless moment, opening his eyes to look down from where he's dangling.

Aizawa just looks up at him, before he twists the scarf a certain way, twirling it around him to secure a small amount of resistance where it's holding him up from the fucking roof so that he doesn't fall immediately when he tosses his end to the side. Kirishima still lunges to pick it up in case he falls. "If this is an 'honorable fight,' it shouldn't be two on one."

"I wasn't going to attack you," Hitoshi argues, but he knows better than to fight his way out of this restraint. He's not so high up that it'll hurt much to fall, but if Aizawa has yet another stipulation, he could have said so.

Aizawa just nods, before he looks back at Sato. Sato is still under his control, and maybe Aizawa wants him to make the first move.

Maybe, Aizawa is an asshole for making him make the first move, because even if it's Sato attacking first, he still doesn't like it. "Kick!"

Sato sweeps his leg to try to catch the low stance Aizawa chose, and maybe Aizawa expected him to be specific in his commands. But Hitoshi almost has to laugh, because fate wasn't on Aizawa's side. That's probably the only reason they have a chance with this.

But Aizawa drops lower to the ground to dodge, trying to move to Sato's unguarded left side. "Punch!" Aizawa would have expected a cross aiming down, since Sato is still unsteady from the kick, but Sato swings out an arm on the same side and Aizawa has to jump back a bit faster to avoid it. "Run. Tackle."

Aizawa wants to run, so Sato has to chase. Aizawa keeps himself low, so he has to force Sato lower. He orders the tackle at the right moment but Sato's arms flare out a bit too wide, Aizawa takes that hesitation to take advantage of Sato's bending forward and open stance to throw an arm against his chest, a foot braced on his hip to try to throw him down. They're close to the circle drawn on the mat, the boundary, Hitoshi shouldn't have let them get that close.

He can't make Sato lose now. "Elbow down!"

He can break Aizawa's hold with Sato's elbow hitting his shoulder just right, both of them stumble back, but Aizawa's stance is still low. Before he moves too quick, charging behind with an arm wrapped around Sato's shoulder, trying to swing him out given that Sato is solid muscle and only angles and pins will work for him.

"Turn and throw!" But Hitoshi commands him to move with the momentum, he almost steps out of bounds and it takes longer for him to grab Aizawa by the side of his jumpsuit, but he lifts Aizawa off of him and off the ground before tossing him out of the ring and away from the mat completely.

Aizawa rolls twice, the wrong way. Since he was thrown at nearly a horizontal angle, his shoe catches the floor first, and he keeps that angle rather than getting both feet under him. But eventually, he spreads and arm out to catch himself, to pull himself to sit up. Hitoshi can see a flash of a wince when he does. But maybe he's the only one.

Because it's only quiet for a moment, before the students start to cheer. Some of them chanting, completely unaware that what they're saying is completely embarrassing. "Cake feelings! Cake feelings! Cake feelings!"

Some of them move to crowd around Sato, still standing limp and without command until the connection is severed, and the way he jumps back from Kaminari seems to indicate it was him. He still moves sluggishly when he raises his hand, his mouth dropping open long before he speaks. "Sensei! Alright?"

"What," Aizawa starts, and the tone in his voice is not a good sign. "Exactly are 'cake feelings?'"

Aizawa pulls himself up to stand, and Kirishima runs to hand him the end of the capture scarf. Hitoshi would really, really rather he didn't. Especially when Aizawa looks up at him from the ground like that.

"Mon chère ami took much offense to his family for your cake decorating, Sensei," Aoyama says, his hands on Sato's shoulder and elbow, but he looks almost possessive and smug like he was really any help with this victory. "These cake feelings cannot be denied! They must be freed!"

Sato just groans breathily, a hand raising to swat the air near Aoyama's hands, but he looks too 'in that zone' to figure out where Aoyama actually is to swat him away. "Sensei...."

Aizawa just sighs, still looking at Hitoshi. He'd really rather he didn't, especially when he starts unwinding the loops around the capture scarf to slowly lower him to the ground. "That was Hitoshi's fault, for picking a design like that. Neither of us could afford half-measures for Eri's birthday."

"That's true," Todoroki agrees, while Kirishima seems to be wincing in pain, his fists working up and down like he can't contain how 'manly' he thinks that is. But too many of them look stunned, like they just realized how much of this was still Hitoshi's fault, not Aizawa's.

But, Sato can't take his revenge on Hitoshi when he's 'in the zone' like that, and when the capture scarf unwinds from his arms and chest only to pull back to Aizawa, Hitoshi is at least relieved that he might be able to run if he has to. Sero grunts something with his teeth still clenched in a toothy smile, something that sounds like Hitoshi's name and fits with the nervous wideness of his eyes, but Bakugo just elbows Sero's side and argues that he was right, about whatever that was between them.

Aizawa walks up to Sato, putting a hand on the shoulder that Aoyama isn't clinging to, and activates his quirk even if his ponytail flies up and looks stupid. "Sato... I recognize your 'cake feelings.'"

Sato's pupils are back, his muscles have retreated back to normal, and he looks cognizant enough to be shocked by Aizawa's words. "Sensei, I... thank you. Are you alright?"

Aizawa deactivates his quirk and Sato slumps forward like that was a physical blow, now groaning about how 'sleeby' he is. Aizawa just pulls back his hand, sighing at his students like it's no longer fun to deal with them. "If that's enough for you, this training exercise is over."

Midoriya looks like the only one displeased with that, raising his hand and staring at Hitoshi with an intensity that looks painful for him to have, and Hitoshi knows it can only be due to all the unanswered questions he has about his quirk.

"Eri's birthday party has also been opened to any student on campus, and there will be a ferris wheel at Principal Nezu's insistence. None of you are obligated to attend-" The cheering that erupts seems to startle Aizawa as much as it does Hitoshi, but at least it's distracting from any further 'cake feelings.'

Iida and Kirishima are the first to break to gather Sato's limp weight over their shoulders, though Aoyama darts around like he wants to help. Shoji doesn't say anything, but he nods to himself like he's pleased about it. Midoriya beams too bright when he asks Aizawa if it's the same ferris wheel that was at the Cultural Festival, saying that it was Eri's favorite ride.

Eri's favorite ride, from the Cultural Festival. The festival that he wasn't there for, didn't get to ride with her.

But now he can. He can see everything she likes about it, everything that makes her happy tomorrow. Some of the things that made her happy on that day that he missed, when she was scared, until she realized that she was living among heroes, instead of villains.

When she learned how to smile for the first time, in a way that anyone would recognize, even if he can always tell from her eyes when she's happy.

Hitoshi should probably follow the hero students to change out of this uniform, this spare that he has no right to and hasn't dirtied with sweat and effort nearly as much as he planned. But as Aizawa watches the last of them leave the gym, curling a hand behind his neck, Hitoshi can spot every lock of hair worked out of his hair tie, sweat gathering on his hairline because his hero uniform really seems too thick to be comfortable. "It seems like they've accepted you as one of their own, with all the antics that entails."

Hitoshi tucks his hands in the pockets of this uniform's pants, even if he stiffens when he recognizes that movement as something from Uraraka's impression of Aizawa. This entire exercise, especially that 'fight,' was pretty stupid.

But, he doesn't regret it completely. "You didn't have to be specific with Sato. And you didn't take the opportunity to spar with them in a 'friendly quirkless fight,'" Aizawa says, the corner of his mouth moving up in an attempt at a smile, something that just makes him look mocking and smug when he repeats All Might's words.

"You didn't set up another mat," Hitoshi explains, rubbing the back of his neck, even if he knows he's the least taxed from this training exercise. And he hates that. "Izuku was right about a willing Brainwash. It's different. Easier."

Aizawa just hums, stretching his arms over his head, and Hitoshi notices how he pulls on the arm that he landed on. The one with the massive scar on his elbow from that Decay quirk, an old injury. "Lucky for you, otherwise I would have won in seconds if I knew what Sato was going to do as soon as you told him to do it."

"I still could have won," Hitoshi argues, out of pride if nothing else. Even if it's pointless, and he knows Aizawa is right. He's just lucky that Aizawa didn't press his clearest advantage, if he hadn't relied solely on pinning and grappling and broke Sato out of his control, he would have ended it sooner.

If he had hurt Sato just enough, he would have won in those seconds he claimed. But he didn't. And Hitoshi doesn't know why. "Prove it."

With those two words, Hitoshi is acutely aware of where they're standing. In a gym, Aizawa is already on the mat. Something made to cushion a falling body far better than the concrete floors at The Miasma and 8 Precepts. Something he's already fought Aizawa on before.

But when Aizawa didn't look so exhausted, behind that intolerable smug grin.

"Aizawa-sensei, you must hydrate properly if you wish to participate in this taxing exercise," Hitoshi says, with Iida's Persona Cord, and with his hands chopping stiffly around to mimic the class president too. For some reason, Aizawa is just in an intolerably good mood right now, when he actually laughs in a short way, like he was caught off guard.

"That was perfect, and I'll take you up on that," Aizawa says, shuffling off towards the water fountain near the changing rooms, and leaving Hitoshi alone in this massive gym. Just to look up at the ceiling he was dangling from only a while ago.

Aizawa probably didn't want to hurt him either in that fight, even if it would have made it easier for him to win.

*

"Mirio!" Eri yells, and she wishes she could run over to him, but the shopping bags Yama let her carry are kinda heavy. But Mirio turns around and smiles at her, making Tama run over too because they're holding hands, since they're really in love a whole lot now.

"Well, if it isn't two out of the Big Three out and about!" Yama says, holding the two heavy boxes he got different as soon as Mirio reaches out like he wants to take them for him. "You guys getting ready for the holiday break?"

"Aw, that's way less exciting than what's happening tomorrow!" Mirio says, before he bends over to look at Eri closer, but he puts one of his knees on the ground before he bends even more down, like he's really trying to bow low. "The amazing, spectacular, perfect sixth birthday for our very own, Princess Eri!"

Eri smiles really big, 'cause she loves the Sailor Moon tiara that Yama bought her from that shop with all the nice costumes. The nice person who works there even made it so there's a wire loop around her horn, to make sure it doesn't fall off her head. "It's Sailor Moon's silver crystal tiara! When she's the moon princess!"

"And you're always the princess of UA," Tama says, smiling real nice but when Mirio looks up at him and acts like he's crying in his arm, his face gets really red and he gets really slouchy.

"Tamaki," Mirio says, still talking like he's crying, even though he's not. But he kind of is a little, but that's okay because Twenny cries when he's happy too. "Ah, you're both so cute, I can't stand it!"

"You wouldn't happen to have a tuxedo on hand, would you guys?" Yama asks, kind of like he's serious, but he has his teasing face on with his eyebrows. "Because I don't mind sharing the role if you feel like playing a little dress up-

"But you can't be the cats!" Eri says, 'cause they can't get this part wrong. "Only Zawa and Twenny can be cats, 'cause they won't do it if they have an excuse!"

That's what Yama said, and Yama's probably right, and it would really make Eri sad if Zawa and Twenny don't match on her birthday, especially when the cat costumes she picked out look so cute.

"Absolutely," Yama says, nodding his head because she's really right. "It's very important that Shou and Hitoshi are dressed up like those matching Sailor Moon cats on Eri's special day, so we can't afford to give them any excuse not to do it."

Mirio and Tama look kinda scared, but Yama looks kinda scary, so that's probably why. "And... Aizawa agreed to do that?" Mirio asks, but Yama just has a kind of scary smile when he laughs.

"I mean, how can Shou tell the little bean no?" Yama asks, but if Zawa really doesn't want to, that's okay, 'cause everyone can say 'no' when someone asks them to do something that makes them mad or makes their tummy feel weird, like her book from Aunt Nemmie said. "You wanna get a sneak peek of the costume design?"

Mirio and Tama nod a whole lot, 'cause they really wanna see Zawa and Twenny's costumes, and Eri picked them out herself, so she knows they're really cute. Mirio and Tama both say that they can help her carry her bags, but she wants to do it all on her own, 'cause they're full of stuff that she picked to give to her friends on her birthday.

When Yama opens the door to their home, he sticks his head in first to peek at something, before he opens it big for everyone else to come in. "Looks like Shou and Hitoshi are still with those little herolets, so they can still be surprised."

Eri puts her bags on the couch and her arms feel kinda like noodles from being so strong, but that's okay 'cause she wanted Twenny to help her make her gift bags anyway. "Yama got a whole lot of boxes, but they're all s'posed to be secret until tomorrow! So don't peek!"

Mirio nods, and does a salute with a smile. "Scout's honor! Looks like you've had to keep everyone in line to make sure your birthday goes off without a hitch!"

Eri nods, 'cause she's had to do a lot today, and pick a whole lot of things, but she knows that just means her birthday will be perfect. "I got everyone stuff that they're gonna like for coming to my birthday, and Nezzzy got a lot of ponies for everyone to ride on! And they look really cute!"

"Oh no, Principal Nezu got her a pony?" Mirio says, and he looks really worried at Yama. "Jeez, I guess it's a good thing I got a gift receipt."

"I think Nezu settled on a carousel of ponies, which is great because we have nowhere to put the real deal," Yama says, before he puts his new secret boxes on top of the other secret boxes, and smiles when he pulls out the bags where Zawa and Twenny's costumes are. "And before you ask, that is face paint. Gotta get those little moons right, along with the whiskers."

Mirio and Tama look, but Yama isn't pulling the costumes out, but Mirio holds his hands in front of his mouth like he thinks they're really cute, before he points in the bag, and Yama nods. And Mirio looks really happy when he looks at her, 'cause he knows she picked the cutest things for Zawa and Twenny. "Eri, you're going to look so pretty!"

Eri nods, 'cause she's got a really pretty tiara, and she knows Yama's gonna make her look really cute for her party, 'cause he makes the best Sailor Moon pigtails even though Twenny tries his best too.

"Speaking of pretty, I'll need to get dolled up myself, and a certain little birthday bean should probably pack a bag for her slumber party with the herolets," Yama says, and Eri hurries to pick out her clothes so she doesn't miss Yama getting pretty. She has a bag for going to the heroes' dorm, and she can reach all of her sleeping clothes and her toothbrush and comb, but it's hard to pick which plushie she wants to take.

Until she remembers that there's a really cute cat plushie on the couch, and even if that's her birthday present from Zawa or Twenny, they should have hidden it better if it's a surprise.

Eri carries her bag to the couch and hugs the cute cat plushie really tight to make sure it's right before she puts it in her bag, but Yama isn't getting pretty at all. Yama and Mirio and Tama are looking in the fridge, and whispering too quiet to really hear what they're saying. "Did Toshi make more cupcakes?"

Yama closes the door real quick and almost hurts Tama before he jumps away, and he looks nervous because she's probably guessed it right. "Just taking a peek at the big cake that Hitoshi and Shou whipped up, but I'm sure they want it to be a surprise! I can tell you that it's perfect though, and looks like it was made to be chock full of love, so thick you can taste it!"

"It is really perfect for you," Tama says, and that just makes Eri wanna see it more, but she doesn't wanna be whiney and stompy, so she's just gotta be patient again.

"But, Yamada was just saying that he needs to pick out the perfect plate for it!" Mirio says, and even though that's another big decision Eri's gotta make, and she's kinda tired of it, she runs over so Mirio can pick her up and help her see all her options.

The really pretty glass plate that kinda looks like Sailor Moon's silver crystal is too small, so Eri knows it's a really big cake, but the big pink one she picks after that is one that Yama says is perfect. But even after she picks it, Mirio doesn't put her down, and she's okay with that.

"I guess if you're running low on time, we can escort our princess to see what her royal cats are up to," Mirio says, and Eri really likes that idea, because Mirio and Tama have been in love too long and they're not spending enough time with her, so she nods, and Yama smiles real big like he likes that too.

"That sounds like a great idea! I guess this means I'll be seeing you in the AM, little bean, but don't forget to tell Shou to turn on the FM for me, because I've got a big birthday shoutout to make on my radio show tonight," Yama says, before he fixes her tiara for her again, even though it was only sliding off at the ends. "I love you, kiddo."

"I love you too!" Eri says, before she kicks to get down so she can get her bag, even if Tama says he can carry it. Eri can carry it herself, because she's a big girl, and she's gonna be six years old tomorrow, and she can't even wait to be that old.

But she's still little, and that's good, because even though she can carry her bag, she can hold Mirio and Tama's hands so they're still holding hands but not forgetting her, and Mirio shows her a fun game where they can pick her up and swing her, kind of like a swing. And he really could have showed her earlier, 'cause it's a lot of fun, and the snow does a big crunch when she swings down and lands on it.

Eri can hear that some of the heroes are practice fighting, but it doesn't sound like a lot of them. Eri kinda wants to surprise them, so she lets go of Tama's hand to put her finger on her mouth to tell Mirio and Tama the plan, and they put their fingers up too so they'll be quiet.

But when Eri and Mirio peek around the wall to see where the heroes are, it's not really the heroes practice fighting.

It's Zawa and Twenny fighting.

Zawa and Twenny are on the big blue mat that Zawa always tells Ugo to go to when he wants to fight, and Twenny is dressed up like he's a hero with his red and blue practice suit. And Eri knows that Twenny likes fighting sometimes, and she wants Twenny and Zawa to have fun, but it makes her tummy feel weird 'cause Twenny doesn't really look like he's having fun. Not when he's wearing his voice changer mask, 'cause it looks really bad right now, instead of fun, even with her stickers on it.

When Zawa picks Twenny up by his leg and an arm and spins him around to throw him on the ground, it doesn't look fun. It looks bad, really bad, it makes her feel bad and she doesn't want Twenny to get hurt again like that, she doesn't want to see him have blood or make those noises and she wants Mirio to stop them-

"Eri, it's alright," Mirio says, and he lets go of her hand and gets small with her, but she grabs his jacket 'cause he has to help Twenny-

"Ow," Twenny says, but he doesn't say things like that when he's hurt really bad. Eri looks and Twenny's moving his arm over his chest, but he's not getting up, 'cause Zawa hurt him and he promised not to.

But Zawa walks over to Twenny quick, and kneels down really close to Twenny, 'cause he looks worried. "Are you alrigh-"

Zawa's arms look like they turn into noodles kinda, and it looks weird but Twenny sits up like he wasn't hurt at all, and he was just pretending to tease Zawa. "Lay down, with your hand raised to the ceiling."

Mirio is watching too, 'cause he tries to cover his mouth to make his laughing quieter, as Twenny grabs Zawa's arm and his shoulder and moves his own legs a couple times before he stops, but clicks one of the buttons on his mask before he talks again.

"Alright?" Twenny asks, like he's kinda worried about Zawa, and Zawa's other hand comes off the mat but stops for a bit before he runs it over his face. "You hit your head pretty bad that time-"

"Zawa, Twenny's tricking you!" Eri yells, and Twenny looks really surprised, but Tama and Mirio laugh. But Eri runs over to Zawa and Twenny to make sure they're really okay, and they are even though they're really sweaty. "Twenny used his quirk to make you lay down, so you didn't get hurt, it's just a logical ruse!"

"Eri," Twenny says, and his head drops down 'cause he knows that's wrong, he's supposed to tell her about all his tricks and it's not fair she didn't tell him. But Zawa smiles at her real big, before he sits up, but he holds his head like it hurts, even if he's still kinda smiling.

"Oh, my head still feels dizzy from that logical ruse, Hitoshi really hit me hard with that logical ruse-"

"An emotional ruse," Twenny says, kinda mad, before he looks up at Zawa kinda mad, but not really. "I was using your concern about me against you, it's an emotional ruse."

"It's still a trick," Eri says, but Twenny's kinda right about that. "But since Zawa didn't know about it, it's not a logical ruse, so Twenny's kinda right."

"Only 'kinda,'" Zawa says, like he likes teasing Twenny a whole lot, and that's fair 'cause Twenny was teasing Zawa. And Zawa puts his hand on her head to look at her super cute tiara, and that's okay 'cause Eri likes when he does that, and it never makes her mad or her tummy feel weird. "Seems like you had fun with Hizashi."

"Yup!" Eri says, and she's got a lot to say about it, but Twenny pulls down his mask just to show how nice he's smiling, 'cause he thinks her tiara is cute too, and she already knows it.

"Eraserhead, how does it feel to be taken down by the Brainwashing hero himself, felled by his ultimate move, the Emotional Ruse?" Mirio asks, holding out an invisible microphone at Zawa as he walks closer, but Tama is pulling at his arm like he wants him to stop, even though he's following too.

"I don't usually take interviews, but I will comment on the fact that friendly fire is something to be avoided in every aspect of hero work," Zawa says, looking really serious when he waves his hand like he wants Mirio to go away, but he doesn't really.

"And our newest hero- I don't believe we got your hero name, so I guess we'll stick with Brainwashing hero-"

"Hero Kitty!" Eri says, 'cause that's a really good name, and she picked it already for when Twenny grows up to be Mirio's sidekick. But Twenny puts his mask back on, so she can't tell if he really likes it.

"Hero Kitty! How does it feel to take down a veteran hero like Eraserhead himself?" Mirio asks, and he holds the microphone out to Twenny, but Twenny stares at it like he's really trying to see it, even though it's not there.

"I've decided to retire, after fulfilling the dream I had that led me to be a hero," Twenny says, really serious so he can play along too. "Now that I've defeated Eraserhead, there's no reason for me to be a hero any longer."

"Ah, I guess Aizawa was right about public feuds between heroes being a detriment to real hero work," Mirio sighs, and his invisible microphone goes away when he tucks his hands in his pockets. "It's a good thing no one's hurt, though! I think it was a little scary at first to see two heroes going at it, even if it's a friendly spar."

It was kinda scary, in a way that makes Eri feel kinda silly, 'cause she forgot that Zawa is a hero and he's not supposed to hurt Twenny, ever. Only villains do that, but they don't live with villains anymore, so Twenny won't ever get hurt. 'Cause Eri knows he's good at fighting, and the heroes only get hurt at practice fighting 'cause they're still learning. "But you gotta get better at it, Toshi, so you don't gotta trick Zawa to win!"

"That will take a while," Zawa says, which just makes Twenny's eyes look mad, but Zawa thinks it's funny. "But, he has a better chance than my students, and he did well before resorting to an emotional ruse."

"You never said not to use my quirk, so it still counts," Twenny says, kinda like he's teasing, but he's not real good at it. But that's okay, 'cause Twenny just needs more practice, and Zawa can teach him a lot about a lot of stuff, now that it seems like they're friends.

And Eri's really ready to go to the hero dorm so she can have fun with almost all her friends, and get Twenny to help her make her gift bags, and wait for Yama to give her a big shout on his radio show, and finally turn six years old.

'Cause she's never gotten to really turn a year older before, so she can't wait to do that with all her friends, and all the people that she loves a whole lot, and all the surprises that are waiting for her tomorrow.

*

Hitoshi really fucked up this time.

It was easy to ignore it, making the cake, dealing with the hero students, losing himself too easily when he was training with Aizawa, in a way that's hard to call training. Sometimes, he'd catch himself growing tense, waiting for Bug's voice to call out for something he knew he did wrong only after he did it, but instead Aizawa's voice broke through his thoughts. Sometimes almost gentle, sometimes with a teasing edge, mocking in a way that was irritating to hear, but fun to argue with.

He had fun with Aizawa. Even if Aizawa was acting weird. Maybe Sato hit his head, and he'll be back to normal tomorrow, after he sleeps.

Eri had fun with Yamada, like he knew she would, and even if there's some sort of 'logical ruse' she has planned, obvious with the way she'll start to talk about a certain store, before she changes the subject and gets a bit more fidgety, he knows it won't be ill-intended. He doesn't know if it will be on himself or Aizawa or both, but hearing about the crepes she ate and a reflection of Yamada's excitement in how she describes him during that trip, he knows they both enjoyed their adventure away from UA. And he's not jealous of that.

But when they stopped by their dorm to get ready to go to the 1-A dorm, Yamada had already left to go on patrol. He even made dinner too, a quick stir fry that was covered up and still warm on the stove, but easy to heat up, even if Eri didn't seem happy to realize that Yamada being gone meant that they hadn't had a meal together today. Aizawa promised her that they'd be together all day, for her birthday.

Eri's birthday.

He helped bake her cake with Aizawa and All Might, he's followed through on his promise to her so far to spend every minute tonight, tomorrow, and the next night with her, following her to the Safe Room to put away their things and help her make her gift bags. She demonstrated the things that everyone gets, but there are a few little things that are individualized, and he wasn't allowed to help her write on the bags to identify them because she wanted to do them by herself. It's almost a little funny, how much she insists that she can do so many things independently, like she wants to prove herself ready for when midnight strikes and she becomes an entire year older.

And he followed her downstairs to the 1-A common room, where the hero students had already arranged for one of her favorite things, a movie marathon. With blankets already spread out, snacks and drinks made, and a place of honor in the middle of the couch where she insisted he sit beside her, then decided where everyone else would sit, they watched a Disney movie called ‘The Aristocats’ and one of the weirder Sailor Moon movies that she likes back-to-back, and it seemed like everyone enjoyed it. The more he thinks of that little white kitten in the Aristocats, he thinks that character suits Eri more and more.

But now Eri is asleep on his arm, even if she’s holding Izuku’s hand on the other side. Ashi keeps looking over at her, thinking that she looks cute with her tiara tilted now, her eyes closed, and a bit of drool gathering on the corner of her mouth. If she stays on the couch, he could pull this off without violating the rule that he doesn’t leave her, and he’s sure that Todoroki would be fine switching places with him.

But he knows he fucked up, even if he tries to cling to the fact that he doesn’t have a choice at this point. He slowly guides Eri to lean on Izuku a bit more, and she takes to that even in sleep to cling to his arm, pulling her legs on the couch to get more comfortable.

“Where ya running off to?” Ashi asks, a little louder than he’d like when he stands up, but luckily Eri seems to be able to sleep through anything, especially how loud the 1-A students can get when they’re arguing about what the Sailor Scouts’ quirks would be if they were real.

“The kitchen, I need to use it,” Hitoshi whispers, and refuses to look at Sato when he does. “Can you tell me if she wakes up?”

“Will do!” Ashi says with a salute, again too loud, but she shuffles into his place like she hopes that Eri will decide to cuddle with her, an opportunity that Uraraka seems to think is a waiting game when she jumps up to take Ashi’s former place.

Hitoshi walks over to the kitchen, turning the light on over the stove to illuminate the dark space, before he opens the refrigerator. Yamada even packed him a bag of everything he needs, already measured too, so he knows he can trust it. Eri was curious about it, even more so when he said it was a surprise, but as he puts the bag on the counter and sees the recipe already written down, with a note that it was Yamada’s mom’s recipe, that he’ll do great with it, he has to bite his lips and ignore the sick feeling. It feels worse looking at the coffee flavored cake they saved for his ‘fake’ birthday, that Ashi saved for him even after he said those things to her. That Sato made himself.

He can’t do this.

He thought this was the best that he could offer, to make something that Eri would like for breakfast, her favorite apple turnovers, but he knows that was selfish to the core. He knew then that Sato was going to make them, he was going to make them exactly the way that Eri likes, and that he really only wanted to make them to see how she would look when she liked something he made by himself. He just wanted that.

But Sato is making those apple turnovers, and cinnamon rolls. That’s what Sato wants to do for Eri.

He has nothing to offer that Eri won’t get from others, he has nothing to offer her on her first real birthday.

He tries to ignore it. He tries to focus on moving quietly, listening for the conversations to make sure that the hero students aren’t paying attention to him. He listens to some of them leaving now that Eri is asleep, wishes Sato would.

He wishes this baking pan wasn’t so noisy either as he butters it, that he could core and slice each apple without a small tap when the corer meets the cutting board. Yamada packed the rest of the glazed apples that he made for Eri's cake too in a small tupperware, it could work but it's too small a portion to do it properly. It would probably turn out into mush if he bakes them again.

Hitoshi keeps himself moving, focusing solely on the next step. The pastry dough is thawed, he turns the stove on and starts preheating the oven, the butter melts in the pan and he puts the diced apples in, forcing himself to wait for the rest. Two minutes, he checks his phone. Two minutes of stirring, then the brown sugar and cinnamon, two minutes more and then the cornstarch and water, one minute of stirring until it's done.

"Fucking applemania over here," Bakugo says, his arms crossed, he looks like Hitoshi is doing everything wrong, he only talks that calmly when something is wrong. "Need a hand or some shit?"

"I've got it," Hitoshi says, he wants Bakugo to leave, stop staring at him like that. Don't bring any attention to this, what he's fucking up, what he's doing right in front of Sato, how insulting he is and he knows it. He doesn't have any other choice.

Bakugo does leave, taking a soda for himself and Kirishima. Hitoshi adds the brown sugar, the cinnamon, already measured. Yamada won't let him fuck up this part at least, he checks the recipe again. Almost forgets to check the time, two more minutes.

The oven is preheated. He checks the time, it's 10:30. Maybe it's close to curfew for the students, maybe Aizawa isn't going to enforce that. Maybe he's making them too early, maybe they'll be ruined if they get cold, if they're not fresh, if this isn't the best he can do.

"Smells good!" Uraraka says, too loud. "Did you already make something to go on top?"

Uraraka is poking at the tupperware, he tells himself he doesn't mind, she can touch it, this is fine. "No. I'm fine."

Uraraka didn't offer to help him, but she takes a package of bean sprouts out of the refrigerator. Just bean sprouts. He can tell by the other students' questions that she's just eating them by themselves, as a snack. She says it's good.

Maybe, he should try it.

It's been two minutes, almost three maybe, he can't check the seconds but he got distracted, cornstarch and water, the water isn't measured but it's just one tablespoon, he can do that. Maybe, it was a little less than that, maybe he spilled some, but if he adds more it will be too much, this is fine, it's okay that he's doing this, he doesn't have any other choice.

He stirs, he tests how the apples aren't done but they're not supposed to be, they're just supposed to be softened on the outside to soak up the flavor. He tests the flavor, and it's sweet. He turns off the stove, he just has to roll out the pastry dough, and he does that. He just has to cut it into squares, fill and fold them, bake them, the pan is already buttered, the oven is preheated.

The pan is already buttered. He rolled out the dough on a buttered pan. Now it's all buttered.

He didn't taste the apples before he turned the stove off.

He could not have fucked up in a worse way.

This is Eri, Eri's birthday, he's wanted this for so long and he has less to offer than he did before when he tried to give her a birthday before they were rescued. There's no soap he can give her, no ripped teddy bear, no books, nothing. Just these apple turnovers that he ruined, and she'll realize it and she'll hate him at last and he's stupid enough to feel like he doesn't deserve it.

Hitoshi stares at the rolled out dough, until it starts to look blurry. He tries not to breathe, because he doesn't want to cry, he'd rather just stop breathing forever and just die so he doesn't ruin Eri's birthday, but he sinks to the floor to press his head against the cabinets there, staring at a brown streak that looks like soy sauce. He feels like less than that, less than a stain on a cabinet, and wishes he could be seen as that low, as something to ignore like that.

But these fucking eggs won't let him be ignored, even though he's fine. "Shinny? Are you okay?"

It's Ashi, he doesn't need to look. She should go back to the couch, keep Eri warm. She shouldn't crouch down with him, he knows he's acting stupid. "I'm f-fine."

Ashi sits down next to him, a hand starting at his shoulder runs down his arm, to hold his hand. He didn't ask for that. "It doesn't really seem like you're fine, Shinny. I can help you cook, even though Bakugo or Sato would be better, and I can make them help you too-"

"I can't-" Hitoshi pulls his hand away, trying to catch the tears before they soak through the padding of the mask, it's already wet, he's already ruined everything. "He's going to make them, he's going to make them better, and it's-s s-stupid. S-s-stupid idea."

"It's not stupid, whatever your idea is," Ashi says, leaning closer to him with her chin braced on her bent knee. "And we're the best at stupid ideas, Shinny, so you're in the right place to pull it off! Without being stupid!"

"You've got a good base, with the apple filling," Sato says, and Hitoshi can't stop the flinch that rolls over his shoulders because it's Sato, he should know what he's doing, be insulted, just use his quirk and beat him with it. "After filling the dough, you can put it in the fridge, and I can heat them up in the morning when I make the cinnamon rolls."

"That's-s-s not-" Hitoshi clenches his teeth, wishing he could throw his head through the cabinet door if Sato won't do it for him, he can't decide if he wants to open his mouth, let more of this spill out, if he even wants to have teeth or have this mask or have to answer to these stares.

"There's not shit you've done wrong, so there's not shit worth crying over, dipshit," Bakugo adds, and Hitoshi feels a sob nearly break from him because even Bakugo doesn't understand, he fucked up, and there's nothing for it, there's nothing to salvage here, he should just leave. "Look, Sato doesn't have his fucking panties in a twist about you giving the pipsqueak those apple turnovers stuffed with crack, so get that shit situated in your dumbass purple head and let's get at these fuckers. We're not gonna let you fuck this up, so stop crying."

"Kacchan," Izuku says, and Izuku was supposed to stay on the couch, with Eri, she's alone and she shouldn't be. "Shinsou, it's really okay. If you want us to help, we can do that, but maybe you can start by telling us what's wrong."

"Nothing," Hitoshi says, too loud, and he can't stop it, his hands pulling away from his face and he doesn't know what to do with them, but he has to do something. "I don't have any-y-thing to g-give Eri. J-just this, and it's fucking stupid."

Now they know, so they're not going to argue anymore. They know he fucked up, he fucked up Eri's birthday, he doesn't have anything and they do so they're going to hate him and they should but he doesn't fucking want that.

"Just apple turnovers," Sato says, like he's angry, like he should be, like Hitoshi wanted but he doesn't. "Just homemade apple turnovers- and the store bought dough is fine, it's a good brand, but that cake too, but you're... you're you, you don't really have to do all this for Eri, Shinsou."

"You could give the pipsqueak a moldy piece of lint and she'd go apeshit, Shitsou," Bakugo argues, and that's literally the stupidest thing he's ever heard, and he had to listen to Chisaki's opinions about quirks for hours. He's had to listen to Aizawa talk sometimes. "But seriously, you knew this shit was coming and you didn't get shit for her? Why the fuck didn't you think?"

"I can make something for you to give Eri, if that makes you feel better," Momo says, but that's not right, that's another gift from her that he's just handing to Eri and passing off as his own. "But, I think Eri's birthday has turned into something a bit bigger than it should be. It's Eri's sixth birthday, but she wouldn't want you to be upset, when she knows it's just as meaningful to you."

"You're still stuck on that 'not remembering me' shit, aren't you?" Bakugo growls, like he finally gets it, and Hitoshi doesn't know whether to nod, or laugh, or cry, or scream at him for being so fucking stupid, but he just ducks his head to force his hands against his eyes, trying not to cry. "Fucker, you're sticking around, so don't pull that shit, whatever two month bullshit Shitsei's telling you, he's a fucking liar so don't listen to that shit-"

"He's not," Hitoshi says, snapping up to look at Bakugo looming over the counter, he doesn't know why Sato looks confused, like he doesn't get it. They know what's going to happen. "I gave them everything, I just have to find the address, then they find them, two months and I'm gone. Don't tell me that I'm not, because you don't know shit, I know this is the only-"

He bites down on his lips, wishes he could just bleed. He can't stand to look at Bakugo, trying to find the stain on the cabinet. He hates this silence that breaks, like they didn't know how this plays out.

This is the only birthday he'll ever see. And he doesn't have enough to make it worthwhile, to tell Eri everything that she means to him. He didn't want her to be able to keep it, to remember him. If he made her these apple turnovers, she'd eat them and only have a memory, until she forgets. And forgets him.

But it's still not enough.

"Shinny, that's not going to happen," Ashi tries to argue, tries to grab his shoulder but he jerks away, she doesn't get it, there's nothing he can do, he'll leave with memories but that's all they'll ever be, he'll never keep this.

"Hi. To. Shi," Bakugo says, like it hurts to say it, and Hitoshi shouldn't like that it would, but he does. He wants to hurt him, make him stop talking. "Given name basis shit sure doesn't sound like you're not sticking around. I know you've only lived with humans for a couple fucking months but that's big shit, especially from Shisei. So I know he's full of shit."

"I told him to," Hitoshi mutters, probably just talking to the cabinet for all that Bakugo can understand him. At least he feels as numb as the cabinet, feels his mouth moving and words coming from the speakers in the mask, he's barely saying them. "After my mom. I didn't want them to call me 'Shinsou.'"

He feels Ashi's hand next to his on the floor, he doesn't know why she's not holding it. Why it's that close. "'Toshi' is cute. We can start calling you that too. We're perfectly fine with that, right?"

Ashi's doing that thing where she's speaking a threat, probably with the same frozen smile, and he wishes he could move to see it. But something about it almost makes him laugh, makes him shiver when he feels too real for a moment. “Just... with them. With you, it’s fine. I just....”

He wants what Eri has. But he can’t have it. It’s just selfish to let it get this far, when he knows it will only hurt.

“Shinsou,” Izuku says, and he’s using that voice. That one he can’t copy, the one that swears everything he says like he means it more than blood, but it doesn’t matter how much he means it, it’s never going to happen. “This is not your last birthday with Eri. No matter what happens, no matter what we have to do, you’re going to be there for every single birthday Eri has. So it’s fine if she doesn’t remember this one, or the next one, or the one after that, because she’ll remember that you were there, like you’ll always be. I promise.”

“You can’t promise that,” Hitoshi says, even if he wants to believe it. Even if his chest is aching with how much he wants that, his mind already spiraling to imagine how she’ll change, how tall she’ll grow, what she’ll look like every year, and he always pictures her looking more and more like Neji. He wants to see that.

“I promise,” Ashi says, more firmly, and he can feel her hand sweeping down like she’s mimicking Iida right now. “Even if you have to leave, and even if you try to run away to America, or fake your identity to hide from us, we will hunt you down, and break you into every single one of Eri’s birthday parties. And Aizawa-sensei couldn’t stop us if he tried, because he’s just one guy, against all of us, and he really doesn’t stand a chance when Eri wants you there.”

“And she really does,” Shoji says, and Hitoshi has no idea why all of them are jumping in on this, they really don’t have to. “Mizuno is only excited about Eri’s party, because it seems like you’re the main attraction. She’s excited to share her birthday with you, so that’s really all you have to live up to. Just being there for her, on a special day like that.”

Just being with Eri isn’t enough, and he knows it. He’s done that for years, on more failed birthdays than he can remember. With more things to offer her, more than a cake he didn’t make himself, more than apple turnovers he knows will pale in comparison. More than just being there.

But there’s something he’s never done for Eri, on all those failed birthdays. He’s never risked it enough to say it’s her birthday, to wish her well, to sing that song. And now that he knows it.

He wants nothing more than to tell Eri ‘Happy birthday,’ and know that she’s happy, and she won’t be hurt that day, or ever again. Every year, every year that she can stand it. Until she gets too old for it.

And even then, he wants to make every failed birthday count, in every way he couldn’t before. He has a cake, he can give her his undivided attention, he can sing to her with the words he knows and a mask that won’t trap his jaw shut, and he can tell her ‘Happy birthday’ for the first time, soon.

He has to stand up, to check his phone, 11:05. Yamada’s show has started, Yamada is going to wish Eri a happy birthday too, and he needs to finish these apple turnovers first before he thinks about waking her up for that.

And Eri is at least sound asleep, drooling on Todoroki. And Todoroki seems too pleased with that honestly, giving him a thumbs up for some reason. Hitoshi wants to call him an asshole for bragging, but he did walk away when Eri was sleeping perfectly sound on him, and if he wasn’t a sobby fucking idiot he could be there in Todoroki’s place.

“So, d’ya want us to help?” Ashi asks, but she’s barely asking from the way she bounces on her feet, her black sclera eyes lit up like she can’t fathom him saying no.

And he really can't, because these apple turnovers don't really matter. "Sorry, it's already done. If you want to--"

"Done fucking deal, where's that pizza cutter?" Bakugo says, and Momo looks like she's going to make one when she pulls the top part of her shirt open like that, staring down at it. As eager as they all are, jumping over the literal nothing that there is to do aside from cutting the dough and putting down the filling, it's not nearly as terrifying as when he did it on his own.

Izuku hands him a paper towel with a smile, and he cleans his face off even if he has to pull his mask down to blow his nose. He honestly breathes easier without it, but it's far easier to talk with it on.

He has to argue with them that it's really fine that they help, as long as he has one apple turnover that he prepared himself. Ashi claps when she realizes that they have enough for every student to make one, already messaging the ones who went to bed that they're missing out. Hitoshi doesn't mind, even if he has no idea if Eri could stomach eating all those apple turnovers, just to make sure none of the students can be offended, and then the cake.

Todoroki keeps staring at them, but he's pinned on the couch even as the other students come downstairs. He has to remind them not to be so loud, when they're taking to this too excitedly, especially when Kaminari suggests adding designs in the crust to be like a pie, a clever way to cheat really and see which hero student Eri likes best.

He cheats a lot, taking a knife once it's free to carve that circular cat face he taught her to draw. And it's selfish, but he hopes that she recognizes it, and eats it first.

Even Ojiro comes down, even if he's one of the last to do so. Even Ojiro says that it 'looks great,' even if Hitoshi can't bring himself to repeat his apologies. He doesn't know what to do, what this means when Ojiro left the chat but he'll still smile like that, still make an apple turnover, even if he's the quickest to leave after. But he tells himself he doesn't mind it.

He tells himself that he really should stop bullying Todoroki at this point, and take his place soon, and take Eri upstairs, but as soon as he does, the door to the stairs opens again. And it's Aizawa, who only glances at Eri before walking closer to them, the students still gathered around the island in the kitchen to fix up their apple turnovers.

And he wishes he could ignore how the air feels colder, when Bakugo stiffens and Ashi's smile seems to freeze like that. "Making apple turnovers early."

Of course Aizawa knew, but he shouldn't act so unimpressed when Hitoshi had no idea it would turn into this. And he doesn't miss the way that Ashi puts her hand over the last two squares of pastry dough on the pan, like she's guarding them.

"It was Shinsou's idea, and he really made all of this, we just filled them and all," Izuku says, and that smile seems normal, but the fact that he's still holding a knife is not. He was one of the first to decorate his apple turnover, a bunny head only different from Koda's because one ear is flopped over, so he has no reason to still hold it.

"It looks good," Aizawa says, and for some reason that unnerves most of them. Even if the tension in the air already felt thick, maybe All Might was right about Aizawa not giving praise to them so freely.

"It looks fucking great, but that doesn't excuse how you didn't go over this birthday shit with Shitsou," Bakugo says, and if he keeps pressing the edge of his turnover like that, it's probably not going to vent well. “Fucker might be fucking imprisoned here, but you couldn’t pull up eBay and walk him through buying shit for the pipsqueak’s birthday?”

Hitoshi knows that Aizawa is looking at him. Hitoshi is not looking up from the rows of apple turnovers, so he doesn’t have to see what Aizawa looks like. Uraraka’s apple turnover might be his favorite. “Something like that did happen, but I was under the impression that the apple turnovers were chosen.”

Bakugo sucks in a breath, Hitoshi knows what he’s going to say, and he doesn’t want to hear it. “I changed my mind. Sorry.”

He stares at his apple turnover like somehow staring at it will convince Eri to pick it first in the morning. One apple turnover, the cake really doesn’t count, singing and wishing her happy birthday is something that they’re all going to do. Even if it’s him, it’s not special. It’s still not a gift. “There’s something that Eri wants, but I know she won’t get from anyone else tomorrow, if you’re still undecided about what to get her.”

He can’t stop himself from looking at Aizawa now, relieved that he doesn’t seem mad at all, even if Bakugo still looks murderous as he pinches at the dough, and honestly all of them look a little on edge. Even Sato is frowning at the dishes in the sink, and Hitoshi doesn’t think they’re that offensive to him.

But Aizawa seems to know that he’s ‘undecided,’ he’s desperate for whatever he says, whatever he suggests, whatever Eri wants and will get, because he’ll get it. “Cards are very meaningful to Eri. A picture, and a note to wish her a happy birthday. It’s far more meaningful if it’s made by the person who gives it, and that’s why Eri only gives cards to people she truly cares about.”

Shock seems to still all of the students’ hands, and Izuku looks particularly weepy at that with his mouth twisting like that. Even Uraraka is pouting oddly with her bottom lip sticking out, and he really shouldn’t feel like patting her head to console her, but he does.

But, he just has to make a card, to show Eri how much he cares about her. How he feels about her.

In a way that she can keep, even when he’s not there to tell her.

“I can make a high quality cardstock,” Momo says, already opening her shirt again but her stomach growls audibly, and Bakugo waves his hand at her like that’s unnecessary.

“Put that shit away, eat a snack, I got that shit in my room,” Bakugo says, already turning to head up the stairs, but he has that fucking habit of kicking the door, and it’s too loud, and Eri’s head pops up from where she was laying on Todoroki.

But it seems like 1-A has already trained for this, Uraraka, Momo, Izuku, Sato, Shoji, and even Aizawa move in front of the island to hide the sight of the apple turnovers from her, before she starts rubbing her eyes to see clearer. Ashi seems to think that taking the pan and putting it on the ground will help, but that would just make them dirty, and Hitoshi has to grab the pan to stop her. “‘S it birthday yet?”

“Not yet, but very soon,” Aizawa says, but Eri clearly didn’t want to hear that, as she huffs and falls back onto Todoroki’s lap. And he just kind of lets her. “And Yamada has started a very special program on his show tonight, for your birthday.”

That makes Eri pop up once again, wide eyed like she had forgotten that Yamada’s show even existed until this moment. Her arms lift up, almost like she’s trying to communicate without words what Yamada's show is called, but when Todoroki stands up to pick her up under her arms, she shakes her head at him. "Twenny! Come on!"

Eri. Wants him to pick her up and carry her. Not Todoroki, not anyone else. Despite how insistent that she is that she can do things on her own, without any help at all, she still wants him for some things.

And Hitoshi can't fight the smile beneath his mask as he picks her up, pulling her over the back of the couch and steadying her legs with his arm when she leans over her shoulder to wave at the hero students. "Goodnight everyone! I hope you come to my birthday tomorrow!"

The eager cheers and reassurances that they will are almost enough to hide how they're worried about something, but as Hitoshi follows Aizawa up the stairs back to the Safe Room with Eri getting heavier and closer to sleep as she rests on his shoulder, to listen to Yamada's show, he figures it out.

They didn't make Eri a card either, and they want to fix that now.

That takes away one more thing that would have been special, would have been just from him. He wants to pull up the chat and threaten them into not doing it, but that's just taking another thing from Eri on her birthday, to keep them from showing her what she means to them.

He just needs to make sure that his card has his own feelings, that will make it different enough from theirs. He can hope that still makes it special enough, that Eri still has a good birthday with him contributing to some small part of it.

As soon as Aizawa opens the door, Hitoshi recognizes the song. It's from Sailor Moon, of course, but he doesn't doubt that there will be Baby Shark mixed in, and anything else that Yamada thinks Eri will like. Her own personal playlist, that he's just happening to play for all of Japan.

But it's enough to wake Eri up a bit more, it seems, when she rises up to grab his face, her small hands pressed against his mask again, and while he knows it's a different mask, the padding isn't enough to keep him from tugging it down, to feel her warm hands on his bare skin. "Twenny! You gotta sing with your hands! It's Sailor Moon's song!"

Honestly, 'singing with his hands' is much easier than trying to actually sing with Aizawa still in the room. But he doesn't hate that Aizawa joins in too, to sign along and keep Eri awake for every song Yamada plays, how Eri tries to copy along with her back pressed against his chest, the big eyed cat plushie Monoma gave him on her lap. It was kind of his.

But she can have it, for now at least.

Hitoshi almost misses visiting the radio station for a moment, wondering how much Byte Sound had to hate the music that Yamada was playing. But when he hears the intro for Yamada to speak instead of playing music, he checks the time and knows what he's going to say. "Hellooooo listeners! It's getting closer and closer to that magical hour, the minute hand just keeps winding closer to that midnight-moment when it's someone's special birthday! Wait, is Midnight okay with that name drop? Can she even copyright that? Anyway! If you haven't noticed or if you're just tuning in, there is a very special little listener who's turning a very big six years old, and it HURTS not to be there to tell her in person, but I'm pretty sure I saw this in a movie. So what I'm asking my listeners to do right now, is to wait until that midnight strikes, and yell out 'Happy birthday' for me, so this little be-YEA-est listener can hear it! Clear your throats, take a sip, cover your ears, because in three, two, one-"

“HAPPY BIRTHDAY!”

Hitoshi's voice is drowned out, but he's the only one close enough for Eri to cling to when she jolts. It's not so much that they can hear the entire country wishing Eri happy birthday all at once, but the door swung open to the Safe Room with 1-A gathered in the hallway. Aizawa said it too, but he also raises his phone, with the Big Three on the screen, still cheering. Aizawa must have planned the call at least.

But even if Eri seems shocked at first, that melts soon enough when she recognizes what happened, her hands unclenching from his shirt to lift her arms over her head. “Happy birthday! Thank you! But now it's time for sleep!”

Some of the hero students have to hide their laughter behind their hands, and Aizawa looks like he's struggling not to do the same. “It is past time for sleep, and the excitement can wait until tomorrow.”

“Good night Eri!” Mirio says with a wave, and Eri spares a wave and goodnight to him too before she decides it's time to sleep now, pulling herself to her side of the cot to flop onto it, the cat plushie still in her arms.

Hitoshi sees that Tokoyami puts a bag right inside the room, right by the door, and Bakugo nods at him to make it clear that the things that Bakugo said he would get him are inside it too. Along with the curse dolls.

But the hero students whispering to themselves with fits of laughter as they go back to their rooms is cut off when Aizawa closes the door again, picking up the bag just to set it closer to the cot. Eri whines, reaching behind herself to tug at his arms, and she is getting a little demanding.

But she deserves it.

Hitoshi lays down next to her, plucking her tiara from her head to set it aside, his arm underneath her pillow so that it's easier to slip out from her. Eri seems too exhausted to move, sated by knowing that he's laying down next to her, and Hitoshi has to fight sleep himself as he counts her breaths, finally evening out into deeper sleep.

He's counted her breaths too many times when he couldn't sleep, and as he slowly pries himself away, he's grateful that he's used to going without. He doesn't want to move away from the cot, but he sits on the end close to the bathroom to be closest to the best source of light, pulling the bag across the floor with his toe. He sees bundles of straw, even that strange iron candle holder that's part of the ritual for making curses, but he pulls out the sketchbook and box of colored pencils to get to his most important task.

Not that the curse dolls aren't worth investigating, especially with Eri's gift bags already prepared to go to the right students.

Aizawa doesn't say anything, and he doesn't turn off Yamada's show either. He just turns the volume down so that it's barely audible, while Hitoshi turns the black pencil in his hands, trying to figure out what he wants it to look like. A card that says everything, everything that Eri means to him.

He tries to draw her from memory at first, but everything looks wrong, it would probably look better if he just drew circles and lines like Eri does. He even leans over as far as he can to look at her face from this angle, and it doesn't turn out much better. Eyes should not be this difficult, and it's hard to draw her nose without making it look like she has a huge one.

But Eri is more than just what she looks like. In as many ways that she's changed since coming to UA, there are ways she's grown brighter but hasn't abandoned. Things that he promised her that did come true, in ways he didn't expect them to.

He folds the card each time, so that it looks like the one Eri made for Aizawa's birthday. A note on the front just to wish her a happy birthday, a picture on half of the inside and a note to face it.

He makes about ten cards that look like trash, Aizawa continues looking at him in intervals like he wants to ask, and Hitoshi understands why Eri was so guarded about making her own card until it was done, because Aizawa seeing what he's doing seems like the worst thing that could possibly happen at this point.

Hitoshi's hand aches, and he has to rub his eyes, grateful that he hasn't made any mistakes on this one yet. He checks the time, knowing that's probably a reason Aizawa keeps looking at him, probably wanting to remind him that it's time to sleep.

It's 2:38, December 21st. He looks at the calendar app on his phone, not that he's used it often. Not that he's needed to use it before. But he catches Aizawa turning his head to look over at him at the right time to sign to him. 'When do hero students end school year?'

Aizawa glances up at the ceiling, like he struggles to remember it, before unfolding his arms to sign back. 'March 15. Why?'

Hitoshi just shrugs, but finds that date on his calendar, marking it. The day that the hero students leave this dorm to move into the 2-A dorm, the day that Mirio, Tama, and Neji graduate.

A little more than three months from now, maybe it's wishful thinking. Maybe it's stupid, to hope that he has that long.

But if he has two months after the investigation ends, he wants the day of the raid to fall on January 15th. He wants to see Mirio, Tama, and Neji graduate, he wants to see the hero students pack up their things excitedly, too busy to notice that he's packing too. It hurts to think of what he'd have to pack away, what he would be allowed to take, so he doesn't let himself do that.

He looks back at the card, then to the pencils, trying to find the right shade of green.

And he convinces himself, at least for the moment, that even when he has to leave UA behind, he won't have to say goodbye to Eri.

Chapter End Notes

The meme that Kaminari sent to Shinsou can be found here:
<https://nylazor.tumblr.com/post/618660349105799170/thatsbelievable>

1-A Groupchat Usernames:

Meemstar - Kaminari Denki
Sugarlicious Def - Sato Rikido
The Best Boi Don't TOUCH Him - Kouda Koji
Saltiest Saltine - Sero Hanta
Redeemed by fluffy tail - Ojiro Mashirao

This One Does Not Spark Joy - Bakugo Katsuki
Fergie Queen - Ashido Mina
Sus Squid - Shoji Mezo
Eri Pics ONLY - Uraraka Ochako
French SUS - Aoyama Yuga
Goodnight Sweet Bro - Kirishima Eijirou
My Hero - Midoriya Izuku
Fiiiiine Boi - Todoroki Shoto
Present Mic's Fakest Hater - Jirou Kyouka
Would sell u to satan for apple chips - Tokoyami Fumikage

End Notes

Find me on Tumblr!: <https://www.tumblr.com/blog/19catsncounting>

Music Recommendations based on The Wards of UA:

The Author's \(very messy\) writing playlist
arosriddle's song recommendation
draconicshinx's playlist
Please Help Me Im Obsessed's song recommendation
Swamp's song recommendation
That One Mimic's song recommendation
yeehaw's song recommendation
It's Catie My Dudes song recommendation
Petco's song recommendation for Eri and Shinsou
maeofthedeath's song recommendation
Petco's song recommendation
Piwacy's song recommendation for Shinsou Ui
Lightning107's playlist for Wards of UA

Fanart Inspired by The Wards of UA:

Please Help Me Im Obsessed's Fanart of Chapter 11
Makeshift-Moth's Fanart of Chapter 35
Swamp-Spirit's Fanart
shadowsnowdapple's Fanart of Shinsou and Eri
Dankatt's Fanart of 50 at the beach
Katmar's Fanart of Shinsou

I made a Discord! I don't know how and I'm really bad at it, but it's here! UA's Ventilation System

Works inspired by this ~~one~~ Red eyes and Bleached Hair by Lemon_may, Shut_up_im_Lucky

Please drop by the archive and comment to let the author know if you enjoyed their work!